As I have seen a good many letters from different ones I thought I would write a few lines in regard to our candidates.

I have met a good many of the candidats for the last few days and they all have a good appearance and all seem to be in unity, but it is impossible for all of them to get an office for it would run our taxes too high.

They all say if they get defeated they will still stand by the nominee, and as I, a voter, will do that, except that it be for a man that villifies his opponent.

We have almost enough candidates of the true and tried to fill our offices. Mr. L. H. Reynolds has served us faithfully for many years, Prof. Moore for about 18 years and he has been true and honest in his position, Uncle Tommie Hubbard has served us faithfully and honestly for 13 years and if he is the choice of the people I have no doubt but that he will do the same again, Mr. Dudley Collins has served us faithfully for 4 years and Mr. J. N. Dennis has served us honestly and faithfully for a number of years, so let each and every voter of the county vote for their choice, for united we stand and divided we fall, this was tried six years ago and we are now experiencing the fruits of it.

As we have so many candidats and all seem to be good nice men lets all try and not say anything against any of them, and let the ballots decide it.

I'm peace and harmony and good wishes to all.

G. W. HODGENS.

MR. MADDOX RETIRES FROM EDUCATIONAL RACE

Clanton, Ala., May 1, 1916.
To the people of Chilton County:

After due consideration of everything, I have decided to withdraw my name from the ticket as a candidate for membership on the Educational Board of Chilton County.

This action is taken with no intentions of disloyalty to the party and the ticket. I have reached the conclusion that I would be better satisfied to withdraw, and I wish to assure everyone that I shall at the same time remain as ever before a loyal supporter of the party of the people in the county, and an advocate of the cause it endeavors to serve.

I wish to thank all my friends for the interest they have shown in my candidacy, and wish to commend to their consideration the good and loyal men who are still in the race for the nomination.

Let me urge all to go to the primary on the 9th and cast your vote for the good of the common people.

Yours truly,
J. A. MADDOX.

VIEWS OF MR. BILLINGSLEY ON EDUCATIONAL BOARD

Thorsby, Ala., April 25, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

May I ask for admittance in your valuable paper for a few lines in regard to the School Board. Being a member of the present Board for four years, I feel it unnecessary for me to go into a lot of sayings telling the people what I propose to do if I am elected on the Board. Knowing that my record is before the people for inspection, so I cordially invite the voters to investigate.

May I state in the outset relative to the new School Law: First, I do not favor the Law because it clothes the Board with too much authority, taking the rights from the people. I don't think this Board of men, let it be who it may, should confine themselves down strictly to the New Law, but give the people a chance to say who they want for teacher for their district, and give every district some trustees to look after their schools. It should be the height of our ambition to war against vice in all of its forms and seek to improve and elevate the mind and character of the child and teach him the capabilities for good, to enlighten his mind and to enlarge the field of his affections. These are sobering days in which we live. Its an hour of deep thinking and the testing time has come to get busy and improve our school and educate our children.

One of the most difficult tasks is to keep an open mind and yet be firm in our convictions to that which is right. We should not raise ourselves on a platform that is above our people to the extent that we think our views are right in every respect, but hold an open mind for conviction. We still need to learn the lesson "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

May I say in conclusion this: I do not agree with the new School Law to say who shall be our Superintendent. I think this is too much for five men to say. I do not favor donating money to high schools and let the rural schools go for the lack of money to have a good school. My policy is help the child that can't help himself.

I have not pledged myself to any one, the only pledge I have is to do the very best for the improvement of education and to serve the people if I am elected.

Now to the voters of the county: If you think I am worthy for one of the members of the Board, I will appreciate your vote and influence, and if elected will strive to do the very best for the improvement of our schools and to meet the wishes of the people.

Yours respectfully,
Wm. J. BILLINGSLEY.

MR. DENNIS MAKES LAST APPEAL TO VOTERS

Clanton, Ala., May 4, 1916.
To the voters of Chilton County,
Gentlemen:

Allow me to take this means of expressing to you my appreciation of your support in the past and to ask that in the selection of a tax assessor for the next four years, that you go to the polls on May the 9th, and vote for the one that you honestly believe will make the best tax assessor and I assure you that your choice will have my loyal support in the November election.

However, if during the present term I have conducted the office which you helped to give me, in such a way as to meet your approval and to merit your support, and if with my experience of three years in the tax assessor's office and after further considering the radical changes and grave complications added by the last Democratic Legislature to the assessor's office, if you believe that it would be to the interest of the tax payers to have a man in the assessor's office with experience as well as ability, I assure you that your support will be highly appreciated .

On account of the extra work added to the assessor's office by the last Legislature it has been impossible for me to see all the voters, but I hope you will not feel that I intentionally slighted any body.

I again wish to appeal to the voter to go to the polls and vote for an entire ticket that you believe will be entirely equal to cope with the duties of the respective offices and that can and will make efficient officers.

I again beg to assure you that if you think me worthy and capable, and that if you think my experience in tax matters will materially aid me in filling the hardest and most complicated office in the county and in lessening the mistakes usually occuring in assesments and in making the proper entry of all assesments, then your valued support and influence will be highly appreciated.

Yours very truly,
J. N. DENNIS.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST TO MR. A. P. VINSON

Clanton, Ala., May 1, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Will you allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words in regard to the candidacy of Mr. A. P. Vinson, who is in the race for Commissioner from the fourth district. What I want to say is to the Progressive-Republicans of Chilton county. I have known Mr. Vinson since I was large enough to know anyone and have lived a neighbor to him for eight years, I think he is fully qualified for the office he seeks.

As one of the writers said in last week's paper, this is no time for experiments. We should put into office those who have been tried and found true, so long as they last, then select the best of those who have not been tried. I do not think the voters of the county could select a better or more competent man than Mr. Vinson. He has made a success in his own business at home on his farm, and we believe he would make us a successful and economical commissioner.

Ninety-nine per cent of the people in his community endorse him and we want you to consider his past politics, truthfulness, honesty and general qualifications. And then on election day go to the polls and cast your vote for who you think to be the best for the place.

Now in conclusion, I have not been hired to write this nor neither have I hade it dictated to me by any one, but have written because I feel that it is a duty I owe to the county, Mr. Vinson and myself.

I will close wishing the Union-Banner much success,

Respectfully,
O. L. DEVAUGHN.

MIDWAY

The opening of the season at Midway was well attended Saturday. About two thousand people visited Midway during the day.

The political speaking was postponed on account of Mr. Reynolds being called to Birmingham on some important business.

Miss Gladys Parrish of Marbury won the box of chocolate candy which was given to the best looking girl present. There were twenty girls in the contest.

As the primary is now almost at hand, and this will be the last issue of The Union-Banner we will see until after the primary, I take this method of stating a few things relative to my aspirations for wishing to become one of your commissioners.

To begin with I must say that I am well pleased with the manner in which our campaign has been conducted. It seems that it has been carried on without a single jar.

In the race for commissioner from the Fourth District I have six opponents all of whom seem to be nice men and if you select one of them instead of myself I will do all I can to elect him.

I do not wish to be mis-understood as to what I stand for and what induced me to get into the race, hence my reason for again mentioning my position.

I am in favor of good roads but do not favor going in debt for them. Pay as you go shall be my plan. I am also greatly in favor of better schools throughout the country, under the same plan as heretofore mentioned.

If you nominate me I will surely be elected, and I will assure you now that I will not have any cause to regret having supported me.

I have not visited over the county very much for two reasons, one is I have been very busy at work, the other reason is I felt sure the most of the voters were also busy and I did not wish to detain them from their work.

Trust that this explanation will suffice.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
CHAS. COOPER.

LETTER FROM S. M. PATE TO VOTERS OF CONUTY

Thorsby, Ala., April 25, 1916

Editor Union:Banner:

Will you allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words to the voters of Chilton county.

No doubt many of you have noticed my announcement in the paper for Tax Assesor of Chilton county, subject to the action of the Progressive primary to be held on the 9th day of May 1916. I believe that I am fully competent to fill the office which I am asking for. I have always stood by the people that compose the Progressive party of to day. I will say that if I am elected to this office I will treat every man like I would like to be treated, I further believe that a man should be a servant of the people and not a boss. In the tax matters the law says what an Assessor shall do and what he shall not do.

It will be impossible for me to see every voter in the county and have a personal talk with you, but will say that I am not in favor of these high taxes, neither am I in favor of the county's money being spent like it has been in the past. I want every man to consider me and if you think that I am as good a man for the place as my opponent, Mr. Dennis, I would appreciate your vote as much as any man in the race, but if you think Mr. Dennis is the proper man for the place vote for him, but I will say that if elected to this office I will discharge the duties of the office as best I can and will show you any favors I can in regard to tax matters.

Now if you see fit to vote for me or speak a good word to one of your friends in behalf of me I will appreciate it very much.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,
S. M. PATE.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Gaines of Brent and Mr. and Mrs. Erby Bruce of Montgomery were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Bruce last week.

E. L. Cobb of Jemison was in Clanton Wednesday.

AND HERE COMES J. N. SCOTT ONCE MORE

Jemison, Ala., April 24, 1916.

Editor Union-Banner:

Here I come asking for another space in our paper to say I read and see such funny things, that I have to say something about them. I see that Mr. Mullins states that he was rocked in a Democratic cradle. It seems to me that all the Democrats were rocked in a cradle when they were a baby as they still want to be rocked and sailed through life on flowery beds of ease any way they are not capable enough to handle other peoples affairs. Just look around and see the evidence, a bankrupt state and county, four banks out of five in the county recently closed. This doesn't look like prosperity to me.

Well, Mr. Mullins, you have a great thing to boast of. I was not so fortunate as you; I never was rocked in any cradle at all but lay on a pallet in the corner of a fence in the shade of some tree and cried and fought the ----ants to keep them from eating me up while my mother worked to make me bread. I came up through great tribulation and know how to sympathyse with those who are burdened, and I believe the majority of the Progressives and Republicans of the South have come up in this way. They seem not to be afraid of perseverance and hard strife.

It is funny that when you give some people a chance to make something of themselves and be somebody they will go back on you. Just look at Mr. R. J. Williams. He jumped on Judge Reynolds and The Unoin-Banner for opposing his policy. Well, if Judge Reynolds would do as Mr. Williams has done he would not be fit for Judge of Probate. I think Mr. William's letter one of the strongest endorsements Judge Reynolds could have. The fact that Mr. Williams does not want him for Judge of Probate is clear that he will not do as Williams has done, run square over the will of the people. How many votes do you think you would have received Mr. Williams if you would have told the people when you were seeking the office, that you were going to help put this county $250,000.-00 in debt? You speak desperately of politicians now, but how did politicans seem to you when you were a candidate and they were making speeches for you saying that you were an honest man and would stand by the people? You ought not to get mad now with those that helped to elect you because you have gone back on the people. You could not get 50 votes in the county again for any kind of office. It is strange to me that when a man does something in politics that kills him politically that he feels so mean and tries to kill all the good men that helped him when no body was to blame but himself.

Now, Mr. Williams, the Democrats have bragged on you while you were doing their bidding but now they do not know you, and not a single word of endorsement will you ever again get from the Clanton Press, as they are through with you. Now I know you feel bad and will be glad to pass your troubles on to someone else, but you have no one to blame except yourself. The greatest kickers we have in this county are men whom we have put on a feather bed and they allowed the Democrats to beat them out of it, just like you have done.

So you have made your bed hard Mr. Williams, but lay on it like a man and don't blame the men that gave you support and a square deal.

People I am here to tell you when any official betrays public confidence and goes against the wishes of the majority of the people, I am done with him politically. If I should offer myself for an office and should be elected and then turn against the wishes of the people, I would expect the people to be done with me.

Respectfully,
J. N. SCOTT.

CHILTON COUNTY COURT SENTENCES

The regular may term of County Court was held Monday, Judge E. B. Deason presiding and Hon. Victor J. Heard, Solicitor for State. Wallace Carpenter, for resisting an officer, was fined $50 and costs; Brady Mitchell, for Sunday gaming, was fined $20 and costs; J. W. Lockhart, for assault and battery, demanded jury trial.

FINAL WORDS FROM MR. JOHN S. DENNIS

Editor Union-Banner:

Let me say a few words through this paper to the voters of this county. Boys, the time is close at hand for you to say who is your choice in the primary. Boys, look well before you cast your vote and see if you can get someone that will stand for the rights of the laboring class of people, if you can't we are gone.

I have not had time to see everyone of you, but if you think I am the man for the place, I will thank you and I will assure you that I will stand for the rights of the people if I live, and contend for your rights. If I am not your choice, your choice will be mine in November. I stand with the people. If I am nominated I will do all I can to get through in November. If you see it would be better to nominate someone else I will do all in my power to elect him. So I will say do what you think best and I will be satisfied.

Yours Respectfully,
JOHN S. DENNIS.

WHAT CAN YOU DO FOR CATARRH?

Ask Yourself the question. How often has the doctor failed, as have ointments, salves, vapours? What you should do.

The easy, common-sense method—that costs so little—that is so quickly and vigorously effective—is often the last resort of many Catarrh sufferers. Why, it is hard to say. One of the specialists of the Swift Specific Company in Atlanta—a physician of standing and national reputation because of his knowledge of blood disorders, made the assertion that if the majority of Catarrh sufferers would buy and faithfully take S. S. S., they could effectually get rid of Catarrh.

S. S. S. goes straight to the seat of trouble, the blood. It spreads its influence over every organ in the body, comes through the veins and arteries, enables the mucous surfaces to exchange acids and irritating substances for red blood corpuscles that effectually cleanse the system and thus put an end to all Catarrhal poison. S. S. S. cleans out the stomach of mucous accumulations, enables only pure, blood-making materials to enter the intestines, combines with these food elements to enter the circulation, and in less than an hour is at work throughout the body in process of purification.

S. S. S. is made from barks, roots and herbs that are food and tonic for the blood. It stimulates—gives the blood power to throw off poisons. You will soon realize its wonderful influence by the absence of headache, a clearing of the air passages, a steadily improved nasal condition, and a sense of bodily relief that proves how completely Catarrh often infests the entire system.

You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. It is a remarkable remedy for all blood affections, such as Eczema, Rash, Lupus, Tetter, Psoriasis, Boils, and all other diseased conditions of the blood. For special advice on any blood disease write The Swift Specific Company, Medical Department, Room 11, Atlanta, Ga. Avoid substitutes.

C. REESE MULLINS MAKES LAST APPEAL TO VOTERS

Clanton, Ala., May 1, 1916.

As the primary election will come off before another issue of your paper, I will appreciate it very much if you will give me a small space in this issue. First, I want to say that I have now been in and heard from all parts of the county since I announced for Judge of Probate, and now feel fully confident of the nomination on May 9th, and I want to say that if I am nominated I can and will make every reasonable effort to win out in November. I feel as I stated in my former letter that I am entitled to the nomination and that I am going to get it.

I feel that I am just in the prime of my life having just reached the age of forty-four years, and I would like to give the next six years, which I feel will be the most useful years of my life , to my native county, Chilton. My heart is in this movement and I only want a chance to show the people of the county what I can and will do if elected. I am bitterly opposed to extravagance in any way, but I stand for good roads and better schools. The rising generation should be educated. I am in favor and expect to petition the Commissioners court for four scholarships to be given to our county high school of at leat $50.00 each. One from each of the four districts of the county, to the boy or girl standing the best examination before the County Board of Education on the seventh grade, not including Beat 4, which surrounds Clanton, as the boys and girls in this beat have fairly good access to the school. I feel like the county should do this much for the boys and girls in the rural districts, who are trying to do something for themselves, and for the stimulation of education, which will build our county up as well as will good roads.

There are many other things I would like to mention, but I shall not take up any more of your time and space for this time. In conclusion I would like to call the attention of the people to the question of voting, as some may be a little confused on this point. There is nothing complicated about voting, but in some cases you have to vote for two, this is in thecase of Circuit Judges, as there are two to be elected and in the case of Judges of the Appeal Court you have to vote for three, as there are three to be elected, but when you come down to the county officers, you simply vote for the one of your first choice and a second choice if you choose, where more than one is running for any one office, but of course where there is only one running you will have no second choice.

If you are a Progressive and have a special friend on the Democratic ticket, you can take a Democratic ticket and vote just for one friend and no more, and on the other hand the same way. So I hope with this explanation all will be able to fully undertand and vote for the man of their choice. Fro the benefit of the young man who has become of age this year, or will become of age before the general election in November, I will say you can vote provided you registered in the prescribed time, from November 15, 1915, to January 6, 1916.

I have been a life time Democrat and will be until I die. I feel sure that I am going to be the Democratic nominee when the vote is declared after the primary election on May 9, and expect to put up the best Democratic fight that has ever been pulled off in Chilton county, and I solicit your vote in the primary and full cooperation in November, which I will give to either one of my opponents if nominated.

Respectfully,
C. REESE MULLINS.

IN MEMORY

On the 29 of April the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Thomas and took from them their dear old mother, wife of George Thomas. She was about 83 years old. She leaves six children five boys and one girl. She was laid to rest at the Aldridge cemetery. Brother Willie Robinson conducted the funeral sevices making an excellent talk, giving them the hope that they would meet their precious mother beyond this vale of tears.

We know that we can say or do nothing that will ease your achin hearts or fill the vacant place in that home. We can only ask God's richest blessings to rest upon you and help you to hold out faithful unto the end, and then you will know why it was that God said come home sweet mother, you have suffered enough.

Oh, that you could only see her as she praises God and her sweet smiles, for Jesus has said such is the kingdom of Heaven.

She cannot come back to you, but you can go to her. May God help you to bear your troubles and prepare to meet her in Heaven.

One who loved her,
DAISY THOMAS.

C. REESE MULLINS WRITES MR. NEWT MARTIN

Clanton, Ala., May 1, 1916.

Mr. Newt Martin,
Jemison, Ala.

My Dear Sir and Friend:

You will remember meeting me one day last week at Mr. John Lowery's home about three miles east of Jemison, with Mr. Wilson Robinson in the buggy with you, and during our conversation you will remember that you accused the Democrats of having bought and deeded to Jim Grant, forty (40) acres of land in order to make him eligibleto serve on the equalization board to raise the peoples taxes of Chilton county.

You will also remember that I told you that I thought you were mistaken and that I would investigate the matter and furnish you with the facts in the case, as to the extent of Mr. Grants real estate holdings in the county, and from whom purchased. So I have made this investigation, and I do not find anywhere on the records that Mr. Grant owns any land at all in Chilton county. Mr. Grant is a good friend of mine, but I did not give or help to give him any land. I suppose if you will take the matter up with him, he will give you the desired information.

Your friend,
C. REESE MULLINS.

MR. B. E. COLLUM HAS SOME GOOD WORDS

Jemison, Ala., May 1, 1916.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please give me space in your paper to ask a few questions and to say a few words in regard to the times of to day. I, as many fellow citizens, are to the point where we cannot move under the strain of conditions as they are to day. Now you may think by reading this little article I want to get an office, but I do not. I am 48 years old and feel like I am over half down the hill, and I am sorry to say we are, in my opinion, traveling the ruggedest road we have ever traveled.

Now my friends, both Republican and Democrat, I want each of you to look at you own condition and see where you are and see how near all your privileges are taken away from you, and who did it. You and I may get over, but what will become of our children? The taxes get higher each year and nothing to show for it. Are you satisfied with such conditions? I feel sure you are not. Some one says well who can we get that will give us justice? First do not elect men to office who will make laws that takes the rights from us, Republican or Democrat. Are you satisfied for three men with just the same knowledge that you or I have to say what our property is worth? Are you willing for five men to say who shall control our school matters? Now my dear friends, regardless of the name of a mans politics, lets elect men to office who will not pass such laws as this that takes away our rights and in the future makes slaves of our children. At this time, according to what others think, we are not competent of looking after our own business in a way to suit the other fellow.

I want to say that the name of a mans politics have nothing to do with his downfall or his upbuilding, its his platform which he endorses.

Now boys, when the day comes lets go out to the polls and cast an honest vote; one that will help take care of our rights and the rights of others.

Oh! by the way just here our friend Pounds may get a nibble, but if he catches any thing it will be a sucker. I notice a few days ago he said the Democrats would endorse a yellow dog and the Republicans as well, so you see in some ways we must all be the same breed of dogs. When I read such letters as his and Brother Adams it makes me think of the scripture where it says "The foxes have holes and the fowls of the air have nests, but the son of some men hath not a place to lay their heads."

Boys lets get in connection with our other officers, a set of Commissioners who thinks of the poor old tax payer who earns his money by the sweat of his brow tho he may live ten miles from the railroad or highway, and who are not able to buy an auto. We should appreciate good roads and good schools, but we should be careful as to how we build them. County, State and national treasurys are as dry as a pounder house, some are issuing bonds to run on, others are taxing us, a so called war tax, and the United States in peace. Can you account for this? Yes when the tariff is taken off of so many things, as our Democrat friends do when they get in power, it drains the United States Treasury dry of money, then they are compeled to put on an extra tax to operate on, and then and there it gives other nations the right to manufacture their goods under low labor, as they have, and ship them into the United States free. And it shuts down all of our industries. Some fellow says just look at everything in full blast. Yes it is a fact the factories and machine shops and other plants that can manufacture any thing for the war is running, but boys let me tell you if it were not for the demands of that war the United States would be in the worst shape of her history. Then we come to the State with all her high taxes, and under its present management about half the time the cry is no money. My fellow citizen where is it and who should account for its shortage? You say there is graft some where. Who is it?

Look at our own county's condition. Do you know where it is with high taxes? Yes you know as well as I what goes with lots of our county's money, or the tax payers money. Now my friends can we as a common sensed people approve of such things? I say no, lets be honest in this matter as the time is at our door when something must be done, you know this as well as I do.

We people here in Jemison asked for the highway to come through here but Judge Deason said our streets were too narrow, so you see he is a man that wants roads wide so we can get through with our autos. Our county officers have not only opened a highway through the county but they have opened the treasury as well.

Now my friends I am not writing this to hurt any one, from the facts you know that it is so.

Some fellow says boys I tell you one thing that if Colonel Roosevelt is nominated I will not vote for him. Why, because he split our party. Another class says I will not either for he would have us in war in a few days. Another class says I will not vote for him because he is one of them fellows in the North where the whites and blacks attend the same schools. I tell you boys I had rather be where I coula see a negro sometimes that to face starvation. Now lets lay all such stuff as this in the trash pile and vote prosperity.

In regard to this second choice voting is, in my opinion, gotten up to defeat some good man. Pick out the man of your choice and vote for him, as I am sure our people know who they want. Some of our Democrats here say they are going to elect Prof. Moore, for they say that if they can get Moore nominated they can beat him in November, so lets be honest in this matter and vote for the good of our country.

With best wishes to our entire Nation, I am yours for prosperity.

B. E. COLLUM.

THINGS BEGAN TO LOOK GLOOMY TO HIM

Hard Working Man Had Family to Support And Bad Health Made It Hard On Him

"I wouldn't give one bottle of Tanlac for all the other medicine you could haul in a two horse wagon," writes J. Thomas Hand of Rockford, Alabama., in a letter addressed to Mr. G. F. Willis, Southern Distributer of Tanlac, whose offices are in the Fourth National Bank Building, Atlanta.

The letter is a most interesting one and rings with ginuine sincerity. Among other things, Mr. Hand said he was a poor man with a family to care for and raise, and that he had to work hard for a living; that continued ill health made it hard for him, and that things beban to look gloomy. He also states that he had spent a lot of money for medicines of different kinds and sought the best medical advice, but failed to get relief. His complete letter follows, word for word, just as it was written.

Rockford, Ala., March 29, 1916.

Dear Sir:— It is with pleasure that I can testify to the true value of Tanlac. I have been in very bad health for the last four years with chronic indigestion and something like ulcers of the stomach. I had a hurting in my stomach and chest and left side so bad that I thought every hour would be the last of me. I couldn't eat anything without it almost killing me.

I am apoor man and have a family to care for and raise. I have to work hard for a living and the time began to look gloomy for me. I have spent a lot for medicinefrom three of the best doctors, and failed to get any relief. I also took every kind of patent medicine that I thought would do me any good, and failed to get any relief, and finally a friend handed me a paper, and I read in it about Tanlac and how people had received so much good from the use of it, so I went and bought me a botle and it hope me so much and there was such a change in me I have bought the second bottle.

I wouldn't give one bottle for all the other medicine you could haul in a two horse wagon. That's how well I like Tanlac, and I can safely recommend it to all that has any form of stomach trouble.

Yours very truly,
James Thomas Hand.

I have learned to think well of Mr. Miller, and he is one of our home raised boys and I can't help but to feel a deep interest in him. While I say this I haven't any thing to say against any one that is in the race.

The results of the Progressive-Republican primary in Chilton county Tuesday have been officially declared and the outcome is indeed most elating.

All the candidates received handsome votes, and all in all, the comparison with the results of the Democratic voting shows almost exactly two to one in favor of the Progressive and Republicans.

This is very incouraging, as it bears out our repeated contentions that the people are overwhelmingly dissatisfied with the rule of the Democratic party, and are eager and ready to declare themselves openly at the ballot box.

This result shows that the argument that we have been making has not been passed by lightly in the minds of the voters, but has been given the just and serious consideration which it most surely deserves.

Our people are to be congratulated on the splendid turn-out they made.

FOR PROBATE JUDGE

Judge Reynolds is the nominee of the Progressives and Republicans by a great majority. His total vote was 1073 in the county, and that of his opponent, Mr. Moore, was 261. Judge Reynolds received 170 more votes than the combined vote of all his opponents, both Democrats and Republicans in the race for Probate Judge.

For Circuit Clerk

M. D. Foshee was unopposed for reelection, and his total vote was 1236, a very handsome showing. His vote is compared with 624, the number the Democratic candidate received.

For Tax Assessor

The most lively and closest race in the Republican primary was that between Mr. Dennis and Mr. Pate. Mr. Dennis,candidate for reelection, received 667 votes, and Mr. Pate received 643, giving Mr. Dennis the nomination by the small margin of 24.

For Tax Collector

Mr. J. D. Collins, candidate for reelection, had a walk-over with his two opponents, Messrs. Miller and Culp. Collins received 1208, Miller 70 and Culp 36.

Commissioner 3rd District

Mr. Herrod, the present encumbent, and candidate for re-election, was nominated over Mr. Apperson and Mr. Stanford. Herrod received 599, Apperson 547 and Stanford 93.

Commissioner 4th District

Here was another lively race, with seven god men bidding for the place. Mr. A. P. Vinson was nominated by a good majority. He received 457 votes, follwed second by J. T. Rockett with 404. T. G. Wyatt was third with 155. Chas Cooper received 30, J. S. Dennis 122, J. B. Farley 36, T. G. Taylor 99.

Educational Board

Nine candidates were in the race for membership on the educational board. The five nominees were W. J. Billingsley, 836, T. J. Dorminey, 896, J. M. Mims 804, J. E. Littlejohn 771 and L. A. Calloway 687. Billingsley, Dorminey and Calloway are present members of the board.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES GAVE FREE DINNER

The successful candidates on the Progressive ticket opened up their hearts Thursday and treated the members of the Progressive Executive Committee and some other friends to a free dinner at Marcus Cafe.

About fifty men enjoyed the hospitality of the generous candidates.

COUNTING THE VOTE

Elsewhere in this paper you will find the tabulated statement of the vote as made by this official count.

NIP THE BOLL WEEVIL IN THE BUD

The boll weevil will begin to appear on the small cotton plants in South Alabama about the middle of May and in North Alabama about the first of June. From early morning until the hot part of the day, the weevil will be found sitting on the bud of the plants. Occasionally the bud is injured or the leaf punctured, turning black resembling frost bite. This is a sign that the weevil is either on the plant or has left it and is on another plant near by. This is the time to annihilate the weevils by picking them from the buds of the plants and destroying them while the plants are small affording no hiding places, while the weevils are fewer in number, no squares are present to be infected and the work can be done at least cost. This is called an ounce of preventative and the psychological moment to accomplish the greatest amount of good with the least labor and cost.

While chopping cotton labor should be instructed to watch carefully the buds of the plants and destroy any weevils they may find. Children or even grown people may be employed to go over the fields, row at a time, looking straight at the bud of every plant and a small preimum may be offered for the capture of the weevils by the hundred. This should be done when the cotton has about four to six leaves. For every weevil destroyed you save a hundred or more squares and in the long run probably thousands of squares are saved that this one weevil or her increase would have destroyed. This weevil picking should be done at a cost of about twenty-five cents per acre if done at the right time.

When the first blooms begin to appear the few weevils you fail to find at the time you picked weevils will have infested a few squares that turn yellow and fall to the ground in pots here and there. These squares contain larvae and will hatch out weevils. To pick up and burn this first small crop of fallen squares will cost from 25c to 50c per acre if done at the proper time, but saves the entire crop. It puts the weevils so nearly out of business that it will take until the middle of August for them to multiply in sufficient numbers to do much damage, by which time a good crop will be safely in boll. The cost of picking the weevil and picking up the first crop of fallen squares need not exceed 70c per acre, if done at the proper time. Shallow frequent cultivation should be extended until the middle of August.

The careless farmer who fails to take advantage of these simple inexpensive suggestions at the proper time, but waits until his cotton is knee high and full of weevils before he begins to fight will have the fight of his life and get whipped after all.

Remember to nip the weevil in the bud before the squares come, pick up and burn the first fallen squares just as the cotton begins blooming, keep up shallow frequent cultivation extended late into the season and the victory is yours at a small cost.

Write Dr. W. E. Hinds of Auburn, Alabama, for futher information about the boll weevil.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Educational Matters Discussed by Mr. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education.

In a recent speech Hon. O. P. Ford, President of the Farmers' Union of Alabama, made the following remarks relative to scientific agricultural training.

"According to the census of 1910, there were 12,659,203 persons in the United States, both male and female, engaged in agriculture; and according to the most probable estimate less than one percent of these have had adequate preperation for farming. In other words, there are twelve millions of people engaged in agriculture in this country who are not trained to deal with the soil in such a way as to make it produce through scientific methods what it should yield in order to sustain the present and future welfare of this nation.

It is a deplorable situation and the very strongest possible indictment of our State that we import each year more than eight million bushels of wheat, an even greater number of bushels of corn, approximately three million bushels of oats, and ninety thousand tons of hay, and at the fabulous cost of more than twenty millions of dollars, all of which products might be raised at home without any greater tax upon our energies or efforts if our people were trained in the principles of scientific agriculture."

Following the presentation of our needs along this line Mr. Ford stated that his vision included a time when this training could be secured through constructive educational measures made possible by the larger amount of funds to be raised through local taxation.

School Improvement Associations.

Substantial results frequently come when school improvement work is entered into with the proper spirit. Quoting from a letter relative to such an association in Orrville, we find that they "have had this organization since 1908; have made but few improvements about the building and grounds this year on account of helping the trustees pay all we could on a new piano we bought last year. We have bought desks, blackboards, etc., for our primary room; made over the tennis court and the basket ball court; put up swings; had sand pile and "see-saw" built, etc. We have made $293.50 so far this year—of course, we have paid small debts all along."

A teacher in Lowndes County made a report of the work done in his community, and stated in part: "I am convinced that a school improvement association in every district does more than any other factor to secure the hearty cooperation of the whole community. These gathering have become a social feature in our little village; all look forward to them with pleasure. Teachers, if you will form a school improvement association—and you certainly can—you will find the discipline and management of your school greatly simplified. Your work will be improved, and the general progress of your school will be greatly improved."

JUDGE W. W. PEARSON DIES AT HIS HOME

Died Tuesday; was to be here on the Next day to hold regular term of Circuit Court.

Walter W. Pearson, judge of the fifteenth judicial circuit and candidate for re-nomination to that office in Tuesday's primary, died of heart failure at four o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the family residence in Montgomery. News of his death spread quickly, and caused a pall to settle over the city.

Judge Pearson has been in declining health for the past three years, and those nearest to him had known for some time that he was subject to heart attacks. However, his sudden death was unexpected. Shortly after breakfast Tuesday morning he left his home and went to the city, spending most of the forenoon at the court house.

Forcasts Own Death.

About 10 o'clock as he passed a street corner he met Judge Gaston Gunter, one of his opponents, H. Burgin Fuller and other friends, with whom he conversed and incidentally made this remark, to which no significance was attached at the time but which was recalled by the hearers immediately after they learned of the distinguished jurist's death: "Gentlemen, this is judgment day."

He reached his home between 11:30 and 12 o'clock, noon, and apparently was feeling good. After dinner he took a nap for about an hour. During his sleep he was seized with the heart attack and immediately became unconscious, dying in about twenty minutes. All efforts to revive him proved futile.

Hard Working Jurist.

Judge Pearson was recognized as one of the hardest working jurist in Alabama, and his death will be deeply mourned. He is survived by his wife, three sons, Julius Trimble Pearson, of Detroit Michigan; Walter W. Pearson, of Chicago, and Frank Pearson of Montgomery; one daughter, Miss Sallie Pearson, of Montgomery; two brothers, William Pearson and James Pearson, of Alexander City, and one sister, Mrs. M. Pope, of Sylacauga.

Funeral arrangements will await the arrival of his sons from Chicago and Detroit. They were telegraphed immediately. It is expected the funeral will take place Thursday in Montgomery.

The convention was a great success, it was conceded by some to be the best in the convention's history, indeed it was the best ever heard in West Chilton. The crowd was extremely large. The people were delighted. Miss Bettie Jackson the far famed director of Birmingham just charmed the great audience with her singing. The leaders all seemed at their best. The singing of Miss Wallace of Enon was quite an attraction, while our own Chilton girls came in for a full share of praise. Mrs. Stewart of Perry was quite an addition to the sing ing, Mrs. Toy of Birmingham was also quite a help on the alto.

The memorial service was striking and impressive. The people gave marked attention.

We thank the entire surrounding country for their kind assistance to the local class in entertaining and supporting the convention.

We tender our best praise for the blessings of the convention to the great author of music.

"We are asking that a democracy be a democracy. We are asking that the government of this country be a government by the whole people, for the whole people by the whole people and not government of, for and by half the people. We are asking that we who live under the laws of the state, laws which we must obey and which effect our relation in life, may have something to do with the making of these laws. We are asking that we who pay a very considerable portion of the taxes of the state and of the country may have a voice in the appointment of those taxes. We are asking that we who work may have a say as to the conditions under which we work, conditions which even now are largely under political control, and which every year that we live, come more and more fully under that control. We are asking for the full responsibility, duties, and dignity of citizenship. We are asking for justice, for fair play, for a square deal. We are asking to be enfranchised."—Mary Johnson, Author of "To Have and to Hold."

THE CHILTON COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

—BY—

JEAN WYATT, Editor.

The school building is now being permanently equipped with an excellent system of electric lights. They will all be finished by the time commencement begins next week. The work which is being done cannot be surpassed by anything anywhere.

Everybody is busy preparing for the final examinations, which will begin Thursday, May 11. As soon as the examinations are over the commencement exercises will begin, the first number of which will be held on Thursday evening, May 18. This occasion will be conducted by the music class, in which Prof. Tinsley presents Miss Beverly Hester in a Graduating Recital. The program will continue until Thursday night, May 23, when the Senior class will entertain with their graduating exercises. During the exercises two very noted and talented speakers will be with us, including Dr. Stoves of Bessemer who will deliver the commencement sermon, and Mr. Jas. S. Thomas of the Univerristy of Alabama, who will present the Baccalaureate address.

The annuals are now being distributed, and the meager price which is asker for them is causing the sales to be quite great. This is the first edition of its kind to be gotten out in this county, ani not only the man-this county, and not only the man-certainly to be congratulated in the splendid work which it contains. These boys have done considerable hard work in preparing this publication, and we feel that at least every home in Clanton should conatin one of these copies. The work is not by any means intended just for school children, but it contains things which vitally concern every citizen of the county. In this work we hope that the people outside of the school will find accounts of things that are being done here, which will cause them to understand more clearly what the three thousand dollars of their tax money is being used for each year, and thus appreciate the fact more clearly that this institution intends to and is doing for the future generations of this community what nothing else in the way of education can do.

Rev. Walker conducted the chapel exercises one day last week, and as usual,, had something to say to the school which certainly was elevating both educationally and religously.

Dick: "Puttin' in the 'lectric switch."

Flim: (With excitement and curiosity) "Gee! if they are going to do the whipping by electricity, I think I will go home."

Another week and no war for us. We have hopes.

Here's hoping we will never have to spank Mexico. One cannot rub up against soot without getting black.

This is a good world, after all; and most of the good people live in this town—including even you.

No, no, the prices of printers' commodities are not up in the clouds. They are above the sky.

War or no war, we note with pride that the farmer, like the industrious bee, keeps right on buzzing away.

We want an airship. We want to get up among the clouds and see if we can locate the cost of living.

Mexico is like unto the bad boy who wants to fight but only hangs back for fear he will get licked.

We always did admire a brave man. But, then, timid men invariably do.

The biggest critic is himself the most logical subject of criticism. Don't be a crit.

Be everything that you ought to, and nothing that you ought not to, and by that time you won't be alive at all.

That Irish rebellion accomplished at least one result aside from its inglorious fizzle. We have heard of the Sinn Feiners, whatevev they may be.

Scientists are now making war material out of about everything but wind. That, however, is eternally mortgaged to the politicians.

We advocate preparedness in this shop. We are prepared to receipt subscription bills six days in the week, and if you can't get around in the six days we'll grab it on Sunday without batting an eye or turning a hair.

There are many pleasant truths, but few people manage to conect up with them.

The price of gasoline is not troubling us a bit. It's the cost of print paper that is jerking our hair out by the roots.

People have become over weary and have quit yelping over the high cost of living. Which, we opine, is a sure sign that the boosters are about due for another boost.

High society has its advantages after all. The fat woman, for instance, achieves the distinction of matronly dignity, while the skinny one is a willowy wisp of charming femininity.

An exchange says some women have all the grace of an angleworm when it comes to charming by the poetry of motion. But we'll let it go at that.

It's wonderful what this shortage of dyestuffs is doing for us. Its effects are so distressing it is turning some of our distinguished citizens prematurely gray.

Just note the fact that we haven't a word about that cuss of a Villa this week.

Mr. Ford says he does not want to be president. He won't.

Political candidates generally get what is coming to them, but the trouble comes in inducing them to see themselves as others see them.

Incidentally, however, clean up week should be three hundred and sixty-five days long.

FREE SPRINGS

Several of our people attended the singing convention at Union Springs last Sunday and report a nice time.

It made many hearts glad to see Uncle Natty Dobbs, one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of the county, able to be present and enjoy again the songs that in his younger days he taught many voices to sing. May God lend him many more years in which to enjoy occasions like this.

There will be an all day singing at Free Springs church, eight miles west of Jemison, on Saturday, May 20th, All singers and lovers of music are requested to come and bring well filled baskets and the 1916 book. Lets have a day of pleasant association.

EMINENT ALABAMIANS ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE

The denial of the rights of woman suffrage to women possessing the qualifications which men must posses to exercise the right, is opposed to the fundamental principles of a republic such as ours. IGNORANCE A CURSE.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space to say a few words to our people through your paper.

"I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding, and lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw it and considered it well. I looked upon it and received instruction, yet a little sleep and a little slumberr, a little folding of the hands to sleep. So shall thy poverty come as one that travaileth, and thy want as an armed man."—Proverbs, 24th chapter, verses 30-34.

Although an ignorant citizen of the Dry Valley, the study of their past age from the Bible has caused me to see myself and community as never before.

Men, why are we sleeping over our rights? Why are we forfeiting our own and our children's rights?

God has blessed Dry Valley parents with as dear and bright children as any community in the state. Let's see for a moment her past record in the production of briliant minds.

We note two able ministers of the gospel, one of which is now presiding elder in the M. E. church in a certain district in west Texas, while others have been teachers of the high schools of the state, and now a principal of a county high school. The vice-president of the Alabama Educational Association this past year was one of our Dry Valley boys. Others have made success in their different callings. What the schools of Dry Valley have done in the past they can do in the future, and if we as patrons of the schools will make use of our present opportunities we can far excel the record of the past.

We are glad to note that our people are beginning to make progress. Our schools are growing better each suceeding year. The school at Concord has increased the lenght of its term one month each year for the past two years, and used an asistant teacher two months last year. The school interest here should be even greater next year than it has ever been before. Concord should not be satisfied until she has a nine months term with two good instructors in charge.

We have had the best school at Enon this year that we have had for many years. With the able management of Prof. Mullins we were able to use an assistant teacher nearly all of the winter. I see no reason why we should not all get together and employ two good instructors for a term of nine months at Enon next year.

We trust that all the schools of Dry Valley will unite in one common fight against the one common foe—Illiteracy or Ignorance. Let us take up the fight with the motto: "Illiteracy in Alabama, let's remove it."

Every patron of Dry Valley should feel that he or she is responsible for what our schools are. The duty and responsibility of rearing our boys and girls to manhood and womanhood are ours, and though we may be ever so ignorant, we cannot shift these responsibilities. We must make our surroundings better. Every person is a reflector. We become those whom we habitually reflect. Thus we see our boys and girls will be no better than the companions they have had. They cannot help showing the environment in which they have lived, and the influences that have played upon them.

The flower that hangs in the early morning empearled dew is arrayed with jewels. Once shaken the beads roll off. Then you may sprinkle water over it as much as you please, yet it can never be made by human hand to present the appearance which it had when the dew had lightly fallen upon it from heaven. So in youth there is a purity of character, which when once touched and defiled can never be restored.

Father and mother, do we love our children? Are we too ignorant to see the best interests for their future welfare?

Let us arouse ourselves. Let us sympathize with our teacher. Let us co-operate with each other, not selfishly, but for the purpose of making of our county better.

In conclusion let us say with one of our American poets:

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

ALL DAY SINGING

Editor Union-Banner:

Will you give me space for a few words. I want to say a few things about all day singings on the Sabbath.

Brethren, I see most every week in the paper a notice of all day singing on Sunday. You who are having are causing to be had those all day singings on Sunday, have you ever stoped to think what you are doing? Don't you know you are taking away from the Sunday schools and churches hundreds of people who would do more good in Sunday school and churches and learn more of Gods word than they do at the all day Sunday singing. Can you tell what praise God gets out of those singings? Of course I know a few go for the praise service. Don't you know Brethren, you are detracting from God's cause instead of adding to it. As a rule half or more of the people that go to those singings don't get in the house. It is getting to be more of a picnic than God's services. I believe it is intended by some for a good thing.

Why not have the all day singing on Thursday, Friday or Saturday then those that go will go for the good of the services and you will have all that can get in the house and that's enough for any religious services, more than that is detrimental to the services.

Brethren I hope you will give this your careful study and then you will see that you are breaking down the churches and Sunday schools just as the state is breaking down the rural schools by giving the peoples money to the high schools, industrial schools colleges, ect., then cry out illiteracy, yet they will go to Montgomery and work for and give the money to the higher institutes. How can they expect the poor people to get an education when they thake their money and give it to people that already have a common school eucation. Same way with some of the leaders in the all day Sunday singings. Oh! they say the churches are going down, not as many christians as there used to be and yet they are taking the people away from the churches and staying away themselves. I want to say that no one loves singing better than I do. Nothing lifts my soul higher toward heaven than good singing in church and Sunday school services.

How many of those leaders of the all day singings on Sunday do we have in church or Sunday school to help us sing in church or Sunday school? We don't have them. It is most every Sunday they are at the all day singing, they do not only stay away from church themselves, but by the all day singing they take all of the best singers away from church and Sunday school, and we have to get along with the children and a very few old folks in the Sunday schools, therefore God's services are neglected. Are all the leaders in those all day Sunday singings christians? I trow not then if they are not christians what interest do they have in God's services. A great many of the all day singings are advertisements to fill some ones pocket and not to the praise of God. Of course we have some people that pick out their own way to heaven and leave the Bible out of it. Christ says I am the door and they that climb up any other way except in and through me the same is a robber and a thief. The all day Sunday singings are robbing God of the services that belong to him, but Christ says straight and narrow is the way that leads to life and few there be that find it.

Now, Brethren, don't pull off your shirt but keep it on for I mean all for the glory of God and our good. We should work for our master who suffered and died for us that we through his suffering might be saved.

Best wishes to the Union-Banner.

Decatur, Ga., May 5, 1916.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please publish the following card of thanks for us to the good neighbors of our dear mother for their kindness and assistance during her sickness and death.

I, as one of the children, will always have a warm place in my heart for them, for their untiring assistance and faithful care for her during her sickness. I pray that the good Lord will greatly bless them and that they may have for themselves and for their families a long and peaceful life and a pleasant and goodly home. May they by their faithful and Godly labors lay up for themselves a treasure in heaven where moth and rust does not corrupt and thieves do not break through and steal. Alas, mother, kind words and soothing hand from us are forever gone, but our eyes turn to the Savior and we can see her alive in Him and he has gone to prepare a place for us. Her chair and place on earth are forever vacant, but I trust that some time in the future we will all be reunited where pain and death will be no more, and where children and mother and all of our friends who are faithful to the Lord will inherit that kingdom prepared for us from the foundation of the world.

Though I am many miles away from you daily and hourly I think of you and how good you were to mother, and I daily ask the Lord to bless you.

I am more than ever, your friend,

J. H. THOMAS.

What is the Meaning of Neutral.

If neutral means the same to one as to another, or in other words showing no favors to either side that is in a struggle then I claim that President Wilson is not neutral nor never has been since this great war has been raging in Europe. President Wilson has been favoring England ever since this European war has been going on. President Wilson has been threatening Germany with Diplomatic break for a year or more and now it seems as though that break was sure to come.

What is the difference between drowning a person and starving one to death? England is trying to starve Germany's millions of people by a blockade of her commerce ships and if she could accomplish this what would be the result? Well if there were any Americans in Germany where the food supply has been cut off by England's blockade policy they would starve also and does any person with spoonful of sence believe that the United States and England should go to war because there were Americans in Germany that had starved to death on account of England's blockade policy. I think not.

Now on the other hand Germany had to meet England half way and so in order to preserve the lives of the women and children as well as her men and soldiers she decided to put submarines to work against England's blockade, and the result is that quite a number of Americans have lost their lives for not staying off of belligrent ships, and now President Wilson is gonig to have a break with Germany as the latest news dispatches claim. A good many Americans that have lost their lives on boats torpedoed by submarines were speculators going back and forth from this country to Europe closing deals and making money, and wanting protection from the United States when they knew and some of them were warned to keep off of the belligrent ships. Wilson is the wrong man to try to bluff Germany. Germany is not afraid of President Wilson. If I were running the United States government and let a country like Mexico run all over me for more than Germany ever has or ever tried to I am sure I would resign, or if I did not want to resign I would just lean back in my office chair and keep still until my term or terms expired.

If you remember President Wilson sent some war ships to Vera Cruz. He wanted 21 salutes for the American flag. Did he get them? Did the Mexicans salute our flag? Not yet, and what did our government do. They did not do a thing but come back home with about 19 or 20 American lives lost, and now we have a small army in Mexico hunting a man or bandit that they will be hunting when William Jennings Bryan is elected President and Richard P. Hobson Vice-President on the prohibition ticket, so you can imagine how long they will hunt for Villa if Carranza does not order the American soldiers out before they complete their chase. I be lieve that whenever President Wilson receives a notice to withdraw the American troops he will doit. Every body can bluff Wilson but Wilson can't bluff nobody.

In conclusion I claim President Wilson is not neutral and I think I have proven it beyound a doubt. President Wilson has favored England all through the present war, and England is one of the direct causes of a low price on our cotton here in the south and no one can deny this statement and prove their claim.

President Wilson is not even neutral with Mexico. He is selling Carranza ammunition and the other learers in Mexico cannot buy ammunition from this country. Is that neutral? And to top off the whole question Carranza's soldiers have used ammunition that they very likely bought in this country to kill our American soldiers at Parral Mexico a few days ago according to the news dispatches that we have received.

President Wilson is no man to take up international questions with other countries because he always comes out at the little end of the horn and the rest of thew orld laugh and point their fingers at him and our country.

Respectfully,
L. E. DIEFENDERFER.

The toppy red bag sells for a nickel and the tidy red tin for a dime; then there's the handsome pound and half-pound tin humidors and the pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such bang-up trim all-the-time!

in goodness and in pipe satisfaction is all we or its enthusiastic friends ever claimed for it!

It answers every smoke desire you or any other man ever had! It is so cool and fragrant and appealing to your smokeappetite that you will get chummy with it in a mighty short time!

Will you invest 5c or 10c to prove out our say-so on the national joy smoke?

LIBERTY HILL

Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your valuable paper to say a few words.

Health of this community is very good at present except Mr. Lawrence Giles who has been an invalid for several years, but is much worse now.

Our Sunday School has died out at this place, but now that warmer weather is coming we should begin again.

Mrs. Mattie Weldon of Clanton is visiting her sister, Mrs. Fayte Foshee, this week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gibbons visited the latters parents, Rev. and Mrs. B. H. Vickers, Sunday.

Mr. Walter Ward and wife visited relatives near Mt. Pleasant Sunday.

Misses Eula, Vivion and Bertha Best visited Miss Esther Vickers Sunday.

Mr. Jonah Mims and family visited Rev. A. L. Foshee and family Sunday.

Mr. Tom Williams and family of Pletcher visited J. E. Littlejohn's Sunday.

Mr. J. V. Best and wife visited at Mr. Nat Ward's Sunday.

Mr. C. W. Blackwell and family attended preaching at Pleasant Grove Sunday.

Miss Monnie Baker, Mrs. Castle and Tom Williams visited relatives on Mulberry Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodie Galman visited relatives at Jemison last week.

We are all looking forward to Tuesday, (election day.) Come on boys lets all go and vote and lets cast our vote for some honest man and hope for better times for the next four years than we have had for the past four.

There will be preaching next Sunday at this place at 11 o'clock and let us all meet at 10 o'clock and sing awhile before preaching.

Several of the young people and older ones too attended the singing at Walnut Creek Sunday, and all reported fine singing, a large crowd, and a lot of candidates.

Come on all you writers from the different communities and let us hear from you. Probably we shall have more space now after election as the candidates won't have so much to write about.

Rank Nonsense.

It is the rankest nonsense for The Trainman to pretend that the public has nothing to do with this business. The public has everything to do with it, as the brotherhoods will find, if they refuse arbitration and cast conservatism to the winds. The most cowardly government could not, in that case, shrink from its supreme duty of keeping the national highways open to commerce.— New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Freight Accidents Decrease.

The use of the huge new locomotives and the long and heavy trains, against which the Brotherhoods of freight trainmen, who are asking an enormous increase in wages, protest so vigorously, seems to have resulted in a rapid decrease in accidents to railroad employees, and a decided increase in their safety. The number of railway employees killed in service diminished from 620 in 1911 to 452 in 1914, and the number of injured from 8601 to 4823.

MAKE GOOD WAGES IN SHORT HOURS IN TRAIN SERVICE

Some Interesting Figures As To Actual Earnings Of Men On Southeastern Roads.

Washington, D. C.—In connection with the movement of train and engine employes for increased wages, a frank statement of the earnings of men employed in freight service in the southeastern territory will doubtless be of interest.

For engineers the prevailing minimum rate in through freight service ranges from $5.15 to $5.65 per day for engines of ordinary types, in local freight service from $5.25 to $6.00 for engines of ordinary types, in both through and local freight service from $6.25 to $7.00 for Mallet type engines.

For white firemen on engines of ordinary types the minimum rate ranges from $2.75 to $3.50 per day in through freight service, from $3.00 to $3.60 in local service; on Mallet engines in both through and local service from $4.00 to $4.25.

For conductors the standard minimum rate in through freight service is $4.10 per day, in local service $4.50 per day.

For white brakemen the standard rate in through freight service is $2.75 per, in local service $3 per day.

The foregoing are the minimum daily rates that must be made by the railways to each employee in the classes named who does any work at all in a day, irrespective of how few hours he may be on duty or of how few miles he may actually run. These rates are paid for any work up to 100 miles with additional pay for overtime if the run is not completed in the specified number of hours.

On the other hand, the earnings of employees frequently exceed these figures as the actual earnings depend upon the number of miles run and, in the case of fast freight runs, the earnings are much higher for comparatively short hours.

Taking as an illustration a fast freight train running over a division 150 miles long where the daily run can be made in 7 hours and 30 minutes, the engineer would receive for this 7 1-2 hours on duty the sum of $8.10, the fireman $4.70, the conductor $6.15, and the white brakeman $4.10.

Thus while the first figures show the minimum that can be paid an engineer, fireman, conductor, or brakeman for a day's work, the latter figures show the wages that can be and are being made by train and engine employees on fast freights on long divisions, such as are being run every day in regular service by a number of roads in the southeast for handling live stock, perishables, and other freight which it is necessary to move on expedited schedules.

In yard service the standard rates for white employees vary from $3.00 to $3.50 per day for day switchmen, and from $3.20 to $3.70 for night switchmen, and from $3.50 to $3.80 for day foremen, and from $3.70 to $4.00 for night foremen. These are the minimum rates that can be paid for a day or any part of a day up to 10 hours, after 10 hours pro rata overtime is paid.

Under the men's proposals the lowest yard employees who now receive $3.00 for a 10 hour day would receive $3.00 for an 8 hour day, or $4.12 for the work at present performed in 10 hours, and the night yard conductor now receiving $4.00 for his 10 hour day would receive this $4.00 for his 8 hour day, or $5.50 for the work at present performed in 10 hours.

100,000,000 Paralyzed

Just as the railroads have begun to make money, after several hard years, they are threatened with a great strike. Four national railroad unions threaten to tie up every steam road in the country. The number of employees involved may total 400,000. They seem to have it in their power to stop all freight and passenger traffic on 250,600 miles of track.

We have never had a strike of such scope and magnitude. It would paralyze all American industry and commerce and stop our export trade. A nation of 100,000,000 people would stand still, while its biggest industry fought out a question of wages and hours. A deadlock would be inconceivably destructive.—Bangor (Me.) News.

A Railway Break Down.

In the case under consideration, if the engine and trainmen should win their point, it would be but another step towards a general railroad breakdown, and that would mean eventual government ownership.

The railroad employee who assists in any move of that sort, once he became a government employee would undoubtedly spend a goodly part of his time when off duty in trying to find how many kinds of a donkey he had made of himself.—Atlanta Iron Tradesman.

The Wrong Theory.

To pursue a dispute as to hours and wages on the theory that workingmen are entitled to all that can be forced from employers and extorted from the people by employers is not the best way to promote the permanent welfare of labor.—New York World.

With best wishes to the Union-Banner and its many readers.

Effects Of a Tie-Up

It is calculated that if a general tie-up and paralysis of all freight traffic should result from the demand of the freight trainmen for an increase of 25 per cent in their wages, a large number of the poorer people of New York City would face starvation within three days; in other words, these people have available supplies of food for not more than two days ahead. Other large cities would face like conditions. Milk supplies would be cut off, and babies dependent on the daily milk jar for sustenance would be left to perish. The distress would reach all classes everywhere, and more especially the working people because factories necessarily would be shut down on account of inability to secure raw material or to ship finished products.

HOBSON AND BANKHEAD.

The final returns of Tuesday's primary election show a very close race between Capt. R. P. Hobson and W. B. Bankhead for Congresman from the new tenth Alabama District. The vote is so close that the result will be contested by Mrr. Hobson, as he is charging gross irregularities in the way the voting was conducted.

CENTER HILL

We wish to thank the people of Center Hill church for the kind reception given us last Saturday and Sunday. We were gratful for the assistance of Brothers H. T. Crumpton, J. A. Cannon, Hill and Woodford.

It seems that our own pastors are not attending the meetings as they should, there being a small number of pastors present from our own association. But we hope to see them at the next meeting.

The house was called to order by the pastor, Brother T. J. Deason. Devotional exercises were conducted by Brotherc Strok. Rev. J. A. Cannon was elected Moderator, and Buford Lawrence, Clerk. Bro. Woodford delivered an interesting speeeh on the people and the benefits of a Fifth Sunday Meeting. It would have done some of our pastors good to hear this.

Rev. W. P. Lowery preached an excellent sermon from Second Thes. 3:1, after which the meeting adjourned for dinner.

Afternoon the house was called to order by the Moderator, and all joined in singing, "There is a Fountain filled with blood", after which Brother Walker led in prayer.

Rev. J. N. Scott made an address in which he gave his views as to the kind of music that should be used in our churches.

by Buford Lawrence and Bro. Woodford.

Our mission subject was discussed yard. Rev. H. T. Crumpton made an excellent speech on First Cor., 16:1-2 which made us realize more fully that what we have belongs to our Creator, and should be used more to His cause.

The meeting of the second day was called to order by the Moderator. We had a number of Sunday School talks that we hope will prove beneficial to our Sunday schools.

Rev. S. O. Y. Ray told us in an interesting way how our mission money is spent; followed by Rev. T. J. Deason. Bro. Ray preached at 11 o'clock, his text was 1 Cor. 15: 29-30. It was one of the best sermons we have heard in some time and such that would make any baptist feel that he is on the right road.

Afternoon the house was called to order by the Moderator.

Br J. E. Champion made a very interesting speech on "Why maintain a Baptist Church," followed by others.

Moved and seconed that a committee be appointed to arrange a program and locate a place for the next meeting carried, and Dr. Hyman, Bro. Thomas and Rev. W. P. Lowery were appointed.

There being no other business the meeting adjourned.

J. A. CANNON, Mod.,
BUFORD LAWRENCE, Clerk.

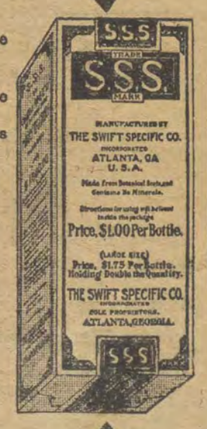
Five Facts You Should Know

(1) That disease is the result of a disordered condition.

(2) That when we correct the disordered condition, we eliminate the disease.



(3) That the blood is the carrier of poisons throughout the body.

(4) That to successfully treat any disease originating in the blood, we have to treat the blood, as the cause.

(5) That S. S. S. is the most reliable remedy for removing impurities from the blood.

USED FOR 50 YEARS SUCCESSFULLY

S. S. S. is no experiment of today, but is a successful remedy for the blood that has been a blessing to thousands of sufferers for the last fifty years. There is nothing mysterious about S. S. S. It is an extract from native herbs, roots and bark, each known for its peculiar medicinal value. These ingredients combine and act in a beneficial and helpful way with nature. It doesn't matter whether your case of blood trouble is one of the many forms of Rheumatism, or Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, chronic skin trouble, or any other form of blood trouble. S. S. S. will go directly to the seat of the trouble; giving the blood a thorough cleansing, driving out the impurities in a natural way, and leaving the blood pure and refreshed, ready to do its full duty in building the tissues up to a normal and healthy state. Begin today on a bottle of S. S. S. and note how soon you will begin to feel relief. We will gladly give special advice and free consultation. Ever taste Virginia sunshine?

YOU did—if you ever smoked a cigarette of Virginia tobacco.

Virginia, you know, is "the tobacco man's tobacco", because it gives to a cigarette the one quality no other tobacco can give—that refreshing liveliness called "character"! And smokers want "character" above all else.

Piedmonts have "character" in full measure—they're highest grade Virginia. ALL Virginia! Golden, lively, mellow as southern sunshine!

Next time, buy your regular brand—

But say "Piedmonts", too, just so you can know them for yourself!

NOTE:—It is ocean freight, and import duty, and wasteful handling which make ordinary foreign-grown tobaccos cost more than they should. That is why cigarettes made of this foreign-grown tobacco cannot have in them as good tobacco as Piedmonts, which are made of highest-grade Virginia, grown right here in the U. S. A!

TUSCALOOSA TO BE GAILY DECORATED FOR CELEBRATION

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 3.—With red, white and blue flags, bunting, and streamers of electric lights the city will be decorated when the time comes for the celebration of the centennial of Tuscaloosa, which will be May 29, 30 and 31. The decarations committee has spared no effort in order to obtain brilliant and beautiful designs. The beautification of the city for the event has been handed over to Harry W. Lewis, of Atlantic City, who has for several years past been in charge of the decoration of New Orleans for the annual carnival.

The state colors, crimson and white, will chiefly predominate in decorating, although some blue will also be used, which will make the color scheme national as well. Bunting and flags will serve for daylight decorations, while at night the city will be lit from end to end with hundreds of electric lights, streamers of which will form an archway over the streets. Besides the street decorations the merchants of the city will decorate their places of business with flags and bunting and also many private residences will receive similar treatment.

While all of the city will be gaily decked out for the occasion the downtown section will outstrip the remainder in splendor. Greensboro avenue and University avenue will be most beautifully decorated and brilliantly illuminated as will the other streets on the route of the grand parade. The committee has devoted all of its time and a great deal of money to provide appropriate decorations and the city is expected to present a gayer and livlier appearance than ever before.

POPLAR SPRINGS

Health of this community is fairly good at present. The farmers are looking a little blue over the dry weather, but I trust we will have rain soon.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely under the able management of our Superintendent, J. W. Cooper. It seems that the Sunday school is better just now than it has ever been at this place before; more interest taken.

Was a large crowd out at church Sunday. Had a fine sermon by our pastor, W. W. Robinson, had good singing and Sunday school. I was so glad to see all of our young folks out at their home service Sunday, I know the all day singings are tempting to them, but I am so glad they attend their home service first and then go to the singing in the afternoon. That is good young folks. I want us all to work together and be like the song "When the Roll is Called I'll be There."

CHILTON COUNTIAN HONORED AT VANDERBILT

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 6, 1916. Dr. L. E. Burch, Dean of the Medical Department of Vanderbilt University, announced today that J. C. Foshee of Alabama had been chosen by the Vanderbilt authorities as the one to receive a very large gift, which consists of surgical supplies, medical library, office fixtures and etc., amounting to something more than one thousand dollars.

The gift is one of a very peculiar and unusual circumstances and is the first of its kind and nature having been given to any student of Vanderbilt. Mrs. J. C. Moore of Anniston, Ala., made the gift. She is the widow of the late Dr. J. C. Moore, who was a very prominent physician and surgeon of that city previous to his recent death. Mrs. Moore wrote Dr. Burch stating that she wished to present to a member of the class graduating this year her husbands entire office equipment, all surgical instruments complete, and handsome medical library and etc.

There were two striking requests that Mrs. Moore made. One was that Dr. Burch select the member of the Senior class for this gift who had done most toward self support while in school, and secondly that Mr. Foshee within fifteen years give to some other Senior student of Vanderbilt that had also supported himself while in school to a great extent a similar gift.

Mr. Foshee is very much gratified over this valuable gift and is the son of C. D. Foshhee of Billingsley.

SIMS AND POWELL

Daddy Sims' squadron crossed bats with Powell's brigade on the Chilton County High School ground in a fast double header last Saturday in which Daddy easily carried off the laurels by Winning both games. In the first game each side played perfect ball till the last half of the fourth, when the heavy hitting of the "squadron" and a few costly errors of the "brigade" brought home 8 runs, which was all that was made during the whole game. Then the boys tightened up andplayed perfect ball the remainder of the game. Batteries for Daddy were Smith and Popwell, For Powell Driver and Mullins.

In the last game there were more errors made on both sides and the batting was not as heavy as in part of thefirst game, so the scores were more evenly divied finally resulting in 8 to 6 in favor of Daddy. Batteries for Daddy were Pyron, Pyron and Palmer; for Powell were Burkhalter, Parrish and Mullins.

We are sorry that we are unable to give a complete box score of the games, but we hope to be able to soon, then we will report all games that we play during the season.

FATHER AND MOTHER HARDLY KNEW HER

Mrs. Herrington has gained 14 pounds and does her own gardening.

"The very first bottle of Tanlac I took made me feel so much stronger and better that I commenced doing some of my household work; I just keep right on working and taking Tanlac until I now feel perfectly well and am doing all my work, even to my gardening," said Mrs. D. Herrington, who lives at 1232 Fourth Avenue, Nashville, to the Tanlac representative who called for her statement a few days ago and found her working her attractive new garden.

"Yes, sir," continued Mrs Herrington, "I have gained fourteen pounds and have improved so much since taking Tanlac that my father and mother hardly knew me when I went to see them the other day. I actually believe Tanlac saved my life, and my husband does, too.

"I had peculiar pains in my side and stomach for four years, and the doctors didn't seem to know the cause of my trouble. One of them said, I had gall stones, and my husband spent four or five hunder dollars for medicine and doctors' bills, and nothing seemed to do me any good. I fell off until I only weighed 98 pounds and was so weak that I coundn't do any work at all. I was so nervous that I counldn't hardly go to sleep, and what I did sleep was just 'cat naps,' and I would get up in the morning so tired that I couldhardly myself around. I had no appetite, and couldn't eat meats at all without having awful pains in my stomach. The cramping pains in my right side were something terrible. My kidneys troubled me a great deal, and I had heavy aching pains in my back lots of the time

"My husband told me he believed Tanlac would help me, and said he wanted me to try it, and I'm so glad I did, for it has almost made a new woman of me. Those terrible pains the doctor said was caused by gallstones never trouble me any now, all signs of the kidney trouble have disappeared. I'm not nervous at all, and I can sleep all night as sound as a child. I eat hearty of any thing I want and enjoy it, and in place of feeling weak and worn out, I feel strong and full of life, and its wonderful what Tanlac has done for me. It got me out of a dreadful shape and made me well and happy again. I am sure it will do the same thing for others who are suffering as I did if they will only give it a trial."

Teachers' Institutes

At the general sessions of the county teachers institutes under the new law all teachers are present and such subjects as are of general interest are discussed. Those proving to be of interest to the teachers are, in part, as follows:

Sanitation and Health; Better Teaching; Recreation and Play; School Laws; Local Taxation; Extension Work; and Corn Culb Work.

Perhaps the most interesting work of the institutes, and that which seems to reach the needs of the teachers in a more direct way is the departmental work. These sessions are given in three sections; namely primary and grammar grades and high schools. These sections meet at the same time, and the teachers go to themeeting of their choosing.

Breaks Record For Premium Money and Puts Case Up to All Other Breed Associations

Two thousand dollars in premiums will be given to breeders of Hampshire swine at the Alabama State-Wide Livestock Show in Montgomery, Ala., this coming fall.

This sets a record for premiums for any one breed of livestock ever offered in the State of Alabama.

One thousand dollars of this two thousand dollars, is given by the American Hampshire Swine Record Association, E. C. Stone, secretary at Peoria, Ill. This one thousand of the two thousand, is open to Hampshire breeders in all parts of the United States and Alabama breeders compete for it on the same basis as breeders from other states.

The other one thousand dollars of the total two thousand is given by the Montgomery Livestock Association and the Hampshire breeders of Alabama $500 being given by the association and the other $500 being given by the breeders. This thousand dollars can be competed for only by Alabama Hampshire breeders.

Probably $400 of the total two thousand dollars will be open for premiums for pig club boys and pig club girls of Alabama, offering them more money than they have ever been offered before at any fair or livestock show in the South.

This announcement of two thousand dollars in premiums for one breed of hogs at the State-Wide Livestock Show in Montgomery will get swine raisers to talking and working all over the state. This big money will be a remarkable incentive to swine growers to do their very best. The offering of as much as $400 in premiums to the boys and girls in Alabama who are raising Hampshire pigs, will get a large number of boys and girls into raising pure-bred pigs to compete for real money at the State-Wide Livestock Show.

This announcement of two thousand dollars in premium money for growers of Hampshire swine follows the visit to Alabama of E. C. Stone of Peoria, Ill., secretary of the American Hampshire Swine Record Association. Mr. Stone offered, for the Hampshire Association to give $1,000 in premiums for Hampshire hogs. The Montgomery Livestock Association matched this offer with $500. Then Judge C. E. Thomas president of the Prattville Stock Farm at Prattville, Ala., one of the largest Hampshire ranches in America pledged $500 from the Hampshire breeders of the state. So, in that way, $2,000 is up for premiums to go to Hampshire swine raisers. Such money as this will doubtless give the State-Wide Livestock Show at Montgomery this fall, the greatest exhibit of Hampshire swine ever seen in the South.

Now the questoin is, what are the other breed associations going to do?

What will the Poland China Associations do in the way of offering premiums for Poland China hogs at the State-Wide Livestock Show in Montgomery this fall? There are three Poland China record associations—American, Standard and National. The American, W. M. McFadden, secretary at Chicago has shown an unusual interest in the progress of the swine industry in the Central South. That this interest will continue there is no doubt, for Mr. Mckadden sees opportunity here now for doing a big and solid work for Poland China hogs.

What will the Duroc-Jersey people do? Robert J. Evans, secretary of the American Duroc-Jersey Association at Chicago, has been in Alabama twice in the last six months. All Southern breeders like him and he has already done a splendid work for the Duroc-Jerseys in this part of the South. That he will do a great deal more, cannot be doubted.

What will the Berkshire people do? To date they have shown only a passing interest in our rapidly developing swine territory. The writer has had some correspondence with the National Association and so have several of the prominent Berkshire breeders; yet to date, signs point to the fact that the Berkshire people are overlooking a mighty big opportunity. We fear they will wake up too late.

What will the beef cattle breed associations do? There is no doubt that something will be heard from the Herefords The Hereford Association has shown more push and progress in the Central South, in the writer's opinion, than any other beef cattle breed association. Mr. Kinzer knows what opportunity is here; he has been down to see us several time and he is following closely Hereford gains here in Alabama and the whole Central South.

The Aberdeen-Angus people have shown interest too, but not as much as it will pay them to show. We believe that Mr. Clay should take a trip down here and meet some of the breeders and encourage them along. He would find this especially valuable since he has been pushing the Angus in South America, for Alabama is the natural outlet for pure-bred livestock for South America. None can dispute this fact.

The Shorthorn people have been doing considerable work but there is still a good deal to be done. It would pay the Shorthorn Association and pay it well to offer good premiums for Shorthorn cattle at the State-Wide Association Show in Montgomery this fall, which in all probability will be the finest exhibit of livestock ever made in this part of the South.

Which Shall It Be---Corn, Peanuts, or Both?

Big Problem for Swine Producers

Which shall you feed your hogs—corn or peanuts or both corn and peanuts?

This is the biggest question now before swine growers in many parts of the Central South—especially in those parts where peanuts can be grown profitably.

And it is a question that is going to be discussed at length for a good long time wherever and whenever swine raisers meet.

To thousands of farmers in some parts of the Central South it is a vital question in farming and stock raising. That our people are going in stronger and stronger for pork production cannot be doubted. Pork, as most everybody knows, is "way up." Pork, as most people think, is going to stay up. Some even predict 12-cent hogs before summer is over. When we think that it has not been so many years since hogs were three cents and even lower we see that a remarkable change has come over the entire country. Hog production now is an almost magic subject to the farmer. Hogs, produced without more than the usual loss in your pigs, mean big money for the farmer.

It may be said with safety that there is no prospect whatever of hogs going down to any extent within the next two years. The European conflict is draining England and the continent of its livestock. While it is true that England and the continent are not large swine producers, considering their population, still there were a great many hogs raised, especially in Germany. The European supply of pork is short indeed and doubtless much American pork is going into the rations of the Allies and the people at home that have to be fed.

But even without consideration of the European war, pork is likely to remain high. There is a scarcity of hogs in the Central West, which hitherto has supplied the bulk of pork to the world. The foot-and-mouth disease played havoc with herds in the Central West last year—not in deaths so much as in the necessity, of selling for "immediate slaughter." Farmers in quarantined area could not ship to other sections—all they could do was to ship into the Union Stock Yards in Chicago for "immediate slaughter." Thus hogs sold by thousands and tens of thousands at a low price. The Central West was pretty well cleaned of all its available stock and it will be a couple of years at least before the Central West gets back on the same hog-production basis that it was on before the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Following these vast shipments of hogs into Chicago and the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of these hogs, prices began to go up and they have been going up ever since. As te prices went up the demand for breeding stock increased all over the country. The people saw the opportunity in pork production and from the East, the far West and the South came orders into the Central West for breeding boars and sows by the thousands.

The situation right now is that there is a general shortage of breeding stock over the country and a shortage of butcher stuff. This shortage, in the face of the heavy demand for pork, cannot be made up in a month or six months. It is extremely doubtful if hogs will go down very much in the next five or six years.

And so our people here in the Central South have gone in for hog production as never before. And, as we said in the last issue of this farm paper, if the people can only keep cholera from doing much damage the profits are theirs.

But in some sections the profits are considerably affected by feeding methods. Shall we try to fatten on corn alone, and, if we rake peanuts sell all the peanuts to the oil mills Or, shall we feed both corn and peanuts?

Now it is pretty well known that the packers are against "mass fed" hogs. A hog fed on peanuts from start to the finish is a "soft" hog, and soft indeed. The ham of a hog that has run on pasture and fatted on peanuts is oily and this oil steadily oozes from the ham until it weighs considerably less than at the start. With a side or a shoulder it is the same as with the ham. There is no getting around the fact that the peanut-fed hog loses weight from the time he is butchered until he is eaten.

Thus the peanut hog sells from a cent to two cents a pound cheaper than the corn-fed hog. Sometimes packers will not buy him at all.

"But" you say, "the peanut ham has a flavor not found in the ham of a corn-fed hog. The peanut ham because of its flavor should be worth just as much and maybe more than the ham of a corn-fed hog."

That may be true, yet the world isn't educated up to it yet. The pork eater in general does not know the ham of the peanut fattened hog. The world knows the corn-fed hog and will continue to know it only for some time to come and the packers are forced to give people what they are used to. Of course, the packers could do some educating of the people to the fine flavor of the peanut-fed hog but packers are not educators. They butcher and pack for profit.

But again is it not possible to sell the peanut fattened hog cheaper than the corn-fed hog and still make more profit than is made on the corn-fed hogs? It may be in some sections of the Central South where peanuts are an easy crop. A good crop of peanuts can be grown on land that will not produce much of a crop of corn, and as a rule they can be grown considerably cheaper than corn. To put good corn land into peanuts would never do, of course, for peanuts can be raised on land that is not strong enough to bring much corn.

This question is one that has not been answered by any approved tests. On peanut land the hog raiser may possibly fatten his hogs on peanuts and sell them at a less price than the corn-fed hogs and still make as much profit as the man who has good corn land and feeds his hogs on corn.

The man who has good corn and pasture land does not have to worry about peanuts. The corn-and-pasture route is the profitable one for him. But in sandy sections that produce good crops of peanuts the question is a vital one. Whether the peanut grower, living on land that produces good crops of peanuts, can fatten his hogs on peanuts, sell them cheaper than the corn-and-pasture man and still make as much as the corn-and-pasture man is a question that only time and experience can answer.

Many farmers in the peanut growing sections have done some work in feeding peanuts to hogs and then hardening them on corn. It was generally believed some time back that this hardening of hogs required only four or five weeks. It is thought now—though no approved tests have been made—that you cannot harden a peanut-fed hog on corn in four weeks.

A swine buyer who handles thousands of hogs, says that a hog fed on peanuts up to the time he weighs a hundred pounds can then be put on corn and will sell at two hundred two hundred and fifty or three hundred pounds at just the same price as a hog that has been on corn and pasture from weening time on. He believes that hardening with corn should begin not later than when the hog weighs a hundred pounds or thereabouts. As it is his object to get the best possible prices for the hogs he sells to the packers, his opinion should have a good deal of weight. He does not believe that four or five weeks of feeding on corn will harden any mass fed hog. He believes hardening with corn is only possible when the ear or so a day is fed from the hundred pound weight on

There may be others who hold a different opinion and their opinions may be borne out by their own experience. It is a problem and a big one. We have here only touched on it. It can be worked out only by time and the many experiences of the hog raiser

Some farmers may find it more profitable to produce mass fed hogs entirely, but we doubt it Years of experience have shown that corn has a vital part in profitable hog production. It costs us no more to raise corn than it does, the farmer of the "Corn Belt" although the "Corn Belt" farmers average per acre will continue to be higher than ours for some time. On peanut land peanuts can it is generally thought be produced profitably for oil mills although producing for oill mills costs more than "hagging off" the crop.

Peanuts surely have their place in agriculture. That place we must find for them and we will in the next couple of years.

That place may be the growing and harvesting of peanuts for the oil mills.

It may be the feeding of hogs up to a certain age and then hardening on corn.

It may be both hogging off peanuts and harvesting some and selling them to the oil mills.

It is one of our new problems, offering profits either way and we must work it out with hope and patience.

Why We Can't Have Cheap Money Now

Some of Reasons Why Our Farmers Cannot Get Rates Like the Western Farmers

BY E. J. BODMAN.

There is an abundance of idle money in the East. It is a problem how to get it out and earning. This eastern money is being loaned on choice Wisconsin and Iowa farms at 5 per cent. interest. This means that after paying the broker and attorney's fee, 6 per cent. money to the farmer.

Conditions are not ripe in the Central South for us to get this same Eastern money. We will have to go through the same experience that those countries have gone through before they could get low rates. We must prove ourselves first. While there are millions to lend on the Iowa and Wisconsin farms at 5 per cent. there is none to lend on our farms at this rate and but a limited amount at rates far in excess of this. On the present basis farm loans being made among us, when the fees above referred to are included, amount to about 8 per cent. and even more.

As disagreeable as these facts are, we must face the situation and plan to correct the causes just as these other states have done. A few years ago Iowa was paying high rates of interest and could secure but a limited amount of money. It is different now. In those days it was the one-crop system. The farmer paid no attention to soil building, crop rotation nor did he follow business principles.

Well Posted on South.

It is surprising to see how well posted the eastern money lender is on the Southern situation. He recognizes that much of our land is equal to the lands of the Central West; that under favorable crop conditions and long seasons that we have that more and larger crops may be produced at less cost; that live stock can be raised here much cheaper than there. He knows of these possibilities; he has the government figures on the end of his tongue; he knows our record, but states that we are not availing ourselves of the natural advantages that we possess. He knows that we are not maintaining, as we should the soil fertility through rotation of crops, the growing of cover crops or otherwise building the soils. He knows that the low yield, as reflected in the census reports is not due to soil or climate, but to the methods, but he states that as long as we are not improving our methous that our farmers' incomes amount to about one-seventh of that of the farmer of the Central West, likewise his ability to take care of his obligations is decreased; therefore, the loan is less secure and attractive.

The same is true about livestock. With conditions that make it possible to raise livestock at less figures, generally scrub is found on many of our farms.

Sumed up, he admits that we have all of the natural advantages of soil, climate, nearness to market, but we fail to grasp the opportunity.

Must Keep p The Work.

It is surprising to find how much is known about the progress we have made in the last year or more and this step forward has created a most favorable impression. If we improve ourselves this coming season and next, the influence will be marked, but we are doubted. There is a feeling that we will not follow the safe farming doctrine that has been advocated by the government this year and other years. If we rush madly into the one crop cotton habit another year we will be set back several years. It is very important that we do not slip.

The business man, the banker, should throw no obstacles in the way of the farmer in his effort to move forward. What the money lender wants, first of all is absolute safe security. He wants to know that the interest is going to be paid when it is due and the principal taken care of according to the contract. In the case of farm lands he wants to know that a safe system of farming is befollowed, a system that means the upbuilding of the soil; one where all of the eggs are not in one basket.

We are not in a position to argue that our system is the best. The props are knocked from under us when the cold figures are pulled on us. If, with no better soil and with less favorable climate conditions, the Iowa farmer is in a position to produce an income of from five to seven times greater than the Southern farmer then his system must be the best.

If we will follow the government's teaching in a farming way, we will soon be in a position to command the same credit that Iowa does in the lending market.

Let every business man and banker as well as farmer use this government service.

Prevent Horns With Caustic Soda

"In order to get the most satisfactory results from dehorning cattle," says J. S. Moore, dairy husbandman of the Mississippi A. and M. College, "use the caustic soda, or caustic potash process before the calf is ten days old." When properly applied, these methods prevent the growth of horns and not only give the animal the appearance of a natural muly, but the unpleasant task of later dehorning, is unnecessary.

The process as explained by Mr. Moore is as follows: Clip the hair closely about the spots where the horns appear and rub the clipped places with the soda or potash until the skin begins to bleed being sure to apply the medicine to every part of the horn. One application will be sufficient to prevent the growth of horns if made before the calf is ten days old. The operation causes little pain and heals quickly. The end of the stick that is held in the hand may be wrapped with cloth or paper, to protect the man who does the work.

"Practically every dairy held of any size," Mr. Moore says, "has one or more cows with bad udders, due to hooking." Dehorned animals are more contented and are better grazers than those retaining their horns, which are used more often as weapons of offense than of defense.

Don't Let Corn Get Stunted; Rules For Cultivation

By I. T. Quinn, Farm Demonstration Agent, Montgomery Co., Ala.

Now is the time for you to give your corn thorough cultivation, thus preventing any check in the growth of the plant on account of weeds or unmulched soil.

To get the best results from corn, the plant must not be subjected to unfavorable conditions from the period of germination to full development. Every opportunity, therefore, should be given for a normal vigorour growth of the plant throughout its growing period. The corn plant, if once stunted, will never recover no matter how favorable the future conditions or cultivation.

The old time sweep and scooter have about played their last role in corn cultivation. Harrows and weeders are taking their place. The first named primitive impliments are all right to will weeds and grass; but experience has taught us that getting rid of "foulness" is not the primary cause of cultivation. The most important consideration in corn cultivation, as is the case with all field plants, is conservation of moisture and a comfortable, convenient, well prepared seed bed.

To conserve moisture it is necessary for a thin mulch to be present constantly. Nothing will secure this mulch faster and better than a weeder or harrow. A thin mulch from one to two inches on top of soil will hold the moisture in the soil till the plant can make use of it.

Corn suffers more for want of moisture than it does for want of fertilizer. To hold this moisture in the soil after it once gets in there, one must practice intensive rather than extensive cultivation, shallow plowing rather than deep ditching around each row.

Shallow cultivation has always proven more favorable and practicable than deep cultivation except in rare instances. Of course if eccessive rain falls have packed the soil and kept it water soaked, deep cultivation will help to dry and areate the soil. If roots are broken the plant will produce other ro sto,but it will be at the expense of the vitality and food supply.

I am frequently asked how often corn should be cultivated. It should be cultivated often enough to keep down weeds and the top of the soil in a good loose, mulchy condition. A cultivation should always be given as soon as possible after each rain to keep the surface from running together and packing. If this is not done evaporation takes place and a great deal of the moisture which should have been used by the plant passes off into the air.

Many crops are cut short by stopping cultivation too early. If the condition of the soil permits, shallow plowing with a light harrow should be continued at least till the corn begins tasseling.

"How is your wife getting on with the housecleaning?"

"That seems unfair. We are all liable to make mistakes."

Rose Bugs and How You Can Get Rid of Them

The rose-chafer or "rose bug," as it is often called, is one of the most widely distributed and troublesome insects with which the florist or gardener has to contend.

The insects appear as long-legged beetles of a yellowish brown color, usually in the month of May. They strip all kinds of vegetables; fruits, and flowers of blossoms and foliage, and where especially plentiful do great damage. In from four to six weeks after their first appearance they leave as suddenly as they came. Rose and grape vines especially suffer from attacks of the insects, but the beetles are almost equally destructive to fruit, shade and other trees and shrubs. When the rose-chafers are especially numerous, they attack even berries, peas, beans, and nearly all garden fruits and vegetables.

Attack Chickens

Besides the damage done to vegetation, the beetles sometimes cause the death of young chickens. The chickens eat the beetles and poisoning results in the death of the chicken within 24 hours. Experiments have developed the fact that from fifteen to twenty beetles are sufficient to kill a week-old chick.

The character of the soil bears an important relation to the appearance of the rose-chafer. Light sandy regions are greatly preferred as a breeding ground, while clay lands, unless near sandy soil, are seldom troubled.

Methods Of Control

A thoroughly effective remedy against this insect is yet to be discovered. Any application that may be made is unsuccessful unless applied almost continuously, for as often as the beetles on a plant are killed, others arise from the ground or from neighboring fields to take their place. Many so-called "sure" remedies, including compounds of copper, lime, kerosene, and tobacco, have failed to give results when put to a rigid test. Whatever practice of a remedial nature is undertaken, whether collecting or spraying, it should be begun at the first onset of the insects' attack and continued until they disappear. The work should not be confined entirely to those useful plants which it is particularly desired to preserve, as the insects attack many other plants.

Ornamental plants that are hardy may possibly be protected by a heavy application of arsenate of lead, using 4 to 5 pounds to 50 gallons of either water or Bordeaux mixture. Very thorough applications should be made when the insects first appear, and repeated applications should be made as found necessary.

For the destruction of the beetles on fruit trees, as peach, apple, etc., arsenate of lead should be used, preferably in a fungicide, such as Bordeaux mixture, when the beetles first appear. It should be applied at the strength of 4 to 5 pounds to 50 gallons of spray. In spraying peaches and other stone fruits the arsenical should be used in the selfboiled lime-sulphur wash or in 50 gallons of water which contains lime wash made from slaking 3 or 4 pounds of good stone lime. Repeated applications may be necessary, depending upon the extent of reinfestation of the trees by newly emerged beetles, or those from other sources.

The rose-chafer is extremely sensitive to disturbance when it is in the pupal stage in the soil. Since both larvae and beetles are very tenticious of life, the pupal stage appears to furnish the most vulnerable period of attack and large numbers may be destroyed by simply stirring the breeding grounds at the proper time to a depth of 3 or more inches. In the South the operation should be commenced in May. All ground which might serve as a breeding place should be plowed and harrowed at the proper time, The least possible light sandy soil should be left in sod, only the heaviest land being used for grass.

1,000 Hogs Vaccinated and Not One Hog Lost

By J. P. Wilson, U.S. County Demonstration Agent

Covington county is at this time undergoing a radical change in farming conditions. The arrival of the boll weevil with the fatal results to the cotton crop in this section brought about the erection of the packing plant at Andalusia, and this plant demanded the change from cotton farming to diversified farming in connection with the raising of live stock.

Inoculate Hogs for Farmers.

Realizing the fact that immediate assistance was imperative, so as to give the farmers of this county expert advice as to crop rotation and as to what crops should be planted in order to furnish an all-year pasture for hogs, the Court of County Commissioners employed a farm demonstration agent whose duties in addition to the usual duties of a demonstration agent, were to inoculate hogs against hog cholera free of charge to the farmers and to consult with them about any problems arising from the change in their farming methods.

Not tOne Hog Lost.

Since my employment as farm demonstration agent of Covington county, I have vaccinated with the "simultaneous" treatment over 1,000 hogs, without the loss of a single hog from this treatment. This work has been done in a period of about forty days, and tends to show the keen interest that the farmers are taking in raising their live stock under the progressive methods. The most popular idea prevalent among the farmers at this time is to use boars crossing with native sows and to grade up their herds in that way. There are many farms in this county being converted into stock farms at this time to supply the local demand for registered hogs.

More Dipping Vats.

Many farmers are installing dipping vats on their farms for the purpose of eradicating the cattle tick, the vats in most instances being the approved cement vat, built under the government specifications.

Less Cotton.

Very little cotton is being planted and when planted at all in proportions of about four acres to the plow. Forage crops and grain crops are predominating and on the majority of the farms no cotton at all is being planted.

One of the most promising indications of the unlimited success of the live stock farming in Covington county is the fact that the farmers are unanimous in adopting the most advanced methods and have manifested the keenest interest in any matter that promises to better their farming methods.

Mr. W. P. Talbot, manager of Tameny Hall, a fishing resort, Geneva, Ala., writes: "I have tried Calomel, Quinine and other remedies for malaria and billiousness without effect; tried Vega-Cal" (vegetable calomel), which gave relief. Think it a God-send to the people." "Vege-Cal" is sold and guaranteed by all drug stores, 25 and 50c. per bottle.

FARMERS OWN THIS TOWN AND THEY RUN IT

The town of Fernald in the heart of the Iowa prairies, is one of the most novel communities in the United States. There is no bickering between townspeople and residents in that community and the farmers for miles around feel perfectly free to go to town without wearing starched shirts and collars. There is an air of mutual interest between city and country that would gladden the hearts of the rural expert. The reason for this is that the farmers built and own the town themselves. They control the company store, the bank, grain elevator, the saw mill and other small community industries in the small village.

Fernald was built 14 years ago and has a population of 100 people. It will not grow in number because of the nearness of other towns. But it is bound to prosper for the farmers for many miles around do all their trading in the community center.

Fernald was founded by the farmers in order to avoid making long hauls in delivering their crops to the railroad. The Farmers' Grain Company erected a line elevator and placed H. S. Fleagle in charge as manager. Last year the elevator yielded a profit of $5,000.

The Farmers' Lumber Company was organized by four tillers of the soil with a capital of $6,400. Mr. Fleagle also manages this concern and its $10,000 stock. The Farmers' Mercantile Company, was then founded after a period of competition with local dealers.

The town's founders then established the Farmers' Savings Bank with a capital of $10,000. The deposits have reached the $40,000 mark in three years. Mr. Fleagle's ability for management was recognized a third time when he was made vice-president of the bank.

Fernald is in Richland township in Story county, where extensive use of tile has converted the ordinary prairie land into some of the most valuable farms in Iowa.

TWELVE HUNDRED BABIES DIED

ENORMOUS LOSS OF LIFE IN LARGE CITIES.

Twelve hundred and ten babies died in the city of St. Louis in 1915 and half of the deaths were caused by ignorance on the part of those who had the care of them.

This is the startling statement made in an editorial of The St. Louis Post-Dispatch in issue of March 2, 1916, and continuing, the paper said that much of that ignorance can be removed.

Mothers can learn without cost how to care for their children by writing for a copy of a booklet that has just been published and called "Healthy Babies,' says the National Druggist, published in St. Louis, in the March, 1916 issue, and this journal says this booklet can not fail to remove much of that ignorance and hence will tend to save many human lives.

It gives suggestions to prevent underfeeding and overfeeding, when and how to wean the baby, the care of the bottle, how to avoid the petty troubles like chafing, prickly heat and numerous other subjects are treated in such manner as to be easily understood by every mother.

Any mother can secure a copy of this valuable booklet free by writing the C. J. Moffett Medicine Co., 1315 1st Avenue, Columbus, Ga. The Moffett Company are the manufacturers of "Teethina," a preparation for children that has had a most successful sale since 1877. Write for a copy today, a postal card will do.

SUMMER SCHOOL FOR COUNTY AGENTS

In order that a supply of trained men and women may be available to fill the many positions now opening in county farm demonstration and home economics work the Mishissippi A and M College will make a new departure in summer school work in the South this year and give a practical course for the training of county agents.

According to Registrar Hugh Critz, the demand for these agents greatly exceeds the supply, and by having the men who are a tthe head of the various lines of extension work give a thorough training course he hopes to secure enough competent men to fill the positions now opening.

In this connection Dr. J. C. Robert, director of the summer school has just issued the following announcement: A short course in agriculture will be given for farmers and graduates of agricultural colleges who wish to qualify themselves as county agricultural extension agents. These lectures will be given by the agricultural faculty of the A. and M. College, assisted by Extension director, E. R. Lloyd, and Messrs. Wilson Cobb, Garner, Willis and McInnis of the extension department members of the state experiment station staff, and other prominent agricultural speakers. The lectures will be supplemented by such practical work as the construction of terraces and tile drains; the building of silos; the operating of a cooperative egg selling association; the practical workings of a cooperative creamery where the milk of two thousand cows as placed on the market; the spraying of injurious insects and fungus of disease; the examining of types and breeds of farm animals; the vaccinating of animals; the treating of diseases of live stock the studying of agricultural experiments now in progress on the college farm and state experiment station.

Instruction in home economics will also be given under the supervision of the state extension department, directed by Miss Susie V. Powell and her district agents. This work is given with view of helping teachers, housewives and women who wish to prepare themselves to become county extension agents in home economics.

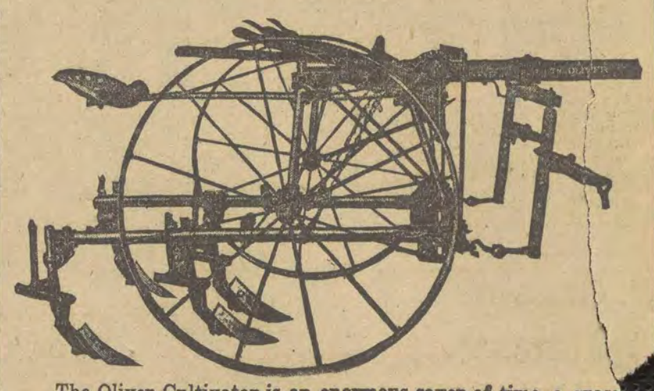
HUMOR AND PATHOS OF LIFE OF THE MAN ON THE ROAD

Well Known Traveling Man Tells of Some Unusual Experiences of His Life

The life of a traveling man is one unceasing round of touch and go. His sample trunk meets you at every turn. He it is who carries commerce into every corner of the world. He rides in or on anything that moves and will get him to where he wants to go. He sleeps sometimes and sometimes he doesn't. Sometimes he gets his meals regularly but more often he has to put up with anything he can get to eat. This way of living tells on even the strongest constitution in time, for Nature exacts heavy penalties for the disregard of her laws.



Mr. Charles M. Campbell, whose office is at No. 5 Potter Bldg., Birmingham, Ala., and who is the State representative for America's largest shoe manufacturers, has led about as active a life as any man could. His ripe experience leads many a "cub" salesman to seek his advice, which is always cheerfully given.

Just now Mr. Campbell is telling a story which is more about medicine than shoes. This is because of his truly wonderful recovery from Indigestion—the Traveling Man's "nemesis." "It all happened on the train between Montgomery and here," says Mr. Campbell. "I was coming home for the week-end, and met Mr. McDonald of The Sul-Ferro-Sol Company. I got to telling him how dreadfully I suffered with indigestion, perotinitis or appendicitis, or maybe all three together. Mr. McDonald handed me a bottle of Sul-Ferro-Sol and told me to take it according to directions and if it did not cure me he would give me a valuable present. I naturally did as I was told, for I had visions of the present. But from the very beginning I could see that I was improving. I now keep two bottles on hand, one in my grip and the other at home; and I want to say that I positively know that I will soon be entirely cured.

"I had such violent indigestion pains, no matter how carefully I ate, that I could only sleep about half the time. Now I am just about well and eat anything I want. I have induced several of my associates to take this remedy, and if any one will step into my office I will gladly give them the testimony of myself and associates. I am deeply indebted to The Sul-Ferro-Sol Company for my recovery and they can count me as one of their strongest friends."

St. Clair Farmers Raising Feed and Foodstuffs

By John Yarbrough, U. S. County Demonstration Agent

Not having noticed any news item in your columns from St. Clair county I will tell you what our farmers are doing.

They are doing more and better ork than ever before, in fact the rmers of this county are nearly all ing improved farm implements, and e putting their ground in the best of ndition before planting.

There will be less cotton planted han has been at any time previous to he present year; more attention is being paid to other crops than ever before. This county has never been an all cotton county, and the average farmer, while not a rich man, is living at home on what he produces at home. This class of farmers are in the majority in this county. This being the case I am of the opinion that our people will not be as badly hurt by the boll weevil as where their whole dependence is on a cotton crop.

We have the boll weevil with us and I have been doing all I could to put our people on their guard concerning this little pest. I fear that there are some tenant farmers in the county that will allow themselves to be caught should the weevi prove to be as numerous as it is possible for them to be if weather conditions are favorable through June and July for their breeding.

The weevils got to be very numerous the last two weeks before the freeze came in November, and I have no doubt but what there will be plenty of them under favorable conditions to hurt the crop very much. This is true as to the valleys of Coosa, Cahauba, Beaver and Canoe, which covers more than half of our best farm lands.

PROBABLY WAITING.

"You're a swindler," exclaimed Mrs. Gobb, as she entered the bird store. "You're worse than a highway robber. You ought to be ashamed of yourself to cheat a poor, innocent woman the way you did. That parrot I bought of you last week is a fraud. You said it was a fluent talker and you charged me a big price for him, too, and that bird hasn't said a single word since I got him. Not one word. Do you hear me? Not—one—single—word!"

To Farmers of Boll Weevil Sections:-

THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG will do effective and rapid work in brushing to the ground boll weevils and punctured squares.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is a strong, practical and economical device for getting rid of the most weevils in the QUICKEST TIME and the CHEAPEST WAY. It is used and highly recommended by some of the most successful farmers in Mississippi and Alabama.

THE DRAG DESCRIBED

The Drag is a steel rod that holds a light durable chain, the rod and chain being attached to the beam of the plow stock with a casting arranged so as to be adjustable to the size of plants at the time for plowing. The rod is placed at an angle to the beam and as the plow proceeds down the row the rod bends down the plant over towards the middle between the rows and the chain agitates the plant sufficiently to cause the Weevil and infested squares to fall off into the middle of the row. The attachment is reversible as well as adjustable, up and down, and can be used on either right or left side of the plow below or above the beam.

We do not desire to create the impression among farmers that any advice will prevent all the damage the weevil usually causes, unless the approved measures for control be carefully followed.

Write us so we can take care of your order before the growing season starts.

KNOWING the conditions in your harvest fields as well as you do, it will be an easy matter for you to pick out the right grain binder for your work. Note the details of construction—How is the main frame built? Is the main wheel large enough and wide enough to give plenty of traction? Is there a simple means provided for quickly and easily taking the strain off the canvas at night, or when the binder is out of use? Are ball and roller bearings provided to lighten the draft? Will the elevator take care of both light and heavy stands of grain? Is the knotter simple and sure in action? These are the things that count.

In the IHC binders—Champion, Deering, McCormick, Milwaukee, Osborne and Plano—these things and all other details are taken care of. Own an I H C binder.

Red Polls--Dual Purpose Breed--Their Origin, Qualities and Progress

By H. A. Martin, Secretary Red Polled Cattle Club

In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, on the eastern coast of England ,there has existed from the earliest recollection of man a polled breed of cattle. These cattle were bred for generations on those old English estates, without any infusion of foreign blood.

So when the English herd book was founded in 1875 they had foundation stock, families of which had been kept pure for ages.

The first regular importation to the United States was in 1872, Mr. G. F. Taber of New York, bringing over a bull and three heifers.

Dual Purpose Breed.

For the next ten years a few importations were made, and from 1885 to about 1900 large numbers were imported. Since 1900 few have been imported as the numbers in this country have increased to a point where the demand could be handled with home bred animals.

Red Polls are a strictly dual-purpose breed, the breeders have been paying careful attention to the breeding and development along these lines.

About nine years ago the breeders adopted a standard and scale of points for the breed. Since adoption of this standard and scale of points vast improvement has been noted in the uniform selection of show and breeding animals.

Milk Tests.

Since 1908 the association has carried on a club milk test.

This test is conducted under ordinary farm conditions, the same as may be found on any farm. On December 31, 1909, at the completion of the first year, twelve cows finished their yearly records. The cow winning first place produced 11,889.5 pounds of milk and 510.62 pounds of butter fat. The number of entries has increased each year and for this year, 1916, there are 75 or more entries. Individual records have increased; the cow winning first place in 1915, produced 16,598.4 pounds of milk and 707.24 pounds of butter fat.

Remarkable Record.

For 1916, while the records are not complete, we find one cow that has finished with the remarkable record of 20,280.6 pounds of milk and 891.58 pounds of butter fat equal to 1,070 pounds of commercial butter. This cow making this record is not only a great producer but a great individual weighing 1,750 pounds at finish of test.

This was not a forced record as this cow ran in the dairy with the other cows, was out on pasture, drank out of the river and had just good care. She also is a regular breeder being five months along in calf at finish of this record.

One very strong feature of Red Polls is the fact that these cows are regular producers, going on year after year. For example, the cow No. 28,991, Jean DuLuth Pear, winner of club test in 1915, with a production of 16,598.4 pounds of milk and 707.24 pounds of fat, had just been on official test in 1914 making a record of 13,538.4 pounds of milk and 546.34 pounds of fat.

This cow's dam, No 24,888 Pear, has a record of 2,202.2 pounds of fat produced in five consecutive years, and still producing over 400 pounds of fat per year and breeding regular.

Slaughter Tests.

I nthe slaughter tests made at the International exposition at Chicago, Red Polled steers have been shown for nine or ten years in competition with all breeds proclaiming beef tendencies.

For competitors they not only had the leading breeders of the different beef breeds, but returns from the Agricultural Colleges of the states of Iowa, Indiana, Ohio. Missouri, Minnesota, Kansas and Nebraska.

In many cases the Red Poll entries were only defeated for first place by entries from the agricultural colleges.

Advanced Registry.

In 1911 a cocmittee was appointed to formulate rules for an Advanced Registry. A bull to be eligible to Advanced Registry must be the sire of two or more daughters which have been admitted to Advanced Registry. He must also scale at least eighty points of the official scale of points and weigh not less than 1,800 pounds.

A cow to be eligible to Advanced Registry must scale eighty points of the official scale of points and not weigh less than 1,100 pounds with a production of not less than 6,000 pounds of milk and 300 pounds of butter fat in twelve consecutive months.

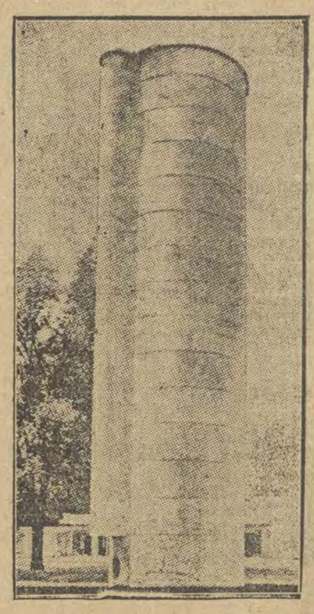
With rigid individual inspection and a minimum entry production, which is high enough to show a profitable production, these animals which are admitted to Advanced Registry possess merit of high degree.

The past few years the showing of Red Polls at our leading fairs, has been of such a nature that the numbers have been increasing, the quality excellent, and a marked uniformity of type has been noted.

For Dairy and Beef.

The demand for Red Polls is very brisk, breeders reporting good sales from all sections. They are a breed which fill the wants of a large number of farmers.

Red Polled cows produce a profit from the dairy for those that wish to follow this line of farming, and if only a limited number are wanted in the dairy the balance can be used for producing young stock. The steers are good growers, developing at an early age. The cows when dry put on flesh quickly making a fine butcher's carcass.



With the steady increase in land values, it is found in many cases a cow cannot be profitably kept on high priced land for just the calf she raises. Here Red Polls help fill the needs of the farmer as they will produce a profit above the cost of rearing the calves.

Then we have many cases where the difficulty of getting the necessary help to do the milking is a great factor. Many of our dairy farmers could carry larger number of cows if they could get help to milk them. Here again this breed comes in to fill a needed want. He can select the best and milk what he has help to; the balance can be used to rear the calves, which at the present high prices are a great source of revenue at a low cost of work to produce them.

"Boll Weevil" Burley Is In Alabama to Help Beat Cotton Destroyer

"Boll Weevil" Burley, of Louisiana, is now in the trade territory of Montgomery, Alabama, helping the people to make a crop of cotton despite the infestation of the boll weevil.

His coming into this ball weevil territory is a lesson of what any good-sized community can do in sections that already have the boll weevil or in sections that will soon have the weevil. This year the weevil will doubtless spread its accustomed fifty miles into new territory and it will not be a great while until it will have covered the entire cotton belt.

The business men of Montgomery said among themselves. "Let's bring in a cotton farmer who has made cotton successfully in heavily infested boll weevil territory. Let's get him to help our farmers make cotton by the methods that he makes cotton by in territory where the boll weevil has been for several years."

The United States Department of Agriculture promised to cooperate with the Montgomery Chamber of Commerce men in this work if the right man could be secured. The right man was found in "Boll Weevil" Burley, Louisiana cotton farmer, who had beat the weevil and whose neighbors had beat the weevil also. So, Mr. Burley was secured for work in the Montgomery trade territory during the cotton growing season, the Montgomery business men paying him a salary and the United States Department of Agriculture paying his traveling expenses.

"Boll Weevil" Burley is now on the job out in the cotton fields and at the roadsides in the weevil infested districts. He comes to the people with confidence and with the methods of success. In his territory in Louisiana the weevil infestation was alarmingly heavy. The first year of heavy infestation, 1908, many of the farmers plowed up their cotton and planted corn in its place. Mr. Burley was one of the farmers to plow up his cotton and plant corn.

But that was the last time he did such a thing for he and his neighbors found the way to make a good crop of cotton despite the weevil. Since then many of them have made more cotton than they did before the weevil came, although, of coarse, they also raise far more feeds and foodstuffs than they did before. As a matter of fact, Louisiana was the first of the states in the Cotton Belt to begin diversification and livestock raising on a broad scale.

And so Mr. Burley comes, for the cotton growing season, into Alabama to show farmers who raise cotton that they can make cotton despite the weevil just as they have made it and are making it in Louisiana.

Mr. Burley's first maxim is personal supervision and personal interest. Tenants, left to themselves, he shows beyond question of a doubt, will not successfully combat the weevil. The owner of the farm must be on it himself or have a competent manager who will give personal supervision to the boll weevil fight. Telephone management has not been effective against the weevil anywhere.

The next necessity in the making of a good crop under weevil conditions is the picking of the weevils that have been left over from the winter. Right here is where the farmers in Mr. Burley's territory made such a successful fight—they picked the over wintered weevils and thus cut down as much as possible the crop of fresh weevils.

Then when the spring-hatched weevils did come on and the squares began to drop they went into gathering up squares with all their might and destroying them. Mr. Burley and his neighbors the first year were very much discouraged for the squares just kept dropping and dropping and it looked like a hopeless job. But they kept on picking and picking squares and destroying them and along in July they had won out and the new squares stuck and a crop was made. Since then the farmers have made good crops every year by picking as many of the over-wintered weevils as possible and then picking the fallen squares from the time they begin to fall until the crop is made.

Mr. Burley shows that the crop must be gone over at least once a week for punctured squares and that this once-a-week gathering of the squares must be continued without let-up right up until the crop is made.

Of course, in Louisiana as in all sections where the weevil hits, the acreage per mule, is greatly decreased and the farm-owning farmers and the tenants make their own meat and feeds and their own foodstuffs. Hogs, corn, soy beans and velvet beans, oats a garden and a cow have in Louisiana—they must have here—a vital, part in making good with cotton in weevil infested country.

MR. SAMUEL E. BARNES of Knoxville, Tenn., the author of the book, through long study of the problems of the Southern farmer and planter, has been able to point the way to a steady cash income and greater profits.

He doesn't theorize: he talks facts.

He says that what the South needs is more dairy cows.

He points out the advantages of a cream crop that brings in cash every week or month, along with a cotton or tobacco crop that brings income only once a year—or sometimes not at all.

He tells what kind of cows to get, how to feed and care for them, and how to market their product.

Some Live Farmers Who Are Doing Things

These pictures were taken on one of the farms of Spann Brothers four miles west of Dothan, Ala. They have three hundred acres in oats without a grain of fertilizer under them and it is estimated the crop will be at least 12,000 bushels.

Spann Brothers are farming according to the most improved methods. Their farms are among the finest in Southeast Alabama, and the crops this year will be mainly oats, peanuts, corn, velvet beans and hogs. Their farms are mostly stumped and the grain will be harvested with reaper and binder and traction engine.

It would seem that the land in Houston county will produce practically every southern crop where the necessary preparation is made. Recently we had occasion to pass the place of Mr. Fair Morgan's, a few miles northeast of Dothan, and noticed a splendid field of red top clover and alfalfa, both growing luxuriantly.

We met another one of the prominent farmers of this county recently—Mr. J. J. Whidden, and in conversation he stated he would have only a small acreage in cotton this year, that his crops would consist mainly of peanuts, corn, oats, peas, velvet beans, sugar cane, etc.

Mr. H. Watford, another prominent farmer at Dothan, will have a big bunch of packing house hogs this fall and winter, if present indications count for anything.

A drive along the big, graded roads of Houston county shows plainly the big revolution that has taken place in farm methods in this section during the past two years. On every side one can see corn, oats, peanuts, peas, velvet beans and hogs. It spells prosperity and independence for the white farmers who people this section almost entirely.

WHAT A TOURIST HEARD.

A tourist in Ireland came upon a couple of men "in holts" rolling on the road. The man on top was pummeling the other within an inch of his life. The traveler looked on for a moment in silence and then intervened.

"I say, it's an infernal shame to strike a man when he's down."

"Faith, if yez knew all the trouble I had gittin' him down, yez wouldn't be talkin' like that," came the intermittent reply.

ON THE SAFE SIDE.

Jones and his wife were seated at the dining room table perusing the evening papers when the doorbell rang. Jones arose to answer it, when his wife said:

"Let me hide those umbrellas before you let them in."

"Why, do you think somebody will steal them?" asked Jones.

"No," replied the wife. "Some one might recognize them.'

Some Things That Will Help Us Women to Have More For What We Do

Maybe You Know of Other Things. If So Write Us Please

The editor of this farm paper accedes to "woman's rights" to the extent of permitting us in it a corner for our very own.

We expect to make this corner one of benefit to the women on the farms and invite letters from any who choose to write us what they have done and are doing, as the farm is no longer the particular possession of man, a great portion of the hard work and a greater share of self-sacrifice being the woman's lot, though few city people who purchase chickens, eggs and butter each week think of the woman who gives hours and days of care and worry to the production of these commodities.

Care of cows, milking and churning, feeding chickens, gathering eggs, setting hens and then nursing the sick and crippled of the hatch, running out to house them from a sudden storm or frosty night and countless other little worries that would land the average man in Tuscaloosa by night, are the common every day lot of the farm-wife (added to her many duties of house and children,) yet the man who takes a load to town talks of what splendid butter "I" have and what fine chickens and eggs "I" raise and not a word of what "my wife" did.

I am a believer in each one getting the credit they deserve. The garden is another care of the women, and as potatoes are coming up to sufficient size for bugs to attack them I want to say that picking off the bugs beats any spray you can use, early morning being the best time to find them. The general idea of looking for them on the leaves I find from experience is all wrong, but you will find most of them in the earth at the root of the plant. Just pull away any little clod or cake of dirt there and you will find Mr. and Mrs. Potato Bug snugly curled up together like a lay boarder on Sunday morning. I have found as many as six at the root when there was only one on the leaves. But always look for two if you find one ,as they travel in pairs and if you find one you're bound to find his mate near at hand.

As the sun grows warmer they come up on the plant. The under side of each leaf should be inspected for the bright yellow eggs, but don't pull the leaves off as they are the lungs of the plant, but with your finger tips tear off the portion of the leaf holding the eggs, though they may be just crushed on the leaf, which will kill them. Don't throw them on the ground. Have a bucket with just a little water in it and drop both bugs and eggs in it to keep them from crawling out, and when all are picked strain off water and burn bugs and leaves. Potato bugs will not drown. I've left them in water three days to find out if they would. Nothing but ducks will eat them.

A cheap but good mixture to sift on potato vines is made of one pound of paris green with ten pounds of flour mixed well together and sifted on the vines at early morning while still wet with dew or after a rain, so the powder will cling. Perforate the bottom of a tin can with nail holes to sift it on with and keep mixture out of reach as it is poison.

No Time for 'Spring Fever."

Now is of all times (except harvest the busiest of the year for farmers, getting ground ready, crops planted, etc., but the woman's share of attention should be given to things in her own sphere and preparing for chickens is one of them; the big coop and the "biddie" coops whitewashed and nest bottoms sprinkled with lime before putting in new nesting. Pine straw makes good nests and the contrast of big white eggs against the dark straw make gathering a pleasure in the afternoon. Whitewash the roosts and ladders also, for chickens like clean quarters as well as you and more of them will come to the coop to lay, if you keep it free from mites and lice. Now it doesn't take any great amount of brain or muscle to whitewash, so don't sit down and wait for some of the "men folks" to rob the field of their time to do it for you, but get out and do it yourself.

I am a woman, and expect to paint my house (5 rooms and hall) as I believe I can do whatever anyone else of my strength can do, be it man or woman, and after all the keynote to success is faith in one's self, for a jelly fish disposition has never won anything yet.

Don't Wait for Men.

Do things! All too long have women awaited man's pleasure to fix this or that because they have never tried, so now get your hammer and nails and fix it yourself; at least try it and maybe you'll surprise yourself with some talent you never guessed you had.

Of course where there is only one pair of hands to do everything and keep the house as beautifully clean as most country homes are kept, she cannot accomplish much outside work, but often there are several daughters old enough to do many things to help.

The Child's Work.

Each child should have its duties even though they be slight, according to size and age, thus, my three-year-old son helps me gather chips at the woodpile and often brings in kitchen stove wood when I want a few sticks in a hurry, and I always take time to thank him and tell him how much help he is to mother. You can do the same.

Remember it will appear every two weeks and is given over to woman and her perplexities and successes. At least drop us a few lines, if only a postal, to tell us what you think of starting such a column.

FERTILIZER FACTS No. 30

Your Growing Crops Like a Growing Child Need Feeding Often

Now that your growing crops are above ground, and going good, give them a helping hand, toward maturity, by a second and even a third application of fertilizer. In the case of cotton it will not only increase the yield and improve the quality of lint and seed but will hasten its maturity and beat the boll weevil.

With corn and other crops, past experience has shown this method of cultivation is not only expedient but necessary to get the best yields possible. The plant food placed in the soil previous to planting will be largely consumed by the plant by June. It is time then to feed them again and help them grow. It is not too late now to overcome a bad start by a second and then a third application of fertilizer.

Write to-day for revised Bulletin No. 11 on "SECOND AND THIRD APPLICATION OF FERTILIZERS." Also Bulletin No. 9, on "FIGHT THE BOLL WEEVIL WITH FERTILIZER."

The Horse Comes Back--Golden Opportunity for Breeders Now

By the Famous "Marque"

There never was a period when breeding horses offered such attractions as it does right at this present time.

Unlike the days of the "big slump," of inflated values and over-production does not obtain. Rather, the very opposite is true, for manifestly we are not producing enough horses. Do not listen to the pessimistic outbursts of those who say that there is no longer a demand for the "by-product"--meaning such horses as proved inadequate for racing purposes, but could be sold for road use. Aside from a very few top-notch road, show and carriage horses the by-product was always cheap, and they bring little less today for business purposes--light work and delivery wagon usage, etc.-- than they used to bring fifteen years ago. And if you happen to breed a high-class show or saddle horse (walk-trot-and-canter), you can dispose of them at figures that were never higher. Just ask the show horse men and they will tell you that their sort of horses are harder to find than ever before.

Harness Racing Wins

So popular has harness racing become that the day is not far distant when no entrance fees will be charged by racing associations. Recently I attended a meeting of the officials of the American Association of Fairs and Expositions, in which a vast amount of discussion was the order anent the fairs' best drawing card. With a single exception these fair experts were unanimous in their recognition of harness racing as their most attractive offering to their patrons. They have tried every manner of outdoor "shows" and "thrillers," and they agree that harness racing is the one unfailing attraction that draws best. Sometimes I thing the very fact that so many people no longer drive horses makes them all the more eager to see them in contests of speed. Horse love is a heritage tracing its origin back to the pre-historic era, when man first made the horse his helpmate and companion.

Man Loves The Horse

There simply isn't a chance of "breeding out" this inherited love for horses in one generation--no, not in ten or a hundred of them, for it is a growth of thousands of years' existence. We are provided with the best possible evidence of this fact by the flocks of automobiles which bring thousands of visitors to our race meetings and fairs. In fact, in reckoning the loss to our industry occasioned by the advent of automobiles, I figure that the damage has been compensated for the vast improvement in attendance to the races that they have brought about. Each year the competition among secretaries and track managers to fill their races becomes stronger, and they will very shortly be forced into making liberal concessions in order to secure entries. Then too, with additional attendance and gate receipts, associations can afford to be liberal with campaigners. The day is coming when no entrance will be charged by fair associations, and this will more than double the price of horses.

Purses In Show Classes

And there is still another favorable feature to be noted, viz., the disposition to give good purses for horses eligible to slow classes, thus giving our second rate trotters and pacers an opportunity to earn money. Numerous managers are following this plan, and with marked success, for not only do these slow-class events draw good fields, but they are just as liable to provide a real contest as are the faster classes--the public wants to see a contest regardless of the class of horses competing or the time made. Fast time, wit the winner outclassing his field, no longer means anything to race-goers their desire being for close, tight finishes.

Demand From Europe

There never before was a time when breeding offered such opportunities for the reasons that I have outlined, and for others which I will give. For instance, the European war has taken out of the country 500,000 light horses; the horse stock of Europe has suffered losses in ratio to the human casualties; after the conclusion of the war this horse stock must be replenished. The American trotter has already gained the highest altitude of popularity in Italy, Austria and Russia, and these countries will then demand from us many horses. The wealthy class always profits as the result of war, and it is this class in the countries named that have always been our patrons. So, instead of being short of funds with which to purchase our horses, our foreign patrons wil be better off financially than before the war began.

Great Opportunity Now

Leaving out the European proposition, there never was a period in the history of the business when good racing material was as high as it now it. It's true that one can no longer sell pedigrees as in the old days-- but if you have a good race horse of any class you can get all or more than he or she is worth. As for the top-notch horses, they are "up in the sky". Just try to purchase a crack prospect and see what valuation the owner puts on his steed, if you want to realize what prices are!

You no longer have to send your mares to distant points in order to breed them to high-class stallions. Splendid sons of all of the great sires are accessible to breeders in practically every section of America. The fees of these stallions are reasonable, and mares can be kept at the expense of from $50 to $75 per year, so you see breeding involves only a minimum expense.

HOUSE CLEANING

BY WALT MASON.

I am seated in the cowshed, for my energetic spouse, with her mops and such appliances, is busy cleaning house.

I'm in melancholy exile, till her grewsome task is done; I am seated in the cowshed—other refuge have I none. Oh, the annual house-cleaning—who invented such a scheme? There are soapsuds in the parlor and the hall is full of steam; there are pools of liquid water scattered over all the floors, and the womenfolk are scrubbing all the windows and the doors.

When the soapfest isn't going, I've some standing in my home; I'm as bossy and important as a senator of Rome ,and the women pay attention to the pregnant things I say, and I seem the fount of wisdom when my larynx is in play. In my little stucco mansion I'm the giver of the laws, I'm expounder of the statutes, just as Colonel Moses was.

But when spring again is with us, after winter's three-months' souse, and the womenfolk get busy at their cleaning of the house, I the legal lord and master, much resemble twenty cents, and this needs no explanation to the mob of married gents. I am banished from the parlor, I am exiled from my den. till they done with suds and water I can't use the house again.

I am seated in the cowshed, eating cold and clammy beans, and I'm sighing for my slippers and my pipe and magazines. And the cow is looking at me, as she chews the wholesome hay; being dumb, she cannot prattle, but her actions seem to say, "Oh, such language as you're using every moral critter scorns, and your pyrotechnic cusswords give me fantods in my horns!"

Not every fly that comes along is carrying disease germs but many of them are and you can't tell which is which. Take no chances—swat all.

10 Per Cent Pofit a Year With Sheep

In our last issue I notice a very interting letter, from Mr. Swearingenf Shorter, Alabama, giving his expejnce and success with the South downsheep. I am taking advantage of yourinvitation to sheep owners to writ of their success with sheep.

I tarted to raising sheep about twel years ago and bought a bunc of piney woods scrub yews and crossed them on a pure bred Southdown buck. I have changed the buc each year and have stuck to the Southdown as I believe them best adapted to our section. Every year during this time, I have picked, from my flock, the smoothest and best shaped yew lambs and have sold sold the old yews until I got the bunch to about one hundred in number, and have followed this method of selecting best yew lambs each year and, as a consequence of this care in selection. I now have ewes that would be hard to tell from the pure bred Southdown.

During the time I have raised sheep I have never been troubled with disease of any kind anhd I believe this freedom from the dreaded stomach worm and other diseases is due to my keeping my bunch small and changing them often from one pasture to another. I don't think that it is well to have too many sheep together and I believe that a bunch of one hundred good sheep is more profitable than a larger bunch, for if crowded there will almost sure to be disease among them. We have good range for sheep through this section, and they do well the year around without other feed. Our pastures are fine most of the time with bermuda grass, white clover, lespedeza, black medic(bur clover and a number of common grasses and my sheep have the range of them all as the different clovers and grasses come.

During the lambing season I generally feed them a small ration of cotton seed and velvet beans, but only for a short time. We have an bundance of good clean water in our pastures and I believe this to be a big asset in raising any kind of live stock. After, the oat crop is cut I run the sheep on these lands and in late fall after crops are gathered they have the open range. Black medic comes very early in the spring and is spreading rapidly through this section without our having to see it. Sheep are very fond of this clover and do well on it.

Our worst enemy in raising sheep in this section is the cur dog but we hope to eradicate this pest in the next few years.

My small success with sheep has convinced me that there is more net profit in a small bunch of sheep, handled as I have outlined, than any other live stock and it is strange to me why more Southern farmers don't raise them. We have lambs on this date and will dress thirty pounds or better and I can sell every one at a good round profit; in fact my sheep have paid me about one hundred per cent. each year, and the cost of maintenance is almost nothing.

I agree with Mr. Swearingen in his praise of sheep in general and Southdowns in particular and believe every diversified farmer should have a small bunch of them, and if handled as I have endeavored to outline I feel sure that the raising of sheep will prove more profitable. than any other livestock.

It is truly an A-1 one hundred per cent. investment.

Why You Should Buy A McCormick Mower

The McCormick Mower is known for its simplicity and durability, wherever hay is grown. There are several good reasons why the experienced farmer selects a mowing machine that is simple in construction. The McCormick has fewer parts than any other mower. Its flexibility makes it more acceptable than any other because it is adapted to, the irregularities of the field. Its durability makes it the most practical mower on the market, because it will stand the test. The McCormick will clean your field more nearly than any other mower. We expect to have a large call for this mower this year, so if you want yours delivered on time, place your order with us early. Call or write

CAN EVERYTHING WE CAN CAN

Every home in the South that has a good-sized garden can have plenty to eat throughout the winter.

Cans do not cost a great deal, despite the war, and how many products there are that we can put up in cans and jelly glasses for winter use. The cold-pack system of canning has taken away the former terrors of a boiling hot kitchen in summer and gives all our girls, as well as our women, a chance to can the products of the garden and orchard for use by the family during the winter.

Let's can everything we can this summer. If we can't can everything that is produced on the place let's give some of it to the neighbors for them to can. Why should vegetables and fruits be wasted when they can be put up at a small cost for family use all through the winter?

These Are Talladega Boys---Has Your County Got Boys Like Them?

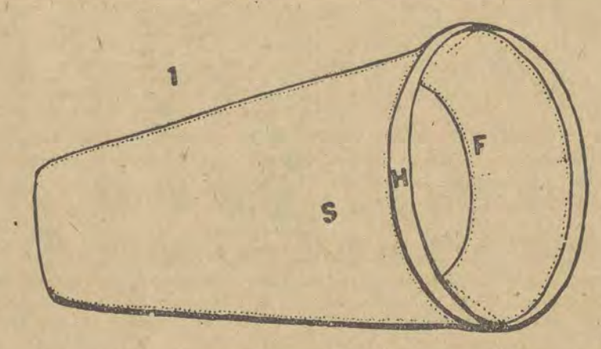
These young farmers not long since attended a club meeting in Talladega where they were given diplomas of honor for their work. You can see by their faces that they are much pleased at the recognition given their efforts.

Now Talladega is given some pointers to other sections in its interest in its farmer boys. Right from the first Talladega had one of the most active corn clubs in the Central South. The county later organiged a four-crop club and it has the champion four-crop boy of Alabama, the name of this progressive and hard-working young man being Curtis Harkins and his address being Sycamore. Young Harkins cultivated as his four crops, cotton, oats, hay and corn, three acres being under cultivation. His total profit from the four crops was $304.19. He could have knocked off the 19 cents and then have made three or four times as much on the three acres as some folks made on the same amount of land.

Take a look at the boys whose pictures are shown above. Pretty sturdy looking fellows, eh, and the kind of boys that are building up old Talladega into a productive county. The Talladega Institute that they attended was held at the courthouse and talks made by (Corn Club) Kerlin, Prof .Thigpen, M. T. Linder, county superintendent of education and W. T. Coker, county farm demonstrator who has worked with the boys in their efforts to produce big yields of corn and the other crops. The twenty-seven boys who won diplomas raised a total of 1,369 bushels of oats last year. We will save you the trouble of figuring it out and say that this meant an average of more than fifty bushels to the boy.

Now don't look at this picture and read what these ambitious Talladega boys are doing and then forget about it. Ask yourself this question: "Is my county doing anything like this?"



If it is not there is a reason and the reason is that you and the other men and women have not taken enough interest in corn clubs and canning clubs and four-crop clubs and pig clubs. Don't let your county stay asleep while other counties are forging ahead. Don't lag behind. Get busy and stir up some interest. See your banker. If he is the right sort of banker he will foster a movement for a corn club or a pig club. No doubt you already have a corn club but it may be you haven't got a pig club. Your county has got o grow through what your boys do. These boys will soon be men and will have charge of the farms. In them lies the hope of a more progressive and more efficient and a more prosperous citizenship.

Some of us old codgers have about served our day. We are not hankering much for new and better things. That is natural—age always decreases the desire for progress; but here are our boys, ready to take up profitable farming if we encourage them a little and help them get a start.

Kind readers, our boys and our girls are our biggest asset. Let us do our best by them so that they will be able to do more than we have done and make the country richer than we have been able to make it.

Hoop and Sack Outfit to Help Beat Boll Weevil

By Dr. W. E. Hinds, Alabama Experiment Station

Where weevils are abundant in the spring the first direct step toward their control is the hand picking or collection of the hibernated weevils from the young plants at the time that squares begin to form. This step will pay it it is possible to find fifty or more weevils per acre at the time. In some cases morethan 2,000 hibernated weevils per acre have been thus picked and destroyed. The conspicuous sign of the presence of weevils at this stage of the cotton is the appearance of small, black, dead leaves in the tender bud of the plant. In this work it is advisable to use the hoop and sack outfit described below.

Destroy Infested Squares.

This second step in direct weevil control is also necessary where weevils abound early in the season especially where the rainfall is more than one inch per week so that the surface soil is moist most of the time or when the air temperature in the shade does not go much above 90 degrees F. as lower temperatures are not likely to result in the death of many of the weevil stages in fallen squares even if the ground is dry. Picking of infested squares should be done thoroughly, taking the evidently injured squares from the plants as well as the fallen squares from the ground. It should be begun within ten days after the appearance of the first bloom in the field and repeated every fifth day for four to six weeks.

Making Hoop and Sack Outfit.

In the collection of weevils, and infested squares, it has been found recently in Louisiana that a simple homemade device, bearing this name is very helpful. The hoop should be a large, stout, wooden hoop some 20 to 22 inches in diameter. such as may be obtained anywhere from old sugar barrels. The sack may be made of unbleached sheeting, drilling or of Osnaburg duck.

Get a strip of cloth about eight feet long. Double this strip in the middle and sew up each side to make the bag. Two widths of 32-inch cloth will go around a 20-inch hoop, and two widths, of 36-inch cloth will go around a 22-inch hoop. It is advisable to make the sack somewhat smaller at the bottom than at the top and with rounded corners. So in sewing, start about six inches in from each bottom corner and run outward gradually so as to make the sack full width at one foot from the top; continue at full width for six inches and then run inward to a point two or three inches in from the top corner. Next fold the sack with the seams together and take in two more darts at the top corners, running from the edge at six inches below the top to two or three inches in at the top. Trim off the triangular pieces of extra cloth at the lower corners of the sack and at the four darts at the top. Then trim off the top evenly and run a half-inch hem around the to to prevent ravelling and to strengthen the top. After this has been done, place the hoop in position within the top of the sack, folding the cloth down over the hoop so as to make the top form a flaring, projecting flap extending to about six inches below the hoop. The object of this flag is to prevent the weevils crawling out of the sack readily as they can do if there is no such flap present. Finally, stitch the flap to the side of the sack just below and so as to enclose the hoop. All of this sewing can be done either on a sewing machine or by hand. It will require hardly thirty minutes to make this out and the cost will range from 25 cents if sheeting is used, to about 35 cents with the Osnaburg. A clearer understanding of the construction may be obtained by reference to the figure.

Using Hoop and Sack Outfit.

With one hand the hoop is held closely against each plant while with the other hand the plant is bent into the open mouth of the sack and then shaken vigorously.

Go over the cotton first at the time that the first squares begin to show to get as many as possible of the over-wintered weevils before any eggs can be deposited.

A secon collection should be made in the same manner as the first about ten days after the first bloom appears and subsequently every five or six days for four to six weeks. With this outfit many infested squares, which are nearly ready to fall, will be shaken into the bag with the weevils and those already on the grond or dried on the plant should be collected also. Weevils and squares are kept shaken down into the bottom of the sack where they may be somewhat confined by a turn in the sack. Every few rows the contents of the sack should be emptied into, and submerged in tub or barrel containing water with a little kerosene on top. The oil will kill the adult weevils and the immature stages in infested squares may be destroyed by burying them later later under more than six inches of solidly packed earth.

With this outfit a laborer can go over two or three acres of cotton per day and he will probably get many more weevils than can be secured by ordinary methods of hand picking.

"Boll Weevil" Burley's Weevil Thrusts

Keep your labor on the farm.

Have personal supervision.

Completely destroy all cotton stalks as early as possible in the fall and clean all fence corners, etc.

Reduce your acreage from what it was in 1915.

Destroy the over-wintered weevil before squares begin to form by taking row by row after your cotton is "cut out" and locate Mr. Weevil by his feeding sign.

After the squares begin to fall from being punctured pick up and destroy them at least once a week for six weeks.

Cultivate shallow once a week until the cotton begins to open.

Result? A crop of cotton.

DAIRY BRINGS A CHECK REGULARLY

Well there is one thing about the dairy business that makes it attractive—you are getting money from it every week in the year.

Of course, anything from which you are getting money all the time means work most all the time and the dairy business, as you well know, is no exception to this rule.

The dairy business means being up before sun-up and on the job and working quick. But then there is that check coming in regularly and a check regularly is a pretty good looking piece of paper these days.

SECTION HARROW IN CULTIVATING CORN

Returning from a better corn campaign through North Mississippii, C. A. Cobb, superintendent of boys club work in the State, after having traveled 200 miles by automobile through the farming districts reports an unprecedented use of the section harrow in cultivating corn in the northern part of the State. In Mr. Cobbs' opinion this is one of the most important steps forward in corn culture that farmers can make. He also states that the seed beds were better prepared this season than ever before.

Accompanying Mr. Cobb was I. W. Hill of Washington, D. C., who was very much impressed with the crops of crimson and bur clover he saw on the farms.

Two Berkshire Breeders and What Macon Will Do

By W. D. Scott, Swine Breeder

J. F. Suttles, owner of the Oak Grove Farm at Felix, Ala., has what is probably the best herd of Berkshires in the South today. The winnings of this herd at the biggest shows in the South have eclipsed the record of any other breeder. In 1915 the herd won more premiums at Birmingham, Valdosta, Macon and Augusta than all the other Berkshire exhibitors combined.

Maximus Duke, the boar at the head of his herd stands out as one of the best boars ever shown in the South. He has been exhibited for three seasons in five states and has not been defeated by any hog of any breed, winning five grand championships in one season. The herd of Mr. Suttles is in every way worthy of the boar at its head, being made up of sows that rank among the best in America.

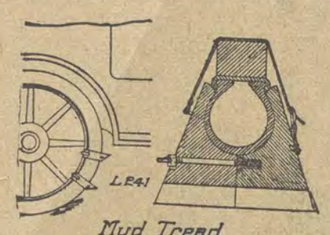
George D. Stovall, Sunny Dale Farm Clopton, Alabama, has been a breeder in a small way for several years and made an enviable reputation. But now he is going in on a large scale and has purchased some of the very best blood that money can buy. His herd will be out on the show circuit this fall and will demonstrate forcefully the possibilities of pork production in Alabama.

Berkshire Qualities.

Berkshire swine are noted for their docility and prolificacy, the sows usually producing large litters, and proving themselves gentle mothers and good sucklers. The pigs come strong and healthy, and are soon able to care for themselves.

The Berkshire also breeds true to type, hence the pigs are generally very uniform in size and appearance, and grow rapidly and evenly to maturity, and can be made ready for market at an early age. This last is no small advantage. The successful work of the world in general is conducted on the principle that, in whatever pursuit we engage, or whatever we undertake to do, we make the most of our opportunities, and the material we have in hand. Successful hog raising and pork making find no exemption here, where, as in most other operations, quick returns are requisite. No wonder then that in this age, when "time is money," and men "travel by express, write by telegraph, and print by steam," a food-producing animal so profitable as the improved Berkshire should have become such a favorite.

For the purpose of improving the common swine of the country no other hog can be used to better advantage, or with greater certainty of good results, than the Berkshire. Having descended from so long a line of pure bred ancestors, he possesses the power to stamp upon his progeny his own excellencies of form and feeding capacity, as well as vigor of constitution, which includes ability to resist the encroachments of disease. Hence he is in constant use for the improvement of common hogs.



As a profitable grazing hog the Berkshire proves his worth; such is the common testimony of all who have given him a fair trial in this respect. With little or no grain, he will thrive and on a good pasture during the summer months.

We are going to have the greatest Berkshire Show at Macon, Ga., that the South has ever known. The National Association (Berkshire) is going to put on a great Southern show and sale, with a premium list of $900. Macon and the Georgia State Fair are the live stock breeders friends in the South. They have extended a most liberal hand beckoning us to come forward and to replace King Cotton with a better and more profitable product. Our hat is off to Macon and the Georgia State Fair, and if you think I am joking, just come over and we will do you like the people from Missouri (show you.)

Silo Roof

Mud Tread.

The purpose of these treads is to enable an automobile to get out of the mud when mired Each consists of two wooden blocks which are first strapped over the rim and then drawu together by a bolt. The blocks bear on the rim, not on the tire.

Corn and Pea Planter.

The wheel of this device operates a slide in which there are two holes. The seed from the hopper drops into these holes and is carried into the chute as the side moves back and forth. The chute deposits the seed in the furrow made by the plow blade and the wheel covers it.

In this case, two rectangulars wooden frames are hinged together at the top by means of a strip of canvas. The front is covered by a sliding glass plat, the sides and rear by muslin coated with parafin. It is claimed that the coated muslin admits some light and heat, but not enough to cause the plants to wilt.

Corn Cutter.

The glove has riveted to its curved steel plate with a cutting edge beyond the little finger. In harvesting haffir corn or the like, the operator, wearing two such gloves, rasps the stalks with both hands and by the proper motion cuts with both edges at once.

The new features here are the U shaped holder which connect the spring with the whiffletree and plow beam. The whiffletree holder has one leg, extra long, which passes inside the spring in such a way as to prevent both holders from becoming disengaged.

Silo Roof.

The top of this roof is covered by a hood which can be raised or lowered. This arrangement permits the roof space to be used for storage.

Hog Cholera! Act Quick! Don't Delay a Day! Hogs Are Real Money

In the last issue of this farm paper we urged the people to be on guard against hog cholera.

Since then cholera has broken out in a number of places. In a good many of these cases the owners have acted quick. They have killed and burned the hogs beyond recovery, they have phoned or wired for the county agent or a veterinarian and have had their hogs vaccinated as quick as possible

Act At Once.

Again we urge our people to be on the watch for hog cholera and if it is found in your herd to act at once. Don't lose a day or don't lose an hour Get your county agent—by telephone, telegraph or any way you can get him. Get him to wire or telephone for serum and get your hogs vaccinated just sa scon as you possibly can.

Burn Carcass.

Hogs are too valuable things to lose now just because of delay. Don't delay. Don't lose any time at all, stop all other work you have and get the hogs vaccinated and burn up the carcasses of those that die or have to be killed.

Don't fail to get rid of that cholera-hog carcass. Don't bury it—burn it and then get the ashes under the ground.

Good people, now that we know how to handle hog cholera let us save our hogs, at this time when hogs are so valuable. Serum is not a cure for cholera—but it prevents cholera and if you can get your herd vaccinated in time you will save most of your herd.

Never Wait.

Again and again it can be driven home that hog cholera cannot be trifled with. Hog cholera is to a hog what yellow fever used to be to human beings—it kills and it kills quick. So the quicker a man acts in getting his county agent and some serum the more hogs he will save, if cholera is in his herd.

Don't wait the three or four days to find out "if it is cholera." It may be only worms but you can't take chance kill the sickest hog and let your county agent tell you if is cholera or not. If it not, then you have killed only one hog. If it is then you can save most of the rest of your herd.

Don't delay—act at once. How many hogs are lost—how many, alas—just because the owner delays having them vaccinated. Whole herds have been lost just because of a delay of a couple of days.

Kills Quick

Hog cholera works so fast and kills so fast that the farmer must act quick at all times. If he will only act quick and let nothing stop him in getting his county agent on the scene he will always win out

This is not an "alarmist" article. There is most always some hog cholera about. There is quite a good deal of it this spring. But we know that if we can induce every reader of this to act quickly if cholera should get into his herd we will have done that man a real service.

Hogs are Money Now

We want to have every hog possible to sell this fall. There is money in hogs now and there won't be less this this fall. We want all that money to come to our farmers. We want them to get just as much hog money as they can. We want them to save all their hogs. The man who saves his hogs and carries them all right through the summer will cash in mighty fine this fall. The hog market is not going down. Ten to one it will go up.

Let's Save The Hogs

Let's save all our hogs, good people. Let's don't let them die of cholera. We have a good many now—and we must keep them. That good money we will get for them this fall will be needed. It will enable us to have more hogs and make more money. The Central West farmers have made millions out of hogs. We can make, in time, as much as they make. But we must watch our hogs just as the Central West farmer watches his. The Central West farmer sets big value of his hogs. He knows that hog money is big money.

Watch the hogs close—and act quick and the reward will come in real money this fall.

Special St. Louis Live Stock Report to Our Readers

Fluctuatins in the steer market have been comparatively nominal during the past three weeks. Selling of these kinds has been fully in line with the high basis as previously reported. However, mixed cattle, such as canners, cows, bulls and calf stuff have advanced 25 to 50c. per cwt. in comparison with two weeks ago, and will range from 50c. to $1 higher than the same kind sold at say six weeks ago.

In view of the higher range of values, this is a very opportune time to call the readers of Farm and Immigration, as to what will be the result of the influx of grass cattle, which will commence in the course of thirty days hence. It is a matter of record that grass cattle exert considerable influence and leverage upon the market for common to medium fleshed cattle of any kind, and as we can see no reason to believev that this year will be an exception to the rule, it looks highly advisable to market all classes of cattle that are not of choice flesh during the next thirty days, and secure the benefit of the market while it is high on all low class stuff. The sooner this is done, the better, we believe. In fact, would suggest any stockmen who has cattle on the grass at present, to sort off the fleshy end and market them also. As far as finished, or more correctly speaking, prime fed cattle, are concerned, we expect to see them continue on a satisfactory plane throuhgout the summer.

Killing Cattle—Choice to prime fed steers, $8.50 to $9; good to choice, $8 to $8.50; medium to good, $7.50 to $8; canners, $4.75 to $4.85; cutters, $5.50 to $6; fat cows, $6.50 to $7.50; light weight bulls, $5.50 to $6.25; heavy weight bulls, $6.50 to $7.25; common yearling calves, $4.75 to $5.50; heretics, $5.50 to $6.50, with light veal calves $6 to $10.

Cattle from tick-free territory, both steers and she-stuff, have sold at a steady basis for several weeks, and are eagerly sought at the prices. Good to choice quality thin steers, $6.75 to $7.50; medium to good quality, $6 to $7; common to medium quality, $5.50 to $6.25; light yearlings, $5 to $5.50; young cows, $5 to $5.50; good quality stock heifers, $5.50 to $6.25.

While hog values have shown marked fluctuations from time to time during the past several weeks, yet the current market is but little different than that reported in our recent article. The top of the market is $9.95 for choice heavy corn-fed hogs. The bulk of the good hogs, weighing 160 pounds and upward, are selling $9.50 to $8:85; pigs, 120 to 150 pounds, $8.60 to $9.25; lighter pigs, $7.50 to $8.25, with rough hogs $9.25 to $9.50.

Silko, Great Boar, Comes Into Alabama

Silko, 11,003, one of the most famous Hampshire boars in America, has just been bought by the Prattville Stock Farm at Prattville, Ala., and brought into Alabama.

The purchase of Silko was made from Leroy S. tSephens of Illinois, by Judge C. E. Thomas and G. P. Walls, president and manager, respectively, of the Prattville Stock Farm. Silko will head the herd of Hampshires at Prattville, which is one of the largest and finest in the United States.

The coming of this great boar into Alabama is another high-water mark in the floodtide of our livestock industry.

Get Up the Silo Now---Don't Delay Another Week

Now is the time to get the silo under way.

Don't put off having the silo put up for putting it off may mean the loss of silage that could not be put into the silo on account of delay in getting it finished.

Some people who have beef cattle and even some who have dairy cows sometimes try to persuade themselves that they can get along and make as much profit without a silo. It will be only a question of time when they will find out that they have been losing profits by not having a silo. To get the maximum pofits a silo is an absolute necessity to the man who is raising beef cattle or who has dairy cows. The theory that you can get along without a silo and still make the most profit has long ago been exploded.

The silo is one of the best investments on the farm. It is a money maker from the start; pays for itstif in short order and puts a man in position where he can get the profits that he should have from his cattle and dairy cows.

Get up the silo without delay. You need it; you must have it to get the most profits. Now is the time to start it before mid-summer catches you with crops to harvest and peas to get in and other necessary work.

EVERYTHING UP BUT OUR COTTON

Wheat is high, corn is at a good figure, so are oats, hogs are way up, cattle are up and so are sheep and wool. It looks like most everything that the farmer produces now sells for a good, steep price. Butter is way up all over the world. The farmer producing diversified products in any quantities cannot now complain of prices. The Central West farmers have "cleaned up" the past year and every indication is that they will "clean up" this year.

If we had reached the point in diversification and livestock raising that has been reached by the Central West states this Southland of ours would today be literally rolling in wealth.

It is a significant fact that virtually all the products of the farm are unusually high, except cotton. Surely it is something to think about.

Pigs "Git Up and Git" on Skim Milk

It is marvelous how the pigs "git up and git" when they are fed on skim milk with the usual ration of grain.

People who have a dairy and milking four or five cows or more are finding out what a profitable thing it is to feed the pigs—and the chickens too—on skim milk. Therefore folks with a good many pigs are naturally drawn toward the dairy business, while folks with cows are naturally drawn into hog raising. That is the system that has done so much for so many farms in the Central West.

THE TYPHOID FLY

The insect we now call the "house fly" should in the future be termed the "typhoid fly," in order to call direct attention to the danger of allowing it to continue to breed unchecked.—L. O .Howard.

Keep the flies away from the sick, especially those ill with contagious diseases. Kill every fly that strays into the sick room. His body is covered with disease germs.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

Screen all food, and insist that your grocer, butcher, baker and every one from whom you buy foodstuffs does the same.

Keep all stable manure in vault or pit, screened or sprinkled with lime, oil or other cheap preparations.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

Burn pyrethrum powder in the house to kill the flies, or use a mixture of formaldehyde and water, one spoonful to a quarter pint of water, this exposed in the room will kill all the flies.

If you see flies, you may be sure that their breeding place is in nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table or in the cuspidor.

Screen all windows and doors, especially in the kitchen and dining room.

Keep the streets and alleys clean.

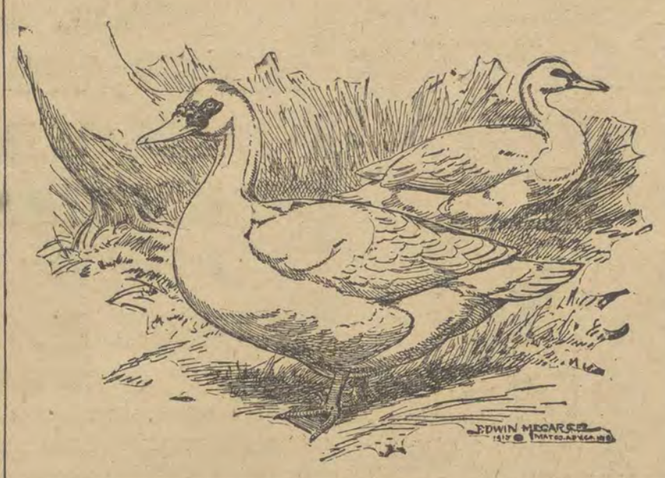
Having decided upon the proper location for your poultry plant, and settled such matters as the proper houses and equipment, the breed best suited to your requirements, you will naturally take up a consideration of the character of the labor to employ. Of course this only affects those who must for one reason or another, secure some help.

The first thing to be avoided in hiring labor on a poultry farm is to get hold of somebody who thinks he knows something about chickens. Strange as it may seem, it is usually the case that the man with some experience in chicken keeping is just the man to be avoided, provided you are capable of directing the business. Experience seems to benefit people in every other line of human endeavor excepting chickens—when these people start to work for somebody else. The trouble seems to be that anybody who has had any experience at all with chickens has a lot of pet notions and pet theories which he cannot avoid trying out at your expense.

Avoid the Failures

The very fact that a man has had experience with chickens and comes around to me to hire himself out, would prejudice me against him. A man who is successful with chickens should be able to travel along on his own hook, and will not—save in exceptional cases—find it necessary to go to work for somebody else. If he does come around trying to work for some one else, it is quote probable that he has failed in his keeping of chickens; and he is, therefore, the last man you would want to hire.

Now I realize that I am taking a very decided stand upon this matter, and one which may cause some surprise to the average reader. But I believe that sooner or later every employer will find out that if he wishes to set the policy and the feeding methods on his chicken plant himself, he will succeed a whole lot better if he has the assistance of people willing to take orders, and who won't think their past experience entitles them to hold views that do not agree with the boss. My experience has been that it is next to impossible to get an experienced poultryman to follow one's orders. He will come pretty near to running things the way he used to run them on somebody else's farm, or feels like running them on yours.



There are two good forms of green labor. One is bright boys still in school, who can be employed to work in their vacations, before and after school hours, and on Saturdays and holidays. Boys, I have found, are usually very fond of chickens and go at their tasks with a great deal of enthusiasm. Furthermore, by employing a boy of this character, you are very apt to get hold of an intelligent one, who on leaving school would aim higher than being a laborer. My own experience in running a chicken farm from its beginning up to four years in Brooklyn by the use of school boys was most successful, and I will say that if you can possibly do so, give the boys a chance, for their own sake, as well as your own.

When employing boys of this character, it is a great deal better to pay them on a time basis. A cent or two above or below eight cents an hour is a fair compensation, depending upon the boy and what he can accomplish. Some little fellows at six cents an hour can do quite some of the work and at ten cents an hour, you should be able to get boys nearing the completion of their school course who can do very good kind of work.

Run Your Own Business.

But learn your business and run it yourself. Very few poultry farms are profitable where the entire management is placed in the hands of hired help. There are so many opportunities for little things to be neglected, so many chances of things going wrong, that the oversight of the competent, interested owner is needed to insure success. Know, yourself, what work is to be done, how and when it must be done, then do it properly or see that some one else does.

WHITE MUSCOVY DUCKS

A FINE DUCK OF AMERICAN ORIGIN

(By Edwin Megargee.

American breeders have done much toward improving the various breeds and varieties of domestic poultry, including chickens, turkeys, ducks and geese. But most of the original blood came from other parts of the world, and we have built upon the foundation thus secured. The western hemisphere has contributed but few native birds to the list of kinds bred commercially by poultrymen.

The turkey, the Canadian goose and the Muscovy duck are natives of the new world and of these, the first is the only one which is now of great importance. However, the other two deserve wider distribution.

The Muscovy duck illustrated herewith is a native of South America, whence it was carried to Europe during the seventeenth century. It is still to be found in the wild state in its native home. Domestication has altered it but little, save in the matter of plumage color.

In weight, males of this breed exceed all other varieties. The drakes weigh ten and eight pounds and the ducks seven and six pounds, according to age.

There are two recognized varieties of Muscovy ducks, the colored and the white. The former has black and white plumage and seems to be the original form, the white variety evidently coming as a "sport" from this parent stock. White Muscovy ducks have blue eyes, red faces, pinkish bills, pale orange or yellow shanks and toes. The plumage is pure white in all sections.

In former years, before the general introduction of the improved Pekin, the Muscovy was a favorite market duck. So far as body conformation is concerned, this breed is still unexcelled, but it possesses certain disadvantages in other ways which have injured it in the estimation of the market, duck men. The males are savage; the warty, red face is repulsive to many people; the females are usually rather poor layers; there is a great difference in the weight of the sexes, and their ability to fly like wild birds makes difficult the task of confining them.

The owner of a small flock of ducks designed primarily for home use need not be influenced by these objections and such will find the Muscovy a most satisfactory breed. A small flock, when kept under natural conditions, will give good returns. The adult birds are bold and fearless, strong, hardy and vigorous. They will in large measure rustle for themselves and will hatch and rear a goodly number of ducklings each year without much assistance on the part of their owner. Their striking and attractive appearance makes them an ornament to the poultry plant or farm, and their meaty, rich-flavored carcasses make about as fine table poultry as one could desire.

POULTRYMEN CANNOT AFFORD TO USE AN ALL-GRAIN RATION.

By Frederic H. Stoneburn.

All experienced poultrymen know that it is necessary to supply a certain amount of animal food to their birds of all ages in order to secure maximum results, either in egg production or growth. However, there is a wide difference of opinion existing as to the comparative feeding value of the various available foods of this character and the percentage of animal matter which should be included in the ration.

The reason for feeding animal food is to supply the necessary animal protein, the material which most economically builds muscle and eggs. There are many feeds of vegetable origin which carry a high percentage of protein, but apparently vegetable protein is not nearly as effective in poultry feeding as is animal protein, and cannot be entirely substituted for the latter.

Three Kinds of Animal Food.

There are three kinds of animal food which are commonly used in the poultry ration. These are beef scrap or meat meal, made from slaughter house waste and butchers' trimmings; fish scrap, usually the byproduct of the fish glue factories; and skim milk, which may either be produced upon the home farm or, under favorable conditions, purchased from creameries. Materials of the two first named classes vary in quality and composition, depending upon how and where they are manufactured. However, all three of these feeds carry a relatively high proportion of protein and the needed mineral matter. The business poultryman will naturally endeavor to purchase the supply upon the most favorable terms, being guided by the analysis and current prices of the various brands which are available in his market.

Some interesting experiments designed to ascertain the relative feeding value of the above materials have recently been conducted at the Purdue Agricultural Experiment Station. This test covered a period of two years. Four similar pens of S. C. White Leghorn pullets were cared for in exactly the same way, save in the matter of ration supplied them. All received the same grain mixture, but pen No. 1 received meat scrap, pen No. 2 fish scrap, and pen No. 3 skim milk in addition to the grain ration, pen No. 4 received the grain alone without any animal food.

The grain ration was exceedingly simple, consisting of 10 pounds of corn, 10 pounds of wheat, 5 pounds of oats, 5 pounds of bran, 5 pounds of shorts. For feeding pen No. one, 3.5 pounds of meat scrap was added to the above grain mixture; pen two,, 3.5 pounds of fish scrap; pen three, 50 pounds skim milk. This milk was charged at the rate of 30 cents per 100 pounds.

The results secured were striking, as indicated by the following averages. These figures are averages of two years:

Pen 1. (Meat scrap and grain.)
Eggs per pullet, 138.
Cost of feed per bird, $.984.
Cost per dozen eggs, $.085.
Profit per bird, $1.557.

Pen 2. (Fish scrap and grain.
Eggs, per pullet, 128.
Cost of feed per bird, $.995.
Cost per dozen eggs, $.097.
Profit per bird, $1.562.

Pen 3. (Skim milk and grain.)
Eggs, per pullet, 135.4.
Cost of feed, per bird, $1.10.
Cost per dozen eggs, $.097.
Profit, per bird, $1.629.

Pen 4 (grain alone.)
Eggs, per pullet, 32.5.
Cost of feed, per bird, $.722.
Cost per dozen eggs, $.30.
LOSS, per bird, $.097.

It will be observed that pen 4, which received no animal food, cost the least to feed, but each pullet was actually kept at a loss. This is due to the fact that these birds laid so poorly. The addition of animal feed to the ration so greatly increased its efficiency that the egg-production was increased about 100 eggs per bird, thus turning a losing proposition into a decidedly profitable one.

Always Supply Animal Protein.

A comparison of the results shows that the three forms of animal feed tested are much alike in efficiency, and that the true feeding value of meat scrap—under the conditions existing where the test was made—is actually $23.92 per hundred pounds. It can be purchased anywhere at a fraction of the above figure.

The investigators make this statement:

"Every effort should be made to cut down feeding expenses, but grain alone is an expensive ration, as shown by the preceding figures. Every farmer can profitably feed either skim milk, meat scrap or fish scrap to his poultry, for these things are absolutely necessary for high egg production."

The Music of Summer

By Folger McKinsey

It blows through pipes of morning
  It echoes from the rill,
It wanders with the wind of spring
  Across the vale and hill;
It whispers in the starlight,
  It sings from sea to sea—
That love is life forever,
  And that life is good to me.

The lark unto the meadow,
  The meadow to the stream
They pipe the sylvan beauty
  That paints the paths of dream;
And shepherds with the weanlings,
  And the mystic nymphs repeat
On woodwind of the morning
  The wor dthat life is swest.

The raindrops tell in silver
  And the moonbeams tell in gold
The glory of the message
  That ever should be told—
That love makes young with April
  The heart that night or day
Takes off its dark December.
  To don the rose of May.

FACTS for FARMERS and other folks.

Temperatures For Cooking

The best preparation of protein, starch, and fatty foods demands a knowledge of the effects of different temperatures of cooking. There is a range of temperature at which each kind of food should be cooked.

A high temperature applie dto all forms of protein (eggs, peas, lean meat, cheese, etc) causes them to toughen and harden and become difficult to digest, while a temperature below the boiling point gives a delicate easily digested food. Though recipe books speak of boiled eggs and custards, the method of preparation should not be boiling, but by the use of heat which is below the boiling point. The reason custards curdle is because the egg has been cooked at too high a temperature. Proteins should always be given a long, slow baking or cooking below the boiling point.

Starchy foods require a very high temperature in order to break up the starch and grains and make them ready for digestion. For example—potatoes and cereals must be cooked at a high temperature, above the boiling point (212 degrees Fahrenheit), or in what we term a hot oven, from 350 to 450 degrees Fahrenheit.

Fats must not be cooked at a high temperature. When cooked at too high a temperature the fat splits and changes to substances which are irritating. Therefore browned butter and very crisp bacon are hard to digest. The great objection to fried foods is based upon the splitting of the fats.

Velvet Beans, Peanuts and Clover In Tallapoosa

A few lines in regard to the work we are doing in Tallapoosa county.

Much interest is being shown in the growing of more legumes. Last year we planted thirty bushels of velvet beans in the county and this year we will plant between twelve and fifteen hundred bushels and an equal amount of peanuts.

Our local oil mill has agreed to use our surplus peanuts and beans at a fair price but most of our farmers intend feeding these crops to their hogs and the velvet beans to their cattle as they realize this is the proper way to utilize these crops. Then they not only get beef and pork in return for the feed but are also building up the soil.

Our clover demonstrations are showing up well and are equal to any in the state. We have only about one hundred and fifty acres in clover at this time but intend planting much more this fall.

We are getting on nicely with tick eradication work. We dipped about twenty-two thousand head of cattle during April and quite a lot of interest is being taken in the cattle industry. We have about fifteen registered Shorthorn bulls in the county and Mr. L. A. Nolan, of Alexander City, our leading livestock man of the county, has about one hundred and twenty-five head of registered Shorthorn cattle and they are looking well.

More Cattle Needed for Pastures --Keep the Females

By B. R. Taylor

BY B. R. TAYLOR.

Alabama has a vast area of cheap lands which will make good pastures when they are sodded with the various grasses and clovers suitable for this purpose.

Much of the tillable land in the state which has been deoted to cotton for the past few decades can be profitably utilized and built up by pasturing and sodding with suitable leguminous plants, such as bur cloer, crimson clover, the vetches, black medic, white clover, lespedeza, melilotus, and alfalfa. When these plants are seeded down upon the soil in small quantities, the ones most suitable for the conditions will spread most rapidly and predominate.

Prices Going Up.

The establishing of a pasture is much more easy to accomplish at the present time than the stocking of this pasture with a class of cattle which will prove profitable. At present there are many people who have pastures and are looking for suitable cattle for grazing off the crop of grass, and so the price of all classes of cattle which will make good gains on grass is high and going higher. There is more grass than cattle at the present time and more land is constantly being turned into pasture. This assures the farmer that the cattle business will be a very close business owing to competition in buying cattle.

Keep the Females.

To overcome this drawback every farmer who can do so should own a number of cows as are necessary to raise steers enough to stock his own pastures. This means that the business must be put upon a permanent basis because the supply of grazing cattle is so limited. At the resent time the chief source of cattle in this state is from negro owners and these are being sold out largely owing to the high prices.

To insure a supply of grazing cattle every farmer in Alabama should try to hold all female animals which are not barren or too old to be a safe investment. This will be the same as a manufacturing plant for him except that a herd of cows will turn out a valuable product with far less human effort than any manufacturing plant will.

Winter Feeding.

The provision of winter feed is the most difficult problem to overcome in the maintainence of a herd of cattle. At the present time many cattle can be carried throug hthe winter on the stalk fields, "roughed through" as it is called, but it is far safer and more humane to provide silage, hay and winter grazing crops for the cattle. For the man with only a few cows a silo will prove too expensive and he must rely on grazing oats and using hay.

When the majority of the big land owners turn to livestock raising the price of cattle will be far higher than it is at present and there will be an even more noticeable scarcity of cattle at any price. Every cow and immature steer that is sold for slaughter or shipment elsewhere must be replaced at some future time at a greatly increased price. It is true that the quality of the stuff on hand is low, but that can be brought up by a grading process just as well as by buying graded cows to begin with.

Because your neighbor throws garbage in the alley is no reason why you should follow his example—it's a reason why you should set him a good example.

Screens on windows and doors to keep out flies will do more to safeguard your treasures than will locks to keep out burglars.

Without any reserve I shall offer 10 select Bulls ready for service and 20 Females, including yearlings; heifers bred to best bulls; and young cows with calves at foot.

In making this sale I realize that Southern farmers are busy now, on which account there may be great bargains. I know that no better Shorthorns, either individually or in breeding, were ever offered at auction in Alabama. Several bulls are Scotch bred and farmers wanting a Scotch bred bull to head their herd will find him here.

How to Judge a Dairy Cow and Be Sure That You Are Right

A good many of our folks are buy- dairy cows with the steady increase of the dairy business and the demand for cows that are being placed on small farms for home-made dairy products.

More and more folks will continue to buy cows with the rising price of cream, milk and butter, and with some little pasture and grain there isn't a better investment a family can make.

Now folks who are buying and who will buy want tc know something about the good qualities of the cow they are getting. Of course "the proof of the pudding is the eating" but we have to buy our cow without being able to give her a thorough test. Here are some facts that will help you in judging and selecting a dairy cow. Of course but few dairy cows measure up to all these points—and you cannot expect that—but study of these points will be of considerable help in choosing a good cow for family use or for the dairy.

General Appearance—Fifteen points out of 100 are given to general appearance. Viewed from the sides and front or rear, the outlines of the cow are similar to those of wedges.

The dairy cow should be thin, angular and loose-jointed. At the same time she should have the appearance of strength and vitality. She should be thin because she is turning a large part of the feed she eats into milk, not because she is poorly fed or diseased. In disposition she should be quiet, yet keenly alive to what is going on about her. Her skin should be soft and pliable with an abundance of secretion and the hair fine.

Head—The head should be clean cut and refined. The good muzzle is large with large, open nostrils. A small narrow muzzle indicates a weak constitution and a lack of capacity for consuming larger quantities of feed. The face extends from the muzzle to the forehead and should be of medium length and clean cut. Such a face indicates refinement and dairy temperament. A common defect is a long, "horsey" head which is generally accompanied by a narrow forehead. The forehead should be broad and slightly dished. A broad forehead indicates the well-developed, nervous system found in the heavy milker. Feel the lower jaw and see that it is clean cut, strong and firmly attached to the upper jaw. Large, bright eyes indicate intelligence.

Forequarters—The neck should be thin and free from loose, flabby skin. A coarse, beefy neck and throat indicate lack of dairy character and should be discriminated against. The withers should be thin and sharp. The shoulders should slope outward, giving a large chest capacity. The fore legs should be straight and clean cut. They should be set well apart to allow ample chest capacity.

Body—In this part of the animal are located the vital organs and the digestive organs, consequently the conformation here is very important. Capacity to consume large quantities of feed is indicated by a large, deep barrel. The ribs should be well sprung. A common defect is that the ribs do not spring out enough as they extend down. The result is that, while fairly deep, the barrel is narrow and consequently lacking in capacity. In passing the hand over the ribs they should be found set well apart; the last two or three ribs should be sufficiently far apart to permit two or three fingers to be inserted between them.

In examining the back, stand off a a pace or two and note whether it is straight or not. A slight sagging in the back is often found and, while this should not be discriminated against too severedly, it is an indication of weakness. Pass the hand along the spine and see that the vertebrae are not closely joined. The lateral nerves from the spinal cord pass out between the vertebrae and ample space for this is necessary, as nervous development is very important to the dairy cow. The loin should be broad, long, and have the appearance of strength. Weak, narrow loins are very common.

A deep, broad, floored chest is one of the best indications of constiution. The depth can be noted by standing back a few paces from the cow; but in judging the width of the chest, pass the hand under the body just back of the forelegs. In many cases it will be found that cows which have a deep chect are narrow in this part; such confromation should be discriminated against, as depth alone is not sufficient to insure ample room for the heart and lungs.

Hindquarters—The hips should be prominent and wide apart. The rump should be high, long and carry well out behind. A common defect is a rump that slopes down. The rump should be well arched and the pin bones set well apart, as this is a great help towards easy parturition. The tail is a good indication of quality. A long, thin, tapering tail is desirable, while a thick, coarse tail is an indication of coarseness throughout the animal. The hind legs should be trim and set well apart. Hind legs that are crowded close together are objectionable, as they limit the space for the udder. The thighs should be thin and practically all the width and flesh carried well up. Thick, chunky thighs are to be discriminated against as they indicate a tendency to beefiness and reduce the space for udder development.

Mammary Development—A large, well-placed udder is of the utmost importance. This part of the cow should be very carefully examined, as a large part of the value of the cow will be determined by the formation of her udder and milk veins. On the score card 30 points of a possible 100 are given to the mammary development.

Look at the udder from the sides and the rear and note its general shape and the manner of attachment in front and in rear. The floor or bottom of the udder should be straight and extend well forward. It should be also extend well back. It should be attached well up in the rear. The quarters should be balanced and the teats squarely placed.

While size is very important, a careful examination should be made to see that the size is not due to meatiness or coarseness. A cow with a large, coarse, meaty udder is, as a rule, neither a heavy nor a persistent milker. The udder should be soft and of a very fine spongy, texture. When milked out, it should collapse into numerous folds. Examine the teats and see that they are evenly placed and of medium and uniform size. Milk out a few streams and see that the openings are free from obstructions. Too small openings are undesirable, as they make the cow hard to milk.

The milk veins, which extend from the udder forward and pass into the body through openings in the body wall known as milk wells, indicate the amount of blood that passes through the udder. The supply of blood to the udder determines the flow of milk the udder will secrete, and therefore an examination of the milk veins is important. They should be large, tortuous, extend well forward along the cow's belly, and have numerous branches. The milk wells or openings through whic hthe veins pass into the body should be as numerous as the veins and branches.

After the details of the animal's conformation have been carefully gone over, the judge should step back a few paces and walk around the animal several times and in this way review the points he has gone over and weigh the value or lack of value of the good features or defects discovered in the examination.

Fight The Fly And Keep Down Disease

Fly season is at hand.

What are the good housewives going to do about it Do they intend to allow these hot weather pests and breeders of disease to multiply from a few flies into a million eggs and from a million eggs into tens of millions more flies? If not, a campaign is in order.

Florida in Fight

Extensive preparations are being made in Florida for a war of extermination against the "Typhoid Fly." The state health commission after consultation with the United States health authorities, has already issued instructions as to the methods of dealing with the evil, and posters depicting in vivid illustrations the habits of the house fly for gathering and spreading disease germs are being scattered broadcast throughout the state, as the unusually warm weather this spring has started the fly on his rampage earlier than usual. In Georgia and Louisiana a similar anti-fly campaign is on, the movement in Atlanta and Savannah being already exceedingly active.

A Disease Carrier

Until recent years, the common house fly, like the mosquito was thought to be otherwise harmless. Even now, though the house fly is recognized by the best sanitary authorities as a dangerous disease carrier, comparatively few families practically recognize it as such. But the inauguration of such campaigns as those now on in Florida, Georgia and Louisiana cannot fail to quicken the popular recognition of the necessity for abating the fly nuisance, not merely as a means of comfort, but as a protection against typhoid and other infectious diseases.

Screen.

While it may be impossible to exterminate the flies and mosquitoes, yet this danger and trouble may be greatly lessened by the proper use of screen doors and window screens. In this day of inexpensive screen and wire cloth, there is no excuse for any householder of even moderate means being without screens, which add so much to the comfort, health and security of the home.

Tennessee Fights.

The State Food and Drug Commissioner of Tennessee, is in deadly earnest in the anti-fly campaign and as evidence of this he has offered two gold medals to be competed for by the school children of the state under fifteen years of age. These medals will be given to that child who writes the best composition on the subject: "How is the House Fly Dangerous to Life and Health?" "How May Such Dangers Be Avoided?"

Texas Against Fly.

The Board of Health of Galveston, Texas, has taken up the fight against the fly and is going after this winged disease carrier with a vengeance that promises an early extermination of the pest if that civic department obtains proper co-operation from the people. They have issued a bulletin intimating that regulations should be adopted, each of which will be a step toward the abatement of the nuisance and prove fatal to the fly if persistently practiced.

The women of California have organized to exterminate the mosquito and to fight the Typhoid Fly.

In New Jersey the Department of Labor issued an order that all bakeries in the state should be screened so as to prevent the access of houseflies to rooms in which bread is made or stored.

Make Them Do It.

Several states have ordinances requiring screen doors and window screens to be placed in all stores, restaurants ,and other places where food stuffs and drinkables are sold or prepared. People themselves can do much toward enforcing this law to the fullest extent by refusing to buy from a grocer or butcher who does not keep his store carefully screened. Neither should they eat at a restaurant or drink at a fountain where the proprietor does not use every effort to prevent the entrance of flies. Screen doors and windows not only protect from flies, but they also prevent, to a large extent, the admission of dust.

Flies in War.

Careful observations have established the fact that the spread of Typhoid Fever in war time among the troops in the field was due chiefly to the agency of flies, and bacteriologists have reached the conclusion that a great many other forms of contagion and infection are propagated in the same way.

How much better it is to prevent sickness than to cure it. How much safer and easier it is to keep flies out of our homes by proper screening than to get them out when once they are in!

Rules for Fly Nuisance.

Keep the flies away from the sick, especially those ill with contagious diseases. Kill every fly that strays into the sick room. His body is covered with disease germs.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

All refuse which tends in any way to fermentation, such as bedding, straw, paper, waste, and vegetable matter, should be disposed of or covered with lime or kerosene oil.

Screen all food, whether in the house or exposed for sale.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

Keep all stable manure in vault or pit, screened or sprinkled with lime, oil or other cheap preparations, such as are sold by a number of reliable manufacturers.

See that your sewerage system is in good order.

Pour kerosene into the drains.

Screen all windows and doors, especially in the kitchen and dining room.

If you see flies, you may be sure that their breeding place is in nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table or in the cuspador.

If there is no dirt and filth there will be no flies.

UNCLE'S EXCUSE.

Uncle Jethro sat fishing on the banks of a tiny rivulet when a stranger stopped beside him and said:

"It is possible that there are any fish in such a small stream as that?"

"No, there ain't none," Uncle Jeth grunted.

"But you're fishing?"

"Yep" said Uncle Jeth.

"What, then, is your object?"

"My object," said Uncle Jeth, "is to show my wife I ain't got no time to sift the ashes."

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Chasteen are well pleased with a fine baby girl weighing about seven pounds.

Hurrah for the letter that J. Bice wrote last week about the all day Sunday singings. I am just like Mr. Bice about that, for when there is an a ll day singing any where close to a church or Sunday school all the home folks will go to the singing and leave their home service, not only when they are near by but they will go a long ways as the old saying is to see and to be seen. I have been to all day Sunday singings and there would be lots of the young folks, and old ones too, that coundn't get in the house, and some of them woundn't have gone in even if they could, and certainly if they had been at their home church or Sunday school they would have been learning more of God's word. Some go to praise God in singing and some for the fun they will have.

There will be a box supper at Jackson's Chapel Friday night, May 26. Every body come and bring a well filled box of some thing to eat. Proceeds go to help buy an organ for the Sunday school.

WEEKLY FARM LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER J. A. WADE.

Save Clover Seed

Both crimson and burr clover seed will be rip e in a few days. It is of vital economical importance that Alabama farmers save their own seed. There are a great many small areas of both varities of clover in the state and farmers having the same, paid a high price for the seed with which they started. These farmers should be commended for adding this splendid crop to their farming system. If Alabama is expected to ever become prosperous as a live stock producer of any or all kinds, Southern Burr Clover must precede as a winter grazing crop on all pasture lands and a general soil builder for staple crops. Crimson clover must be depended upon for winter cover crops, hay and to rapidly restore the fertility of run down cultivatable lands. I have known instances where one crop of crimson clover doubled the following crop of corn and cotton without the use of additional fertilizer. Indications are that clover seed will scarce and high next year and farmers having an opportunity should gather enough seed to increase the acerage on their own farms and some to sell, as profitable prices are almost assured.

Crimson Clover seeds at the top or tassel and machines can be had for topping and cleaning the seed. These machines are too expensive for small plots like many farmers have. In the absence of a machine, seed may be saved by cutting the clover with a cradle like oats, laying the heads all the same way in small piles. After the heads are dry enough to shatter, a sheet may be spread by the piles and the clover carefully placed on it and the seed thrershed out by the ordinary beating method. Good clean crimson clover seed generally sell for six to eight and sometimes even twelve dollars per bushel and saving the few seed now grown in Alamaba is of vital importance.

Burr clover is the pasture's winter clothes, the live-stock winter garden and the future fertility of the pasture lands. It is pure and simple common sense and genuine southern economics. Burr clover seeds in the form of a small burr scattered all over the plants from the beginning to the end of the runners. It is very prolific and often produces enough seed to perpetuate itself and enough to seed twenty times its area. When the little burrs become dry they drop to the ground. The stems dry and turn loose at the ground easily. The stems should be raked up in piles leaving the burr exposed thick upon the ground. The burrs, including the loose soil must be swept up in piles with a stiff broom and sifted through a course screen to take out the course trash, rocks etc. It is best to leave the soil mixed with the seed for inoculation, especially if you are going to use the seed yourself. If the seed are for sale and the amount of soil is excessive, a small mesh screen may be used to reclean the seed. A reasonable amount of soil left in the seed is preferred to furnish sufficient enoculating bacteria.

Do not let you clover seed go to waste.

INSTANT DEATH OF MR. W. RILEY BURNETT.

The sudden death of Mr. W. Riley Burnett, an old and respected citizen of the south west part of the county, occurred at the home of his son, Henry M. Burnett, neart Billingsley on Monday about noon.

The old gentleman was the victem of a heart trouble, with which he had suffered previous to his death.

On Monday morning he was apparently well, and went to the field to work. About 8 o'clock he expressed himself as feeling bad, and went to the house of his son nearby. The efforts of the family to restore him succeeded in bringing back his normal feelings, and he was thought to be out of immediate danger. About noon again, without any warning, the grip of death seized him, and he surrendered to the call without so much as a word or groan.

He was 75 years of age.

W. T. Callen was a visitor to Birmingham Tuesday to take in the Reunion.

VISIT OF MRS. WHITE TO CHILTON COUNTY

Representative of the Berry School Gives Interesting Account of her Recent Visit.

From the Berry School News.

Have you ever had the wonderful xperience of going into an utterly strange place and being taken right into the hearts and homes of the people and made to feel that you were just the most welcome guest that could possibly have come?

Well, that is just what happened to me recently when I visited the home and school of one of our old Berry boys, James K. Daniel. I stayed with his sisters, who live in Clanton, Alabama, and attended the closing exercises of his school at Collins Chapel, in Chilton county, some ten miles from Clanton.

James was the principal of this school during the past term, with two assistant teachers and an enrollment of about 150 students. It is one of the most important schools in that county, and he has done some splendid work there. The County Superentindent told me that he was so much pleased with the work at Collins Chapel that he would be willing to give James any school in the county for another year. The term is only for five months, two in the fall and three in the spring. It is James' purpose to make teaching—rural schools—his life work; and he has endeavored and succeeded to a great extent, in really instilling in the minds and hearts of his students some of his own ideals, fostered and developed at Berry. I was especially struck by the loyal devotion and cooperation of his assistant teachers and their evident regret at seeing him leaving without intendind to take the school another year. Many of the patrons spoke to me of their satisfaction with his work; and whatever opposition was shown was of a nature to point out very clearly that his methods were sane and that he had persisted in sticking to his ideals.

After spending Thursday night with James' sisters in the town of Clanton, Friday morning we went out to the school, reaching there in time to meet quite a number of the people before the opening of the program. I talked quite a bit with Dr. Marcus, the County Health Officer, who spoke very appreciatively of James and his efforts along the lines of sanitation and health. He was greatly interested in the pictures of Berry School that I had with me and, of course, especially interested in what I told himof the work we are doing here towards saner perceptions of hygiene and sanitation, and how our boys and girls are being taught to avoid sickness first,—then how to overcome disease—how to keep well, rather than how to cure sickness.

The morning hour of the program was given to an adress by Juge Reynolds, who spoke to the people quite at length on the importance of improving the public school system of their state and county, and who gave them what seemed to appeal to them as sound political advice. Then followed a great, bountiful dinner on the grounds, with cordial meetings and greetings among all. After dinner I gave a short talk on a subject that James had asked me to handle, "The needs of Rural Communities, and What Berry School is Doing to Meet Them." From my talk, the people could readily see that this son of Berry was doing all in his power to bring into their midst just the things that we found here to be real remedies for the backward state of such communities. The listened with intense interest and were eager to see the pictures. The the County Superintendent, Mr. Bean, gave an address on "What Are the Main Steps in Educating a Child?" giving the parents some very sound advise on child-training and co-operation with teachers.

After this address the Collins Chapel basket-ball team met and vanquished the Thorsby Institute team, much to the delight of James' boys, as this had been their first year at basketball. Thorsby Institute is a small industrial school at the town of Thorsby, some four miles or so from Collins Chapel; and it was really quite a victory for the Collins boys to defeat them, since they had had much more practice in playing than had the Collins boys.

The basket-ball game closed the day's program, and we drove back ten miles to Clanton; then that evening drove another ten or twelve miles to a concert at Union Grove, a neighboring school, reaching home somewhere about eleven o'clock. This moving about could not have been accomplished as it was but for the liberal courtesy of Clanton in sending us about in automibiles.

The next morning, Saturday, J. D. Smith, whose parents live near Clanton, and who had gone with me on this trip, took me out to visit his mother and father, with whom I spent a most delightful time and who gave me a genuine, old-fashioned country dinner. I can well understand J. D.'s extreme neatness now, as well as his zeal for sanitary conditions. His mother's house was spotless and every door and window was screened, with never a fly to disturb one. Just after going into the house, J. D. took his mother by one arm and me by the other, and led us to a mirror, telling us to look at ourselves. And, do you know, we were exactly the same height, about the same weight, and we really looked enough alike to be sisters? This made plain to me why a lady a Calera, where we had to wait for a train on the way down, had said to me, "Is he your son? He looks so much like you and he is so polite and nice to you." Of course I told her that I had some fifteen or twenty other sons of the same sort back here at Berry, and she accepted my word that he was not my "really, truly" son, much to J. D.'s relief.

On Saturday evening we went back to Collins Chapel, where James' School was giving a concert, the proceeds of which were to go toward the purchase of some books for the school library. After an evening of music, dialogues, and recitation which all enjoyed, we went home and to sleep until pretty late Sunday morning. It was rather hard to get J. D.'s courage to the sticking point of being ready to met me at the train that day at ten-thirty for our return trip; but he was there on time and back we came to old Berry, after one of the most delightful little visits we have ever made.

And best of all, I came back with James' promise to follow us shortly, with the intent to stay until he gets his sheepskin here. Then, too, his sister is planning to come to the Girls' School in September, and a younger brother will probably also come. His father lives in the country about four miles out from Clanton, and he told me that he hoped to send every one of his sons to Berry School. I hope that J. D.'s brother will come this fall, and there are one or two fine girls from that county who are going to make every effort to be at Berry this fall. So I think we shall have a splendid contigent from the good old state of Alabama.

"UNITED WE STAND; DIVIDED WE FALL."

Never before has there been an instance when men should realize the truth expressed in the above headline, more than in the case of the Republican party in this county, state and nation to-day.

We are glad to know too that from all indications, it is really and truly being realized. We can see it in the actions and sentiments of the Republicans of the county, and it rings out clearly and distinctly from all parts of the country.

Here in Chilton county we once more have a united party, that will support one ticket in November AND WIN.

Nationally, we feel that just as perfect union will materialize in June at Chicago, and just as certain victory be assured in November.

Atkinson For Congress.

We are glad the Republicans of the Fourth District saw fit to name Hon. J. B. Atkinson of this city to make the race for Congressman.

Mr. Atkinson is a highly honorable and worthy gentleman, and we do not hesitate, but on the other hand are glad, to hold him up to the people of the District, as capable of the duties that would be imposed upon him as our Congressman.

And the thing that in our estimation gives him precedence over all the rest of the game, is the fact that he is a Republican, pure and simple.

He will no doubt turn up a larger vote in the district in November than and candidate has done in many years. Chilton and Shelby counties will give him a good majority over Blackmon, and in the other counties of the district the Republicans will stand by him.

WHY DID YOU VOTE IT?

Why did you vote the Progressive ticket in Chilton county?

Here is the answer that is given by one of the Democratic candidates that was nominated last Tuesday:

He says the reason so many men voted the Progressive ticket in preference to the Democratic, was purely and simply for the lack of sense.

Is that the reason YOU voted it?

"THE CANTROLLA"

The senior class of the Chilton County High School has gathered unto themselves much just and due credit for the publication of the first volume of the high school annual—Cantrolla.

The book is one of a hundred pages devoted to the display of what the county high school is in all its branches. It is printed on fine enamel paper profusely illustrated with views of the school, scenes of Clanton and photos of those who make and manage the institution.

The different sections of the work are devoted to the different departments, viz: the Board of Control, the senior class, the junior class, the sophomore class, the freshman class and the department of music, art, athletics domestic science, etc.

The work is splendid and stands highly to the credit of this, the foremost educational institution of our county.

The work which the senior class has been put to in getting up the annual has been trying, but the ones upon whom the task fell have labored diligently, until their efforts and ideas took form—the splendid little book which they are now distributing.

To help defray the expenses of publication the class is selling the annual at the price of 50 cents a copy.

U. S. POLICY IN MEXICO CALLED 'HUMILIATING'

Senator Borah Says There Is No Story in History Similar to United States and Its Relation with Neighbor

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Senator William E. Borah, Republican member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, arraigned the administration of President Wilson for its Mexican policy, which the senator characterized as "humiliating."

History, the senator said, would not furnish a parallel for the story of national humiliation imposed on the United States by the president's failure to protect American lives in Mexico and particularly because of the repeated loss of life due to raids.

Senator Borah has been expressing his disgust privately on the Mexican situation recently, but has hesitated about speaking publicly while the administration showed a disposition to try to correct the evils complained of, but the raid on Glenn Springs, Tex., and the killing of Americans roused the Idaho senator, and when asked for a statement today he said:

"I do not suppose there is another story in history so humiliating as our relationship with Mexico. There have been times, of course, when weak and defensless nations have had to suffer indignity and all kinds of outrages; had to submit to the robbery and murder of their citizens, simply because of their weakness and and their inability to protect their own.

"There have been times when nations well on the downward road to ruin and in the midst of the throes of internal dissolution have overlooked the treatment which their subjects have received at the hands of other powers.

No Duplicate in History.

"But I venture to say you will not find in the pages of history an instance in which a strong, powerful nation, assuming to be the guardian of the rights of humanity, has ever submitted as we have week after week month after month and year after year to the studied and ostentatious insults, to the ravishment of innocent women and to the murder of its men as we have at the hands of the Mexicans.

"These things have happened to our people, and we have submitted to it, not only while our citizens were on foreign soil, though protected by a solemn treaty, but even when they were upon their own territory and under their own flag.

"Leave out for a time the four year of brutal treatment of our people in Mexico, where all plincipals of humanity and our solemn treaties and national honor required us to protect them, and consider alone the murders on this side of the border, the repeated, continued, persistent outrags upon our citizens for the last five years. Is it any wonder that nowhere are our demands respected and nowhere are our citizens protected?

"It may be well in thef ace of the news this morning to reflect for a moment upon this record. After having driven out Huerta and leaving chaos in his place, we left chaos to reign supreme over the interest of Mexico and our own citizens therein for nearly two years.

"Then we recognized one of the bitterest foes of America in Mexico. Carranza had manifested his hatred toward usin many ways. Everyone who understood anything about Mexico understood how how cruelly he treated or consented to the treatment of Americans in Mexico."

LEO FRANK CASE TO BE ISSUE IN GEORGIA FIGHT

ATLANTA, Ga.—Will the feeling in the Frank case be sufficient to determine the result of the gubernational race?

Will Hugh Dorsey's supposed political strength as the man who prosecuted Leo M. Frank be offset by the fact that he is one of the lawyers engaged in the attempt by the Louisville and Nashville railroad to overthrow the act of the Georgia legislature prohibiting the construction of a railroad parrallel to the Western & Atlantic?

These and numerous other questions bearing on various angles of the same subject are being asked in Atlanta as the result of Hugh Dorsey's announcement yesterday that he will make the race for governor.

There is no doubt of the fact that Hugh Dorsey made a favorable impression on some people by the manner in which he conducted the prosecution in the notorious Frank case. It is not questioned that Mr. Dorsey this to elect him governor.

and his advisers are counting upon

Will these people be as enthusiastic for Hugh Dorsey, the gubernatorial candidate, as they were for Hugh Dorsey, the prosecuting attorney?

Assuming that they are and will be on election day, will they be out numbered by the people that feel that the Frank case should not be resurrected to furnish a gubernatorial candidate with a platform?

Thos E. Watson, of "The Jeffersonian," will support Hugh Dorsey as a matter of course.

Will the Watson support win as many votes for Dorsey as it will lose for him?

SOME GOOD SOUND IDEAS OF MR. CULP ON POLITICS

Clanton, Ala., May 15, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your esteemed paper to state my position and extend my thanks to the few friends that honored me with their vote in the Progressive primary election of the 9th inst. I feel indeed grateful to the few that supported me as I know it was a free will offering in the absence of a canvass or keen solicitation for their support. It is sad to go down in defeat, but it is more blessed to give than to receive for it is recorded in Mat. 20:16 that the last shall be first and the first last and this prophecy proved true on last Saturday with the Republican party and their prodigal brethren. The doors and the hearts of the old home were opened wide and restored to the Progressive brethren their original name which has stood the test and proved the best through the past ages. The nominees of the Progressive party were renominated by the Republican convention, that puts them under the shield (the iron man) which has overcome the head of the beast and is able to conquor the fowl that crows so sweet. They are now sailing upon the high political seas and I trust the blessings of God will attend them and that they may enjoy a safe and successful voyage.

I plead to all who love prosperity to put your shoulders to the wheel and show loyalty to the good old Republican party that protects the industries and welfare of our noble Republic.

Yours for success,
A. J. CULP.

JUDGE REYNOLDS GIVES HIS THANKS AND APPRECIATION

Clanton, Ala., May 16, 1916.

I want to thank the voters of Chilton county for the splendid vote they gave me in the primary on May 9th Words fail to express my full appreciation, and I want to assure those that voted for me that my heart runs over with gratitude, and while I thank you for voting for me, I want to say to thosethat voted for Prof. Moore, I am sure you voted your convictions and now we will all pull together, fighting for the same thing—to defeat the democrats.

The primary that has just passed has been one of the pleasantest I have ever had anything to do with. I have never witnessed a campaign on such a high plane in my life—no mud slinging. I want to assure the people of this county that I expect to conduct my campaign in the future as I have in the primary; you will hear nothing from me against my opponent, but I expect to fight for certain priciples for which our party stands. I shall not bring anything personal into this campaign and I shall not say anything to offend anyone, unless it offends the demoerats to show up their public record.

It shall be my desire to make my race in the November election along a high plane, and if my record while in office is not such that I merit the support of the people, then I do not want the office, nor will I seek it on the merits of any other man.

I trust the whole campaign will be conducted along the above lines, for I am sure the public interest will be better subserved by such a campaign. If there is anything brought into this campaign that is unpleasant and disagreeable some one else will have to bring it in. I stand ready, however, to defend myself or my party.

I want to thank Prof. Moore for the assurance of his hearty support from now until the November election, and I believe that I will receive the loyal support of all his supporters. If we will do our duty until the election is over we can easily carry this county two to one against the democrats.

In conclusion I want to thank the Republicans for their endorsement. We are all united and this means a freat victory this fall, nationallo as well as locally.

We want to invite every man in this county who stands for paying all the debts we can in the next six years, and who believes in an economical administration to join us in the November election and we will accomplish a great victory for the people.

Respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

MR. COBB'S THANKS

Jemison, Ala., May 17, 1916.

To the people of the County:

I wish to express my sincere thanks to all who voted for me in the recent primary election.

Despite the fact that I did not receive a sufficient number of votes to nominate me for the school board, I am gratified with the support given me, and feel thankful for the expressions of confidence by those who did vote for me.

I want to say that I am as much, and even more than ever, eager for the success of the ticket in November. Our people are to be congratulated for the way they turned out and voted in the primary, and I want to urge each and every one to keep his interest and enthusiasm up until November, and then we will succedd in giving ournominees the honor they justly deserve, by electing each and every one of them.

Yours truly,
B. L. COBB.

AT THE POOR FARM

Mt.Creek, Ala., May 15, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

I recently made a visit to the county poor farm, and I desire through your paper to say a few words in regard to the splendid management of affairs there, and the kindly treatment the inmates receive at the hands of the superintendent, Mr. Huckabee.

I have heard it said at times by some few parties that those who are at this home were not given the kind of treatment that they deserved. But I want to say here that those under the care of Mr. Huckabee are certainly treated well and with all due consideration. They indeed have a home in the truest sense, and enjoy all the comforts that could be given them by anyone. I am sure there is no objection coming from anyone at the farm in regard to the way they are treated. Not only does Mr. Huckabee himself deserve credit for the way he looks after the inmates but also does his wife, who herself does all in her power to make the old people there happy and contented.

All there seem to be happy and cheerful.

Yours truly,
G. W. BASKIN.

Clanton, Ala., May 16, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to express my appreciation to the voters of Chilton county for their support and influence in the primary election on May 9th.

I feel very grateful to the people for giving me the nomination for commissioner from the Fourth District.

I shall put forth every honest effort to be elected in November, together with our entire ticket.

Should I be elected in November I shall strive to carry out the wishes of our people to the best of my ability.

Again thankink you all for your kindness. I remain yours for the success of our entire ticket.

A. P. Vinson.

Clanton, Ala., May 13, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to express my gratitude and lasting appreciation to my friends who stood by me and so loyally supported me for the nomination of Judge of Probate on May 9. I fail to command words that will fully express my heart felt thanks and greatefulness, but hope to show to them my sincerity by working earnestly, faithfully and honestly for the election of my opponent and the entire ticket nominated by the Progressive party on May the 9th.

To those who supported Judge Reynolds, I will say that I harbor no ill will or feeling against you for voting your choice, but feel proud to know that you had the right to do so, and I trust that you have made no mistake in selecting him for our leader in this fight.

Now, I earnestly urge, and shall continue to do so until the election in November, that every one of us work man to man for the election of our ticket this done, victory will be ours. I will say, that though I was defeated, my party faith is unchanged and I stand today where I have stood for at least twenty-five years, and expect to so continue in the front ranks battling for what I think to be the best thing for the people.

Yours for success,
J. W. MOORE.

UNION GROVE

Jemison, Ala., May 15, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please give me space to thank the voters of Chilton county for their support in the primary on May 9th. I expect to do everything that is in my power for the betterment of education in Chilton county regardless of party affiliation, and if elected one of the board of education will try to get the voice of the people for County Superintendent, teachers and trustees. I think the voters of the county ought to lend a helping hand to the members of the board of education, for without co-operation we cannot accomplish much.

Now everybody go to work and build up the rural schools over the county and by so doing you will furnish material for the high schools.

The foundation of education lies in the rural schools.

I am more than pleased with the other four members of the board on the Progressive ticket.

T. J. DORMINEY.

THE MT. PLEASANT POEM

We give to you an invitation,
Altho you need no obligation.
Of all the school among the best
Old Mt. Pleasant has stood the test.

While we take no musical course,
For we boys are always hoarse;
I'll tell you the reason of it all,
It's because we yell and squall.

We have with us the best of teachers,
And then, probably, a few young preachers.
Old Mt. Pleasant is where we trod,
And our teacher uses the rod.

Here we enjoy our liberty;
Here we can win our victory.
Mr. Lewis, he's the boss
And we boys are never lost.

You can go among the little folks,
At their desk they never joke;
And their teacher they do love
Also the one that is far above.

I'll make of you one request,
I'm sure that you'll say that it's the best;
When you are called to the home above
The heavenly father you should love.

We are here in sublime.
The best is yet still behind,
For we are in this grand old nation
It is all if God's creation.

TRANSCRIPT SEES VICTORY IN IOWA

A special dispatch to the Boston Transcript from Des Moines April 21 says:

"Despite the huge quantities of literature and the active work being done in the state by active workers from Eastern associations opposed to woman suffrage, the situation in Iowa looks more incouraging (for the suffragists) today than at any time in the campaign. Conservative suffragists believe that the State will be won by a majority ranging from 10,000 to 50,000.

PLEASANT GROVE

We have a good Sunday school every Sunday morning.

The W. M. N. meets every Monday evening after the fourth Sunday in each month at the home of Mrs. M. C. Crumpton.

The B. Y. P. W. gave a social at the church on the evening of May 13, from seven to ten. A large crowd was present and had a good time. It was the best that has been given by the B. Y. P. W.

I wish the Union-Banner much success. Lets all work together and make it a success.

W. P. Thompson went to Birmingham in order to hear the band play once more.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store. It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Regulator Co., 713 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers. It is a delight to read it.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM THE DEPT. OF EDUCATION

Interesting Items About Educational Progress Over the State by Superintendent Feagin.

Civic Improvement Association

Recently a gathering of interested citizens was held at the court house in Ashland. At this time amovement was launched looking to the organization of an active civic improvement association.

The school force cooperated with the leaders in civic life and the keynote of cooperation was sounded for the good of the town. Such subjects as should the town establish playgrounds; what can the merchants do to help Ashland; what cooperation means for Ashland; and better sanitation were ably discussed.

The movement is one to be heartily commended in that the influence of cleanly surroundings in the town will be an important contribution to the education of the school children.

Local Taxation

Speaking on the subject of local taxation Hon. O. P. Ford, President of the Farmers' Union of Alabama, made the following statement:

"The school is the great agency which democracy has set up to train for productive and efficient citizenship. Statistics show that eight boys out of every ten who enter the doors of our school will live and work in the country and that nine out of ten of those who do will never attend any other than a rural school. The rural school, therefore, becomes the most vital force in the State, and it ought to be so equipped and financed that it can do its work in the best possible manner. After a faithful effort to inform myself about the present status of education in Alabama I have no hesitancy in saying that the only hope of substantial relief lies in more revenue and that the only possible source from which to drive the revenue is local taxation.

Men and women of the farm should be trained to think and do, and they need as good training as men and women in other occupations; hence the schools of their children, from which is to come the major portion of our future rural citizenship, should be equal to any that Alabama or any other state affords. We cannot sow parsimony and reap abundance. It will cost about as much per pupil to equip and maintain an efficient school for the farmer's child as for any other. The need of training is as great, the cost as great, the work as great."

An Experiment in an Adult School

The following letter has been received in the Department of Education from a teacher conducting an adult school in Russell County:

"I am sending you a basket made by the illiterate man I reported at the institute. I think that it is very good and I feel gratified at his success in making and selling these baskets. He begn making them some time in January and has found a ready sale for all he has made. Being crippled and unable to walk, (having been in that condition for fifteen years) he can make a little money out of these baskets and have some employment for his mind.

I am now teaching him to read and it is wonderful how fast he is learning. He finished reading 'Stepping Stones First Reader' yesterday being able to read anything in it. I have two more illiterates that want to learn to read and I mean to begin teaching them next week. If I am as successful with them as I have been with my present pupil I will send you a report."

Shortly after receiving the above, a letter from the adult pupil was received in which he expressed pleasure in at last being able to give his mind profitable occupation.

PARTIES SHOULD TAKE A STAND

Representative Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, gave his approval last week to the plans of the National American Woman Suffrage Association for securing an equal suffrage plank in the platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties.

"I believe that political parties would make no mistake in taking a definite stand on this question of equal suffrage," said Dr. Fess. Representative Fess, by the way, is the president of Antioch College in Ohio, and well known as an educator and writter on political and economic subjects.

"The reason I take this position," he continued, "is that anything that has a free field and must be done will be done. If a thing is right it is coming. It may be very intermittent, but if it is right, ultimately it is going to be recognized.

"I be lieve that woman suffrage is legitimate, and therefore I believe it will succeed, and I have no hesitancy in saying that political parties should take a definite stand, and am in entire sympathy with the efforts of woman suffrage leaders to secure the adoption in the national platforms of the two great parties of an equal suffrage Plank."

Some men say that they do not want tosee women at the polls, but did you ever hear one say that he did not want to see a woman pay taxes? —Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer.

BRITISH COLUMBIA WINS REFERENDUM

British Columbia is to have an opportunity to follow the example of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan and of the States south of it in putting women on a level of full equality with men.

A referendum on woman suffrage will be taken at the coming general election in that Province, and, if the electors approve, women may vote after January 1, 1917. Premier Bowser stated in Victoria April 14 that the same legislation which would amend the elections act to extend the vote to soldiers would also provide votes for women.

"We felt the proper course would be to submit the question to the people," he continued. "If the majority of those voting decide in favor of granting the franchise, then we will have the amendment in the act enforced."

Mrs. Belle George visited Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Acton at Ensley last week.

Hon. and Mrs. J. O. Middleton took in the reunion and did some shopping in Birmingham during the week.

'Healthgrams' On Skin-- Flashed to Thousands

One of Nature's signals is an unhealthy skin. It is a scientific fact that the skin indicates the condition of the blood and the blood is the building material for the body and all its vital parts. Unless the blood is nourished and kept rich and healthy, it will evenually react on the organs it feeds and reduce the individual to a pitiable condition. Little do people realize the physical ailments that drain away strength and vitality and that can be traced straight to the poor supply of blood. Pimples, Eczema, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Carbuncles, Boils, Catarrh with its obnoxious results and the tendency to easily catch cold, Malaria and scores of other equally serious ailments, are all manifestations of bad blood. For over 50 years S. S. S. has been a mighty remedy for these disorders. Thousands of men and women have been relieved or actually cured by S. S. S. Many of them had spent years and hundreds of dollars for other remedies in a fruitless endeavor to regain health—a marvelous tribute to S. S. S. S. S. S. is purely vegetable and when taken into the stomach is absorbed by the blood, supplying certain elements which stimulate the action of the blood corpuscles and help them drive out impurities and build up the system. With such a tried and true medicine awaiting you at the closest drug store, will you go on suffering and looking badly when so many others similarly afflicted have turned to S. S. S. and found the meaning of perfect health. Our Medical Department will gladly advise you about your case without cost to you if you wish to avail yourself of this service. Ever taste Virginia sunshine?

YOU did—if you ever smoked a cigarette of Virginia tobacco.

Virginia, you know, is "the tobacco man's tobacco", because it gives to a cigarette the one quality no other tobacco can give—that refreshing liveliness called "character"! And smokers want "character" above all else.

Piedmonts have "character" in full measure—they're highest grade Virginia. ALL Virginia! Golden, lively, mellow as southern sunshine!

Next time, buy your regular brand—

But say "Piedmonts", too, just so you can know them for yourself!

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

NOTE:—It is ocean freight, and import duty, and wasteful handling which make ordinary foreign-grown tobaccos cost more than they should. That is why cigarettes made of this foreign-grown tobacco cannot have in them as good tobacco as Piedmonts, which are made of highest-grade Virginia, grown right here in the U. S. A!

TUSCALOOSA IS PREPARING FOR HOSTS OF GUESTS

Thousands Expected to Take Advantage of Low Rates for Centennial Celebration.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 10.—Ten thousand visitors are expected to take advantage of the cheap transportation rates offered by all railroads and river steamers running to Tuscaloosa on account of the Tuscaloosa Centennial Celebration to be held on May 29, 30 and 31. Extensive preparations have been made for the comfortable accommodation of this great number of guests for the three days.

The accommodations committee has made a canvass of all the hotels, boarding and rooming houses and even private residences and collected data showing where visitors may obtain board and lodging. A bureau of information will be established at a convenient public place where strangers can quickly and easily find out where they can obtain accommodations and also how to get to the place. Railroad and street car time tables and other useful information will be obtainable.

A three-cent-a-mile rate plus thirty-five cents for the round trip has been obtained from the railroads by the transportation committee. This is an exceptionally low rate, equivalent to that offered by railroads for the Democratic national convention in St. Louis. The rate will apply to all points on the Alabama Great Southern, Warrior Southern, Mobile and Ohio and Louisville and Nashville which are in Alabama and Mississippi, or within a radius of about 150 miles of Tuscaloosa. Low rates have also been obtained on the water carriers running to Tuscaloosa, so that parties not wishing to come by rail may use a water route.

Round trip tickets will be on sale May 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30. They may be used beginning with any of these dates with a final return limit of June 5, after which the reduced rate will not apply.

Good, but cheap accommodations in hotels, boarding houses, or select private homes will be obtainable. The congestion expected on account of the coming of thousands of visitors to the city has been prepared for ahead of time so that strangers will not find themselves unable to get suitable accommodations. On the other hand, the committee has the situation well in hand and will be able to provide everyone with comfortable and convenient rooms and, if wanted, private board.

GIRLS CLUB WORK

The Cooper Club held an interesting meeting Saturday afternoon at the home of its secretary, Miss Lillian Jones. Ten members were present, and a large number of visitors. A very instructive lecture was given by Dr. G. W. Williamson of Verbena on "The Relation of Proper Diet and Pure Food to Good Health." Mr. F. B. Collier of Clanton gave an interesting talk on farming and fruit growing in the western states, stressing the care of the soil and its productiveness. The pictures of the beautiful wheat fields and orchards were very much enjoyed. Such lectures as these are appreciated as one of our best educational features in the work.

CAN NOW EAT POP CORN AND BANANAS

Little Girl Was Always Delicate Until She Commenced Taking Tanlac

I'm certainly very thankful for what Tanlac has done for my little daughter," said Mrs. J. P. Westbrooks, who lives at 2608 Thirtieth Avenue, North Birmingham, Ala., to the Tanlac representative who had called to see her a few days ago. "My daughter, Ansel, who is eleven years of age, has been a sufer from indigestion and pains in her shoulders and in her chest for a long, long time—in fact, all her life. We have tried many doctors and most everything we could hear of, but they did not bring her any relief.

"She was so nervous and unstrung and so run down that I don't believe she could have gone through the winter. She couldn't eat hardly anything at all and sleep was impossible for her, and it was pitiful to see he in that condition, and to think, too, that we had done everything we could without any benefit from it. Especially in the summer months she would get in a very run-down condition and would lose weight, and you can see that she hasn't any too much weight to lose.

"I had read in the papers about Tanlac, and a neighbor who has taken it insisted that I get a bottle and put her right on it and it looked like from the first half of the bottle that it was the very thing she had needed. She has taken three bottles now, and I am certrainly thankful for what it has done for her. She sleeps just as well as could be at night and eats everrything she wants. She was eating popcorn and bananas yesterday and they didn't seem to have any bad effect on her at all. She has gained a little in weigt, and I believe now that she is eating and the food seems to thoroughly agree with her, and she will gain steadily.

"She does not seem to be a bit nervous and doesn't object to taking Tanlac one bit. She is just as bright and cheerful as she can be and it has made us all mighty happy about her recovery, and we all are glad to recommend Tanlac as being the medicine that has done what lots of others medicines failed to do. I am glad to say a good word for it, and tell others of its merits.

Miss Ansel Westbrook was in the room at the time and remarked. "If I had a thousand dollars, I would spend it all for Tanlac, because I feel so good and eat anything I want, and I can sleep so good and sound at night."

Be it further resolved that this camp of Modern Woodmen of America extend to the bereaved relatives our heart felt sympathy in this sad hour, and that the station of the Past Consul be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the camp, and published in both county papers, and also a copy furnished to the family of the deceased.

HUGHES HAS A BIG LEAD OVER ROOSEVELT, SAYS THE NEW YORK HERALD

NEW YORK, May 21.—The New York Herald, in its weekly review of the Republican presidential nomination situation, says in part:

Justice Hughes has a long lead on the field in the race for the Republican nomination for president, and has made substantial gains during the last week.

Theodore Roosevelt continues second as the real choice of the elected delegates, but is a long way from the nomination.

This is the information which the Herald has obtained from its correspondents throughout the country. There is little indication that the reported combination of "favorite son" candidates against the two leaders, has had the result expected by the old guard.

Hughes Makes Gains

Reports to the Herald indicate that the support for Justice Hughes has increased by forty-nine delegates during the week in addition to those elected, or indicated by primary results during that time. It is likely that Roosevelt has lost twenty-eight delegates which the Herald heretofore has classified as for him. This is the exact number which he apparently gained among the new delegates elected.

Based entirly upon the assumption that Justice Hughes will not refuse the nomination and upon calcuations of what will happen when the "favorite son" candidates will be eliminated, the Herald's canvass of the situation gives delegates already elected who really favor the nomination of Justice Hughes. This is only forty-one votes from the 493 necessary to nominate, with fifty-six delegates yet to be selected. The eight Vermont delegates will not be elected until next Friday, but the primary indication that they will be for Justice Hughes has been considered in making the estimate of his real strength.

Missouri Veers to Hughes

The gain for Justice Hughes over the Herald's earlier estimates has come mostly through rearrangement of its figures for Minnesota and Missouri. The Heralds original information was that all of Minnesota's twenty-four delegates were likely to be for Roosevelt. The consensus now is that only eight can be counted for him, and that sixteen are likely to be for Justice Hughes, if the latter does not forbid the use of his name.

In Missouri the entire delegation of thirty-six, always classified as anti-Roosevelt, is now said to have veered toward Justice Hughes. There are many voters of German descent in Missouri. They are said to favor the nomination of the justice almost without exceptinon.

The Herald has also revised an estimate of the Hughes strength in the New York delegation, and now places it at least at fifty on the final ballot, if Justice Hughes' is still amont the entries at that time. The outside estimate of the Roosevelt strengh in his state has been ten to twelve.

Supporters of Elihu Root have repeated their assertion that there willl be thirty-five Root votes from New York state. If this is true, there is every indication that this will be the first-ballot strength only.

NEWS BULLETIN

Larger postal savings deposits will now be accepted at the post office. This is made possible by an important amendment to the postal savings act just approved by President Wilson. A postal savings dopositor may now carry an account amounting to $1,000, upon which interest will be paid. Formerly $500 was the maximum amount one could have at his credit. This enlargement of postal savings facilities will be very gratifying to thousands of depositors who have already reached the old limit of $500, and are anxious to entrust more of their savings to Uncle Sam. Another feature of the Amendment that will avoid further embarassment to the public and to postal officials, is the doing away with the limit on the amount that could be accepted from a depositor monthly. Under the old law only $100 could be deposited in a calendar month. The amendment abolishes this restriction.

While the postal savings system has already proved a signal success, as is shown by the fact that more than half a million depositors have over eighty million dollars standing to their credit still it has fallen short of meeting the full demands of the public, because of the restrictions which have now been eliminated.

Postmaster General Burleson, and third assistant General Dockery have been tireless in their effeorts to secure a modification of the limitations and a new liberalizing legislation is particularly gratifying to them.

BOY SCOUTS PICNIC

The Boy Scouts of Chilton County hereby tender their thanks to the citizens of Clanton for their help in making the picnic a great success on May 20th. There were three games of base ball played on that day. The games were played with the most harmony and it was one of the best days of our lives. The kindness of the Y. M. C. A. boys of Montgomery added to the success of the day greatly. A finer set of boys we have never seen. We also wish to thank Mr. Jones, the physical director of the Y. M. C. A. for his kindness and instruction during the day. Rev. Walker, Mr. A. W. Jones and Prof. H. C. McDonald gave us some very interesting and touching talks in regard to our lives and to the training of our boys and it is our aim and ambition to be of service to our fellow man and especially to our boys.

We also wish to thank little Percy Hopkins for his noble and manly way of presenting the U. S. flag to our boys while the band played America. We wish to thank the Thorsby band for their noble work during the day. And we most earnestly thank the ladies for their kindness rendered us. We feel that we have the co-operation of the citizens of Chilton County in this great movement.

Be it resolved that we tender our appreciation to the Y. M. C. A. boys of Montgomery and extend to them a welcome to our homes and a warm place in our hetrts.

'AMERICANISM' TO BE PLATFORM PLANK IN G. O. P. FIGHT

Military Preparedness and Protective Tariff are two Other Features.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 21.—Preparation of the Republican platform which will be submitted to the national convention in Chicago next month has been begun, according to word brought here by Fred W. Upham, chairman of the local committee on arrangements for the convention.

Strong planks favoring Americanism, military preparedness and a protective tariff for the protection of American industries, it is said, will be among the important subjects considered by those drafting the platform.

The plank on Americanism and military preparedness will, it is declared, be sufficiently strong to meet every reasonable demand of progressive Republicans.

It is said that prominent Progressives who recently returned to the Republican party will be consulted before the finishing touches are put on these sections of the platform.

Root is Choice in East

"I talked with nearly all the 'Old Guard' leaders in the East and left New York convinced that Elihu Root is the most favored candidate for president in the Atlantic States," said Upham.

"He will have a majority of the delegates from New York and the other Eastern states on the early ballots, but the leaders have not decided whether they will be able to nominate him.

"If Root is not nominated I think a Western man will be chosen. The Eastern leaders are seriously considering Senator L. Y. Sherman of Illinois.

"One of the most prominent members of the 'Old Guard' told me he felt certain Roosevelt would not receive more than eighty votes on the first ballot.

"Most of the talk for Hughes is from men in the East who are not delegates to the convention. The Roosevelt supporters in New York are devoting most of their energy to fighting Hughes. I think the convention will go at least five days."

Nominating speeches for presidential candidates may be limited to ten minutes each and seconding speeches to five minutes for each candidate, according to plans.

FINAL COMMENCEMENT NUMBER.

The regular final examinations of the high school were completed last Thursday at noon. Before the examinations began in the morning, all the school met in the auditorium and the final chapel exercises of the session were conducted by Prof. McDonald. The announcement of all the commencement exercises was made in the order in which they should appear.

On Thursday evening at 8:30 the commencement exercises were opened by Mr. McDonald, after which a very interesting musical program was given by the Department of Music, in which Prof. Tinsley presented Miss Beverly Hester in Graduating Recital. Miss Hester was assisted in the occasion by Misses Izora Callen, Roberta Curry, and Kathleen Mullins. The ushers were Misses Bessie Davis and Annie Gragg, and Messrs. Oscar Jones and Omar Reynolds.

The Annual Recital of the Music Department was held Friday evening, beginning at 8:00 o'clock. The program consisted of a song by the School Chorus; a valse—eight hands by Misses Herring, Cox, Kanjutzky, and Goodgame; vocal solo by Miss Roberta Dickinson; piano solo by Miss Warrene Spigener; piano solo by Miss Mayzelle Mullins; vocal solo by Miss Izora Callen; piano duet by Misses Mullins and Higgins; vocal solo by Miss Roberta Curry; piano solo by Miss Ruby Gore; quartet by Misses Curry and Davis, Messrs. McDonald and Tinsley; piano solo by Miss Pauline Woodyard; garottee—two pianos by Misses Spigener, Adams, Mullins, McDonald, Davis and McDonald; quartet by Misses Curry, Davis, Woodyard and Callen; grand valse brialliante—two pianos by Misses Hester, Teel, Cooper and Pipes; and song by School Chorus.

Dr. Geo. H. Stoves of Bessemer, delivered the commencement sermon Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock. Dr. Stoves illustrated his ability to hold the attention of hearers. His sermon was not a short one, yet no manifestation of impatience was made by the crowded auditorium which had the pleasure and privilege of listening to his great genius both as a preacher and as an educator. The announcement of another sermon was made for Sunday night, but on account of bad weather it was omitted.

The members of the Senior Class together with a few of their closest friends were delightfully entertained by Miss Ara Mullins at the home of Dr. and Mrs Amzi Gowan Saturday night. At the entrance of the guests they were served with punch, after which all joined in playing. After the games were over and the prize awarded to the winner, Miss Ruby Gore, the visitors were served with cream.

Monday night came the Under-graduate play which consisted of four acts. Before the play began several musical numbers were rendered as follows: Song by Misses Curry, Davis, Woodyard and Callen; piano duet, Misses Teel and Higgins; Vocal solo, Miss Roberta Curry; piano duet, Misses Cooper and Mullins; piano duet, Misses Curry and Gore; valese, Miss Pauline Woodyard.

Between acts 1 and 2, a piano duet was played by Misses Sybil and Gertiwyl McDonald; between 2 and 3, piano duet by Misses Adams and Herring; between 3 and 4, vocal quartet, Misses Curry, and Davis, Messrs. McDonald and Tinsley.

The Seventh Grade Commencement which was prepared for all the seventh-grade pupils for the entire county, was held at the high school auditorium Tuesday morning. The program for the occasion consisted of several musical numbers together with some reciting. A very appropriate speech was delivered by Prof. J. B. Hobdy of the state department of Education. County Superintendent W. T. Bean made a short speech, after which he delivered the diplomas to all the seventh grade pupils who passed the seventh grade examinations, which were held a few weeks ago.

The Graduating exercises of the Senior Class were held Tuesday night. The Program was opened with a song by the school chorus class. Miss Beverly Hester, a member of the class of 1916, delivered a vocal solo, after the Salutatory Address was made by Miss Annie Gragg. The Goat's report of the Class was read by Mr. Edgar Teel, which was followed by the Valedictory, presented by Mr. Omar Reynolds. Prof. Jas. S. Thomas of the University of Alabama delivered the Baccalaureate Address, after which diplomas were presented by the Principal, Prof. McDonald, to the following members of the Class: Misses Annie Gragg, Bessie Davis, Ara Mullins, and Beverly Hester, and Messrs. Omar Reynolds, Oscar Jones, Felston Mullins, Jean Wyatt, and Edgar Teel. After a short speech by Prof. McDonald the song of the class of '16 was sung by the members of the Senior Class, and benediction was offered by Rev. Walker.

This closed the exercises for this year.

With this issue the High School News will cease its appearance for this session of school. The board of editors of The News wishes to thank its readers and all the members of school who have contributed to its success for the interest and support which they have taken in its weekly visits to their homes. The managers of the county papers are also to be generously thanked for so willingly allowing us the space in their papers for publishing the weekly happenings of the institution.

WEEKLY FARM LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER J. A. WADE.

Farmers Indifferent to Advice

For the past two years the moral and financial effect of the European war and the invasion of the Mexican boll weevil on agricultural conditions in Alabama has convinced the progressive thinking people that a complete change of farming methods and crop systems must be made and that time is too valuable to be wasted in arguments; that prompt and dicisive action only could save the people from serious financial and industrial embarrassment which threatened financial losses to the rich and suffering to the poor.

Heroic efforts have been made to bring about the necessary change in conditions and to save a portion of the cotton crop from distruction by the boll weevil. Other crops such as grain, hay and live-stock of all kinds have been incouraged. The United States Department of Afigriculture, State Department of Agriculture, State Colleges, Bankers' Associations, Railroad Industrial Departments, Chambers of Commerce and Farmers' Organizations have all co-operated to bring about better conditions. The County Demonstration Agents are stronger and better posted men than the state has ever had before. The supervising agents are hard working, enthusiastic and qualified men. Thousands of bulletins have been sent out from Washington, Montgomery and Auburn. Good speakers have visited nearly every community and the agricultural papers, state and county papers have made a specialty of agriculturaal articles. The publicity has been handled by men of practical and scientific knowledge and long personal experience. The campaign for better farming has been more complete in Alabama than any other state. No farmer who can hear, read or write can truthfully say that he has not been warned of the danger lurking in the ruts of the old system and advised as to new and better methods, yet it is surprising to look over the state and see how many people who call themselves farmers and who are dependable upon their physical labor for a living, education of their children and their future welfare, carelessly plodding along the old way. We have advised them to diversify their crops and provide all food and feed for the family and live-stock on the farm, yet some people are still depending on cotton alone. We have advised widening out the cotton rows, planting early under boll weevil conditions, yet narrow rows are to be seen on many farms. Farmers in many instances have delayed planting until late and the germination has been further delayed by dry weather. These careless slow farmers have the blues. They will relapse when gathering time comes and on pay day they will have fits. Judging the future by the past, these same people will not pick the weevils from the small cotton nor pick up the first crop of fallen squares as they have been advised to do. They will not attach a chain or brush to the plow and cultivate shallow and frequently as they have been advised. They will have to be shown, and to show them means that they will suffer themselves thrown at the feet of proverty by their own unheeding negligence and their wail for help will be pitiful.

I know this is plain talk and I would talk even stronger if I thought it would reach the negligent farmer and help him, and if I knew it would better his condition.

JAMES A. WADE
Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries.

STORM OF HISSES DROWNS T.R. BOOST IN IOWA MEETING

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., May 21.—A near riot resulted at the State Republican Convention here when Robert Heely of Webster county attempted to boost the candidacy of Col. Roosevelt for the presidential nomination at the expense of Senator Albert B. Cummins, Iowa's favorite son.

Heely declared this a time for the party to choose the strongest man, and characterized Roosevelt as the "greatest man in the world." At the mention of Roosevelt's name a bedlam of hisses and yells broke loose and Heeley was hooted from the stage.

Another sensational incident occurred when Attorney General George Cosson, candidate for Governor, addressed the convention and was forced to give way before his time limit of ten minutes had expired by a clamorous call for Lieut. Gov. William L. Harding that drowned out the speaker.

Harding in his speech eulogized Cummins, whose candidacy unanimously was endorsed by the delegates by resolution.

No platform timber was selected definitely. The temporary organization held with the exception of Tempoary Chairman Clark, who gave way to Charles E. Packett of Waterloo.

Iowa delegates to Chicago Republican convention met tonight and chose Senator W. S. Kenyon as Chairman, Jas. A. Devitt of Oskaloosa Treasurer and John M. Jamison, Des Moines, Sergeant at arms.

The delegation will meet at the Iowa headquarters in the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Sunday afternoon before the convention on June 4.

Illinois G.O.P. to open Headquarters

CHICAGO, ILL., May 20.—State headquarters of the Republican party in Illinois will be opened in Chicago about June 25 at the great Northern Hotel, Jackson boulevard and Dearborn street. This announcement was made today by Fred E. Sterling of Rockford, Chairman of the state committee.

REPUBLICANS PLAN 'DRIVE' TO ECLIPSE THE CAMPAIGN OF 1896

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Preparation for a national Republican campaign on a scale to surpass even the memorable campaign of 1896 are under way. Expansion of committees, creation of additional committees, elaboration of organization and new features of effort in various directions will go to make up a political "drive" of unexampled vigor and thoroughness. The plans of Republican managers include:

1. As one new feature, the creation of a special committee composed of members of the national committee and senators not members of that committee, which will pay special attention to the senatorial contests in states where the Republicans hope to win.

2. As another new feature, expansion of the Congressional Campaign committee organization through the appointment of seven sub-committees comprising practically the entire membership of that committee, and putting every man to work to help carry the house of Representatives.

To Strengthen Committee.

3. A similar disposition of forces in the National committe and strength in that organization, giving the Progressives a hand in the management fo the campaign if reunion is effected at Chicago.

4. Utilization to the utmost of Jonathan Bourne's half million dollar Republican publicity Association, that has been at work for more than a year, and which has already collected campaign contributions known to run into large figures.

The formation of a senatorial campaign committee is a distinct departure, designed to look after the interests of senatorial candidates as the congressional committee looks after nominations for the House. The idea originated with Republican senators, and the details will be worked out in Chicago after the re-organization of the National Committee.

The Republican National Congressional Campaign Committee already has expanded and completed its organization upon a larger scale than ever before known, and will wage the most vigorous campaign since the hot fights of 1898 and 1900. The executive committee has been expanded from nine members to seventeen and endowed with wide anthority.

McKinley Chosen Chairman.

Representative William B. McKinley of Illinoise has been chosen Chm. of the Executive Committee, with Representative Tilson of Connecticut vice chairman, Representative Miller of Deleware, secretary and former Senator Nathan B. Scott, now a resient of Washington, treasurer.

A subcommittee on ways and means has been appointed, of which Representative Esch of Wisconsin is chairman. There is a subcommittee on organization, Representative Halvor Stevenson being chairman; a subcommitte on finance, Representative Austin of Tennessee, chairman; a subcommittee of Literature, Representative Kahn of California, chairman; on publicity, Representative Fess of Ohio chairman; speakers, Representative Slemp of Virginia, chairman; law, Representative Graham of Pennsylvania, chairman.

W. Tyler Page of Maryland is assistant secretary Eecutive committee. Representative Woods of Iowa is chairman, and John C. Eversman secretary of the full committee.

The congressional committee will maintain headquarters in Chicago during the convention, and thereafter will open headquarters in New York and Chicago.

Sounds good to hear a fellow come up the street and say, "come on, lets go down to the base ball park and see the game."

We are in receipt of a dollar for subscription from Mr. Omar Gray of Verbena Route 1, together with his best wishes to the Union-Banner. Many thanks, Brother Gray.

The Democrats saw something in the meeting here last Saturday that "presages certain victory" for their ticket in November. That is a whole lot to see in a little squad of men like the crowd they had at their "most enthusiastic" conclave.

The Clanton Press is making the biggest mess we ever saw, trying to create the impression that Reynolds is just interested in the campaign because of his personal greed for office.

Why don't they search for the reason for Reynolds' populairty in the record he made while in office? That's why he is popular. That's why the people want him.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK THORSBY INSTITUTE

The commencement exercises of the Thorsby Institute will be opened on Saturday night, May 27, when a recital will be given by the Music Department. On Sunday morning at 8:00 o'clock the commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. C. E. Morman of Marbury, Ala. On the following Tuesday night a commencement contest will be held by the Hellen Keller Literary Society. Wednesday morning will be the tournaments day; one to be held between the Juniours and Seniors and the other between the Alumni and Faculty. In the afternoon a graduating recital will be given by the Music Department. The graduating exercises of the Senior Class will be given Thursday evening. The occasion will be opened with music by the Band, after which will be invocation, and piano solo by Inga Erdahl. Then will come essays by the graduates, Fendell Peterson and Alma Dippery, followed by vocal solo by Grace Michelson. The address will be delivered by Dr. J. M. Shelburne, President of Howard College. The Glee Club will also entertain, after which the diplomas will be presented to the graduates.

J. Bice of Thorsby passed by our office in a big hurry early Monday morning. The editor hollered and asked him what he was in such a hurry about, whereupon he answered and said he was chasing the Democratic prosperity.

WILSON TO WRITE PARTY'S PLATFORM, AIDED BY STONE

WASHINGTON, May 21.—President Wilson will write the Democratic platform that will be adopted at the St. Louis Convention, if party leaders are correct in their statements. He will receive suggestions from Democratic leaders, but it is taken for granted, both in Congress and in the president's cabinet, that he will be the real author.

On questions of foreign policy it is known the president will be aided by Chairman Stone of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, an experienced platform builder. Stone's influence is said to have been shown in the recently adopted declaration of Missouri Democrats, and the latter document is believed to forecast to a considerable extent the national platform, so far as foreign affairs are concerned.

The United States have been kept out of war.

America's rights have been forcefully championed.

A policy of nonintervention in Mexico has succeeded, while prompt action has followed raids across the border.

The Monroe doctrine has been upheld, fair dealing with sister American republics insisted upon, and friendly feeling created.

ALL DAY SINGINGS

Editor Union-Banner:

Will you allow me space for a few words to reply to Bro. J. Bice's letter in the Union-Banner of May 11 in regard to all day Sunday Singings.

Now, Bro. Bice, it appears from the reading of your letter that you do not consider all day singings a mode of worship and that going to church and Sunday School is the only mode. You say that the all day singings are robbing God of the services that belong to him. That one assertion alone is evidence that you do not consider all day song service as being God's service, and yet you say in the very same article that nothing lifts your soul higher toward heaven than good singing in church and Sunday school services.

Bro. Bice, do not think because all who go to the all day song service are not christians that God does not approve of the all day song service.

Are all who go to Sunday school christians? I say not. And because they are not all christians does God reject the Sunday school cause?

Are all who go to church christians? I say not. And for that reason does God reject the church cause?

I love Sunday school and, Bro. Bice, I am just like you when it comes to the singing part of it, it lifts my soul higer toward heaven than any other part of the service, and that should prove to you Bro. that singing is the sweetest part of worship.

Why object to an all day singing when it lifts the christians soul higher toward heaven than any other mode of worship on earth? Why object to an all day singing when they bring we Methodist and Primitive Baptist together as one in God's service, and can rejoice all day long in singing praises to God who said "Mark then that cause divisions and avoid them." A sacred song service is the sweetest sacred service that the christian can engage in, and that is why they continue all day and some times part of the night. We do not object to sinners coming to them either as they are liable to lift his soul up out of his sins where he can also rejoice all day in singing praise to God.

John Wesley said on one occasion that he believed his brother, Charles, sang more souls into heaven than he preached into heaven.

Now Bro. Bice, I hope that you may have more light on the subject of all day singings and that you may soon be able to come in with we Methodist and Baptist and be one in all day song service where your soul can get so near the pearly gates of heaven and there feast all day long with other happy souls.

Yours for song service both day and night,

A. A. JACKSON

NO BASKET BALL GAME

We, the trustees and patrons of the Collins Chapel District, have abolished the basket ball playing entirely; and if any of the teachers come here to take up his school and goes to advocating basket ball he can go back home and we can elect another one in his place. So we are warning you in due time.

Of course the children must have exercise, but there are other ways for them to take it. There is exercise they can take which will do them more good and which is not half so dangerous as basket ball. Basket ball playing keeps their mind and their whole study on ball playing and not on the books. It is no game for decent people to play. It may be a decent game but the uniform that they wear in playing it is not decent; and anyone that is decent and has any respect for himself is not going to play any such game.

Now, if we are going to pay the teachers from $50 to $100 per month to come to our school to play basket ball, we had better keep our children at home, where we can watch after them, and let the teachers do likewise or let them play by themselves and on their own hook.

Now are we going to let such as this continue to go on in our school and pay out our money, and let our children grow up without any education? I say they never know anything but to play basket ball. So let's stop it allover our country, and maybe our children will be better educated.

MORE THANKS

Clanton, Ala., May 14, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to express my appreciations to those who supported me so loyally in my race for Comissioner from the Fourth District. While I was defeated, yet I fail to find words to express my sincere thanks to those who honored me with their votes.

I cancontribute my defeat to but one cause and that is I did not receive quite enough votes.

Especially do I wish to thank the people of my home Beat for their support and influence in my behalf during the campaign.

Now the primary is over and we have a good clean and competent ticket nominated, therefore let us all fall in line and work for the success of our party from now until election day and victory will be ours by the largest majority ever had in our county. I for one intend to do all I can for that end.

Again thanking you for your support, and promising every effort at my command for the success of the ticket nominated. Any time I can do anything for the benefit of our people I am ready.

Respectfully,
J. T. ROCKETT.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please give me a short space in your paper to thank the voters of this county for their confidence, trust and honor they placed in me by giving me the nomination for County Commissioner from the Third District to succeed myself.

I want to say that I expect to use all the economy possible to relieve the county of its burdensome debt, and serve the people of the county to the very best of my ability, giving special favors to no one.

I did not make any canvass in the primary but expect to do all I can to secure the largest vote for the entire ticket in November that we have ever had. I think we have good and capable men on our ticket and expect to see them all elected in November.

Now thanking the people again for their trust and confidence they have placed in me, I remain, as ever.

J. H. M'CAULEY HAS GAINED 15 POUNDS

"Tanlac Has Made A Real Farmer Of Me Once More," He Declares.

"I suffered with stomach trouble for twelve years, but I tell you, young man, this Tanlac medicine has about ended my troubles and what's more than that, I've gained fifteen pounds since I began taking it," said J. H. McCauley, a well known and highly respected farmer of Dade County, in talking to the Tanlac representative at the Live an Let Live Drug Company, Chattanooga a few days ago.

"Just think of a farmer having to live on raw eggs and the like! Farming is hard work, and a man ought to have plenty of good substantial food to keep going. But raw eggs was just about all that I could eta, for my stomach was in such a bad shape it couldn't stand much of anything. If I did eta much I would have to pay for it afterwards. The pit of my stomach was as sore as a boil and at times I would almost choke with gas on my stomach. I got so weak I could hardly stand on my feet—much less work. I was constipated most of the time and had dreadful dizzy spells. I've always said farm life was the happiest life of all, but I tell you a man in the shape I was in couldn't get much enjoyment out of it.

'I tried one medicine after another, but none of it did me any good until I got hold of Tanlac. I began taking it and felt better from the first three or four doses. My appetite picked up and I began to eta things I hadn't touched in months and everything tasted good and agreed with me.

"When I began taking Tanlac I weighed 137 pounds, but I've been gaining steadily every since and now weigh 152 pounds, which is a gain of fifteen pounds. I am not bothered with pains in my stomach any longer and I feel good in every way—just like Ihad been made all over again. I'm not constipated like I was, am no longer nervous and feel stronger than I have in years. I am now able to work in the field from sunrise to sunset. I go to bed early and sleep all nigth, and wake up next morning feeling like a sixteen year old. I've taken four bottles of medicine.

"Tanlac has made a real farmer of me again, and you don't know how happy I am. I just feel like telling every one I see what a wonderful thing it tis."

Tanlac is sold in Clanton exclusively by Upchurch Drug Co.

TUSCALOOSA TO BE GAILY DECORATED FOR CELEBRATION

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 3.—With red, white and blue flags, bunting, and streamers of electric lights the city will be decorated when the time comes for the celebration of the centennial of Tuscaloosa, which will be May 29, 30 and 31. The decarations committee has spared no effort in order to obtain brilliant and beautiful designs. The beautification of the city for the event has been handed over to Harry W. Lewis, of Atlantic City, who has for several years past been in charge of the decoration of New Orleans for the annual carnival.

The state colors, crimson and white, will chiefly predominate in decorating, although some blue will also be used, which will make the color scheme national as well. Bunting and flags will serve for daylight decorations, while at night the city will be lit from end to end with hundreds of electric lights, streamers of which will form an archway over the streets. Besides the street decorations the merchants of the city will decorate their places of business with flags and bunting and also many private residences will receive similar treatment.

While all of the city will be gaily decked out for the occasion the downtown section will outstrip the remainder in splendor. Greensboro avenue and University avenue will be most beautifully decorated and brilliantly illuminated as will the other streets on the route of the grand parade. The committee has devoted all of its time and a great deal of money to provide appropriate decorations and the city is expected to present a gayer and livlier appearance than ever before.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Reglator Co., 713 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers. It is a delight to read it.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM THE DEPT. OF EDUCATION

A Unique Entertainment

Recently the patrons of the Clay County High School experienced a most interesting entertainment provided by themselves. A kitchen shower was arranged under the auspices of the department of domestic science and arts. This proved to be a very enjoyable occasion, and by reason of the variety of useful things presented was quite profitable. An interesting literary program was rendered by the pupils.

Is the Constitution of Ala. Sacred?

The very fact that a new Constitution has been demanded from time to time by enlarged social and economic conditions is the best evidence that no instrument could be drawn that would meet the requirements of a very expanding growth. One of the great objects of the Constitution of 1875 was to provide means to protect the property of the state against practical spoliation by burdensome taxation imposed by representatives chosen by an electorate composed very largely of non-tax payers. One of the great objects of the Constitutional Convention of 1901 was to eliminate this ignorant and non-tax paying part of our population and how well the work was done everybody knows.

It must be admitted that the existing tax limitations constitute a serious obstacle to the working out of bettering conditions in rural Alabama. Our soil and climate have unsurpassed attractions but without good schools they will not attract to our rural counties the intelligent and progressive population so much desired.

To get and keep in the country the class of people who will probably develop our preponderating agricultural interests and at the same time furnish a constant stream desirable recruits for the work of the cities and towns, the means of securing by communty efforts the advantages which surround country life and other section must not be withheld.

To turn the tide toward, instead of from the country, opportunities for securing good schools in the country districts must be improved. The democracy of the proposed amendment should appeal to every intelligent and fairminded person. It is not only undemocratic, but despotic to deny the people the control of their local affairs. True we surrendered the principle of local taxation in 1875, but we did so to meet an emergency which, happily, has passed.

The proposition now is merely to reassume a power given up in 1875 to prevent spoliation such as occurred during reconstruction. That danger is gone and only good could come from reassuming it. The people made the Constitution and they have the sacred authority of changing it when the public good requires. The other states in the Union are our competitors and if we do not give opportunities equal to those offered by our competitors we cannot expect the most desirable immigration into the state, but rather we shall find some of our best people going away.

The right of local taxation is granted and guaranteed by a constitutional amendment, will in a very short time bring about enchanced values and better returnes from the property which we now own.

Checking a Waste

The Secretary of the Federal Department of Commerce and Labor, Hon. Wm. C. Redfield, has sent an unusual message to the teachers of the United States. It is no less than an appeal to the children in the schools to pratice the art of collecting and saving rags and old papers.

This country makes 15,000 tons of paper and paste board every day. The manufacturers are now suffering a shortage of raw materials. After reading our newspaper we burn it to get rid of it. It is thus lost to the world and must be replaced by fresh inroads upon our forests and by purchase of rags and papers from more thrifty peoples. Even in that way the supply is not sufficient. The manufactures are embarrassed with existing conditions. Nearly all of our old paper and rags, if saved, could be used again. What one family could save does not seem much; but all our families together use 15,000 tons every day. A single edition of one metropolitan Sunday newspaper is said to strip twelve acres of woodland.

Secretary Redfield does not wish us to become ragpickers or scavengers—he merely desires to stop this monumental waste.

The Wrong Theory.

To pursue a dispute as to hours and wages on the theory that workingmen are entitled to all that can be forced from employers and extorted from the people by employers is not the best way to promote the permanent welfare of labor.—New York World.

"PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH"

Here Is a Druggist Who Takes What He Sells.

Mr. I. E. Cothram, the progressive druggist of Alexis, Alabama, writes an interesting letter in which he says, in part: "I have handled GRANGER LIVER REGULATOR for a number of years, have sold it and used it in my family, and can safely say there is none better. Have never had a complaint from a customer."

It's a mighty good sign when a man uses what he sells. But that's only one of the many proofs of the superiority of GRANGER LIVER REGULATOR that have developed during the many years that it has held the confidence of American homes.

In any case of stomach, liver or bowel trouble, Granger Liver Regulator is the best choice. It's mighty pleasant to take, even the children don't mind it. Moreover, it acts soothingly and painlessly, and at the same time puts the system back into tip-top working order.

It's made of time-proven plants, without a single harmful chemical—that's why it's so safe and good. And then, too, it isn't put up in a paper box that gets dirty and lets it lose its strength; but in a sturdy tin box that keeps it clean and strong to the last dose.

Ask your druggist for the liberal 25c can of Granger Liver Regulator, and keep it in your home always. You'll never lack the best "first aid" remedy for both little ones and grown-ups.

'Healthgrams' On Skin-- Flashed to Thousands

One of Nature's signals is an unhealthy skin. It is a scientific fact that the skin indicates the condition of the blood and the blood is the building material for the body and all its vital parts. Unless the blood is nourished and kept rich and healthy, it will evenually react on the organs it feeds and reduce the individual to a pitiable condition. Little do people realize the physical ailments that drain away strength and vitality and that can be traced straight to the poor supply of blood. Pimples, Eczema, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Carbuncles, Boils, Catarrh with its obnoxious results and the tendency to easily catch cold, Malaria and scores of other equally serious ailments, are all manifestations of bad blood. For over 50 years S. S. S. has been a mighty remedy for these disorders. Thousands of men and women have been relieved or actually cured by S. S. S. Many of them had spent years and hundreds of dollars for other remedies in a fruitless endeavor to regain health—a marvelous tribute to S. S. S. S. S. S. is purely vegetable and when taken into the stomach is absorbed by the blood, supplying certain elements which stimulate the action of the blood corpuscles and help them drive out impurities and build up the system. With such a tried and true medicine awaiting you at the closest drug store, will you go on suffering and looking badly when so many others similarly afflicted have turned to S. S. S. and found the meaning of perfect health. Our Medical Department will gladly advise you about your case without cost to you if you wish to avail yourself of this service. THE DEATH OF LITTLE IVA LEE GREEN

On May 16, 1916, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bollen Green and took away the spirit of their darling little daughter, Iva Lee. It suffered from the severe pains of infantile paralysis for two weeks. But God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove it from under the tender care and keeping of the kind and loving parents.

May God hlep the parents to give up their darling little girl and be ready to meet it when they are called.

Weep not for it is only a flower too precious for the earth.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

PAGEANT TO TELL IN VIVID SCENES DRAMATIC STORY OF TUSCALOOSA

Will Symbolize Past, Present and Future of Druid City.

NATURAL AMPHITHEATRE WILL SERVE AS STAGE.

Preparations Are Made on Elaborate Scale for Greatest Feature of Centennial Celebration.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 24.—The most striking event of the Tuscaloosa Centennial Celebration to be held on May 29, 30 and 31 is to be the dramatic and pictorial pageant of the history of Tuscaloosa combined with an allegorical masque which portrays in symbolic characters the agricultural, industrial, and educational past and future of the Druid City.

Neither time nor expense has been spared to make this feature of the celebration the most beautiful, interesting and inspiring presentation of its kind ever given in the South. The scenario of the pageant and masque has been written by Theodore A. Viehman and Howard F. Smith, of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg, under the direction and supervision of Thomas Woods Stevens. Mr. Stevens produced the famous St. Louis pageant and at present is working on the Newark, N. J., production. He is generally recognized as the foremost pageant master in the country.

The site selected for the presentation is a natural amphitheatre and, according to the pageant masters, a better one could not have been constructed. A fringe of dark green trees forms a background for the stage, which is covered with sward. Tiers of seats will be built upon two knolls facing the stage. A ravine, which cuts the woods, will be used to represent the Black Warrior River. It will be filled with water upon which canoes and boats will be floated.

The historical pageant itself will be a masterpiece of costuming and dramatic art. It will consist of seven or possibly more episodes taken from the historical life and growth of Tuscaloosa.

Between three and five hundred persons will take part in the pageant and masque. The costuming will be a special feature beginning with the Indian costumes and Spanish armor and concluding with homespun and present-day dress. Horses and oxen, canoes and prairie wagons, and other material for apt and effective characterization of the scenes will be used.

The pageant is composed of seven episodes. The first depicts the meeting of the Spanish explorer, De Soto and the Indian chieftain, Tushkalusa and is characterized by Indian dances and Spanish exhibitions of feats of horsemanship and use of broadswords and firearms. The Indian medicine man, who invokes the aid of the Great Spirit and predicts future happenings will also very probably be brought in The date of this scene is 1540.

The second episode presents the rescue of Mrs. Crawley, a white woman, by Tandy Walker. Mrs. Crawley has been captured by the Creek Indians, but is rescued from their hands by Walker, a friend of the Choctaw tribe, who was sent north from Mobile by General George S. Gaines. Mrs. Crawley's struggles with her tormentors and her final rescue are very vividly brought out.

Episode 3 takes place in 1816, the date of the founding of Tuscaloosa. A log cabin is upon the scene and traders arrive in ox carts. A few Indians are seen about, barters take place, and preparation for the laying out of a town are made. The first wedding in the city of Tuscaloosa, a double one, also takes place, as do other incidents connected with the founding of the city.

The fourth episode portrays the founding of the University of Alabama; the fifth, the departure of the last of the Indians; the sixth, the departure of the Warrior Guards, a famous company; and the seventh, the Leach-Carpenter wedding, which is broken up by the Yankee raid, and the burning of the University.

In the masque symbolic figures represent Tuscaloosa, the Spirit of the Soil and its products, Clay, Limestone, Iron and Coal, and farm products such as Cotton, Corn, Sugar Cane, etc. The devastation of the Civil War, reconstruction days in which the Ku-Klux Klan figures, the damming of the Black Warrior River, and in general the growth of Tuscaloosa in prosperity, wealth and fame are vividly depicted. Tuscaloosa will receive felicitations from sister cities, who will be represented by well-known citizens. The masque will end with a processional which passes in review before the Queen of the Centennial and her maids.

THE ART LEVEE

One of the prettiest of the entertainments that constituted and stamped as a success the commencement exercises of the Chilton County High School for 1916, was the art levee of Miss Annie Hall Bibb on last Saturday afternoon.

From 4 o'clock until some time past the stipulated hour for entertaining, did Miss Bibb and her class receive appreciative friends who came to inspect their work. Delightful fruit punch was dispensed by the pupils of the art class throughout the afternoon. The boy scouts of Montgomery who came up on Saturday morning to cross bats with our local scouts also became guests of the art class and partook of their refreshments.

For this auspicious occasion the spacious studio had been decorated with a lavish supply of ferns, palms and cut flowers, which afforded an exquisite setting for the splendid art display. An embankment of crimson rambler roses proved an effectual embellishment for the ivy-crowned punch bowl.

By special arrangement delightful music was discoursed during the entire afternoon.

In the art exhibit were drawings in charcoal, sepier, water colors, pen and ink and china oil paintings. The animated drawings, both in color and charcoal, were excellent. The fruit studies were beautiful. The heads in water colors were superb.

As a student Miss Bibb has enjoyed exceptional advantages: her own natural endowments and the instructors who were imminently successful in their profession. These advantages were clearly perceptible to critics who were capable of tracing connection between cause and effect.

The art of drawing is new to Chilton county students, and in the opinion of a conservative observer, it must have required an artist of indubitable energy, courage, perseverance and ability to realize so bountiful a fruition of her labors as did Miss Bibb.

Th entire art display exceeded the expectations of all.

Thanks to the efficiency of Miss Annie Hall Bibb as director of drawing, the art levee of our high school for 1916, has been written upon the pages of history as an unqualified success.

School at this place closed last Friday and the people of the community met at the church Saturday and spent the day singing and associating together. Taken all in all this has been a very successful year in our school and we hope that as we had an eight month school with such success our people will not be satisfied with anything less than eight months in the future.

The ladies of the communiy organized a School Improvement Association in the early fall and it has been of untold benefit to the school. Every community can and should have an association. Some seem to think that it is impossible to have an organization of this kind in a country school. This is amistaken idea. We organized under very unravorable conditions, in fact, we had only five members at the beginning and didn't exceed ten members during the entire year, yet the association has paid for an organ and raised the money to carpet the aisles of the church and to fit the school building with patent desks.

We are glad to say that Mr. Clarence Hayes who has been on the sick list for several days is able to be out again.

The young folks had a nice singing at Mr. J. C. Prim's Saturday night.

Messrs. W. H. and Edwy Conway and Prof. R. A. Smith of Union Grove were among the prominent visitors at the singing Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Mahan and Mrs. W. H. Splawn motored to Birmingham to the reunion last week.

Mr. Clyatt Prim and sister, Miss Ethel, visited at Mr. Ellis Scott's last Sunday.

WELD AMERICA IS COL ROOSEVELT'S PLEA AFTER WORLD WAR

Warns of Peril That will be Threatening Us After Couflict Ceases.

SPLIT MAY MEAN IGNOBLE DEATH.

Ready to Serve Americanism, His Reply to Authors' League Call For Candidacy.

OYSTER BAY, May 26.—Colonel Roosevelt to-night, made the following answer to a letter from a score of members of the Author's League pledging their support to his candidacy:

"There is no American who would not feel a genuine pride in receiving such a letter as yours; and he would be but a poor American unless he thought, in receiving it, not of its personal reference to himself, but of the strightforward and fearless manner with which you present the situation of this country, and the needs of this country at the present moment. With all that you say I am in the heartiest agreement. The one over-mastering issue at this moment is the issue of Americanism; for preparedness and international duty are both of them included in Americanism.

Stand Firm on Issues.

"You write me as Americans. You included in your number men of the colonial American stock, men who were born abroad or whoes parents were born abroad. You include men whose ancestors can be traced back to various European countries, and men from all sections of the United States, representing all shades of politics. But you stand together on the great issues now up for settlement in the great crisis that we confront. You feel as I feel, that this is, in fact, a crisis in the national life such as that which decided at the outset whether we were to continue to be a nation.

"The world is now passing through a cataclysm of anguish, terror and horror such as has not been surpassed in all record history. It is a time of destruction and also a time of birth. When the war comes to an end we shall see the Old World nations changed in many ways, both for good and for evil. But above all we shall see them with an emmensely quickened power not only in things military, but in things industrial, and with an immensely quickened sense of the close relatoship, whether friendly or hostile, that must hereafter obtain in international matters.

"Each nation will come out of this contest with the national spirit and the sense of national solidarity keyed to a higher pitch than ever before, with a stronger average sense in the community of dvotion to the common national life, and of the feeling of obligation to render service in peace and in was for the upbuilding of that national life.

Peril of Ignoble Death.

"Even if under such conditions we permit our own sense of national feeling to dwindle, if we permit our people to split into jarring fragments along the lines of creed or national origin, if instead of being all of us Americans we became a tangle of mutually hostile German-Americans, English-Americans, Irish-Americans or French Americans; if across the national coat of arms we draw the bar sinster of the hyphen, this republic will have before it only an ignoble life and will be even in peril of seeing that ignoble life ended by ignoble death.

"It is only by an aroused and aggressive spirit of Americanism, a spirit of patriotism which insists on every word of devotion to the country being translated into a concrete deed of service to the country, that we all face with a national soul the national duties that concern all of us alike.

"You have done your part by this letter in trying to develop such a spirit. As far as in me lies, I will in my turn try to justify your confidence, and in my turn seek also to aid in the development of that spirit."

Mr. Edison says there will be no provertyin a hundred years. There certainly won't be any for us.

WIFE OF DR. GRAGG VICTIM OF SUDDEN DEATH

About ten o'clock last Friday night the sudden death of Mrs V. J. Gragg occurred at her home in Clanton, as she was surrounded by her husband and children, and a few neighbors who had been hastily summoned when the pall of death was seen to be settling on the face of its victim.

Mrs. Gragg had been well the day prior to her death, observing no signs fo ill health. She had been out in the country on a fishing trip, returning late in the afternoon and performing her household duties with her usual manner.

She retired after supper but was aroused later by the ill feeling of one of her little boys. She arose to administer to him. Dr. Gragg had not retired, and as Mrs. Gragg lay down to sleep again after looking after the child, her husband spoke to her about something and she did not answer him. He was attracted by her demeanor, and at once saw that she was dying. Near neighbors and physicians were hastily summoned, and every effort was made to save her life, but in a very few short moments, a kind, devoted and loving wife and mother had departed from the pleasant association of her home and loved ones in this world.

The deceased was about 38 years of age, the wife of Dr. V. J. Gragg, a prominent physician of Clanton for several years. She leaves a daughter, Miss Annie Gragg, about 18 years old and three small sons.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Crumpton at the Beptist church Saturday afternoon. Interment was made in the Clanton cemetery.

CAPT. SIPMSON MAY REMAIN AT THE SOLDIERS HOME

Mountain Creek, Ala., June 1, 1916,

Six weeks ago the Board of Control of the Alabama Old Soldiers Home met and accepted the resignation of Capt. J. M. Simpson, the Commandant. The Board then elected Mr. Jerome Fuller, of Centerville, Ala., as Commandant, he to take charge on June 1st. Mr. Fuller came about 15 days since and looked over the job and yesterday decided to decline the position.

This makes it necessary for Capt. Simpson to remain on, and it is hoped by many of the old veterans that the Board will induce Capt. Simpson to withdraw his resignation, and, in the meantime, take a much needed vacation, which he so richly deserves after 10 years arduous work. This, it is expected, will be the result.

EVERGREEN

Just a few lines from this section. We haven't anything strange now to write there isn't any sickness in this community now, and every body seems to be up with their farm work. Some were cutting oats and wheat last week.

J. M. Williams and wife spent last Sunday at W. S. Beaird's.

Miss Della Williams was visiting out of this community last week.

From the looks of the sorghum patches around here it seems as if there was going to be plenty of sorghum and corn bread this fall whether we have any cotton seed to feed our cows on or not. Yes by the way we can feed velvet beans for I never saw the like of beans planted.

Well I must say to the men who were nominated on our ticket, I mean the Progressive ticket, I don't think we could have got a nicer and better set of men nominated than we did, from Judge Reynolds on through the ticket. Now that we have got a good ticket nominated I want every man to stand with their shoulder to the wheel and after the November election I think we can say that we have elected our ticket. I don't see anything that looks bad at all though I can see some people that had rather see Chilton county turned bottom side up than to see Reynolds our next Probate Judge.

I want to say to all who are not taking the Union-Banner if you want to know when we are going to have the all day singing at Floyd church you had better subscribe pretty soon for you will see it in the Union-Banner, and if you are not a subscriber you might miss it, then it would be too late and you might regret it.

PROF. McDONALD RE-ELECTED PRINCIPAL OF HIGH SCHOOL

The many friends of Prof. H. C. McDonald in Chilton county will be proud to learn of the action of the county board of education in retaining him as principal of the Chilton County High School for the next session.

During the past year Mr. McDonald's ability as an educator has shown forth brilliantly in his management of the Chilton school, and he has made a profound and lasting impression on our people for the very best that we could wish.

Being a provisional President seems to be just about as exciting in Ireland as in Mexico.

INDIANA LEADERS BOOSTING FAIRBANKS FOR PRESIDENCY

Committeeman, Goodrich Takes Boom to Chicago Plans Hot Fight.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 24.—Charles W. Fairbanks' presidential boom was brought to Chicago today by James P. Goodrich, national committeeman and Republican nominee for governor of Indiana. Headquarters will be opened tomorrw or Friday, and an active preconvention campaign launched for the Indiana "favorite son" candidate.

Goodrich will be aided in the management of the Fairbanks' campaign by Will H. Hayes, Chairman of the Republican State Committee of Indiana, Edward C. Toner, former Progressive state chairman, and Horace C. Stillwell.

Goodrich issued a statement in which he said:" Fairbanks' public record is sound on Americanism and preparedness, and every other live issue. He stands for an adequate preparedness for national defense, the restoration of the protective tariff, the restoration of the American flag to oceon trade routes and necessary organization to market our wares in the commercial centers of the world. Hisnomination for presidnet would insure the election senatorsfrom Indiana in November."

James A. Harris, national committeeman from Oklahoma, was another arrival. "Col. Roosevelt has many friends in our state, and there is some sentiment for Hughes," said Harris. "We want a man who can unite our party, one who can win."

Headquarters of a number of the other candidates for the Republican nomination for president will be opened in Chicago in the next few days. It is expected that by the first of next week the preconvention campaign of the different candidates will be in full swing. Rooms for headquarters have been engaged in "presidential row" in the Michigan avenue hotels for twelve aspirants for the nomination, and the indications are that the prelimonary campaign will be nosier than usual. John W. Dwight of New York is expected to open headquarters here with Eliuh Root, either tomorrow or Friday. The preconvention campaign for Senator L. Y. Sherman of Illinois, Senator John W. Weeks of Massachusetts, Theo. E. Burton of Ohio, Senator Albers B. Cummins of Iowa, Charles E. Hughes of New York, Senator Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin, T. Coleman Dupont of Deleware, it is said, will be well under way by next Monday. Other candidates are expected to get in the race later.

Among the arrivals today were: John Eversman of Washington, D. C.,secretary of the Republican Congressional Committee, and James L. Phillips, secretary to Charles D. Hilles, chairman of the national committee. Chairman Hilles is expected in Chicago tomorrow.

YOUNG MAN SAVES LIFE OF FRIEND AS HE WAS DROWNING

Bailey Miller, aged 28 years, had gone down for the second time in eight STANTON, Ala., May 29.—After feet of water at Dixie Station near here, Sunday afternoon, Howard Woodley, aged 20 years, leaped from the bank and saved the life of Miller. Miller had been swimming with several other young men and suddenly he sank in the middle of Mulberry Creek. He called for help and as he was about to go down the third time, Woodley leaped to his rescue.

Miller was frantic and caught hold of the man who was rescuing him. The two fought in the water, and Woodley went down once in pulling Miller to the bank. With barely enough strength to stand Woodley pulled Miller to the bank, and in a short time both were able to return to their home near Stanton.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM THE DEPT. OF EDUCATION

Progress of Valley Head.

The efforts of the teachers at Valley Head to improve school surroundings and more properly equip the building has met with success. Various plans were devised to raise funds. A second story has been added and furnished with blackboards and desks. The school has been painted and running water installed. This plumbing included the installation of a wash basin and was done by the principal with the assistance of the boys. Acetylene lights have also been put in and because of their successful operation a sentiment has been created for their installation in a number of homes in the community.

The school grounds have also been given attention. The trees planted recently are buding nicely. Wire has been ordered to inclose the school lot, in order that the flowers and shrubbery will be amply protected from stock running at large.

Just another evidence of the influence of a progressive school force that has caught the vision of larger and better needs.

Teacherages

Many states are now providing teachers' homes in connection with their rural schools, enabling them to secure better teachers and to keep these teachers permanently located. Infact, every state in the Union has one or more teacherages of which to boast as a means of ridding themselves of the "tramp teacher."

The State of Washington has set the pace for the establishment of teachers' cottages. In that state 108 were reported last year; Oklahoma boasts of 30, and North Dakota reports 22. In Alabama there are a number of these teacherages in connection with the schools of each race. Hale county has one which has been in use for many years by teachers in a rural school for white children. Probably one of the first ever established in the United States was in Macon County. In this one county there are seven teachers' homes. Such a strong sentiment for this effort to make the teacher a vital factor in the community hfe that the State Department of Education has prepared two plans for teachers' homes in the bulletin on "School Buildings and Grounds" recently issued.

Such teacherages furnish a good avenue for teaching domestic science, the equipment of the cottage being conveniently aranged for giving lessons in housekeeping, sanitation, and canning. The same applies to agriculture. The teachres' gardens should be models for the community. A good garden is conservatively estimated as being worth $100 annually to the average family.

Taxation or Investment?

The cost of education rightly interpreted should be regarded as an investment and not as a tax. Local assessments for educational purposes are seldom counted as a part of the taxes of most communties. It is a thing apart and imparts a different idea from that of taxation. We will not only get value received but infinitely more by the money we put into education. If we build a house, in which to live, we speak of that as an investment, not as a tax, although it costs us money. If we improve our farms, or even our live stock we speak of that as an investment and not as a tax—and this is accurate. If this be true in the case of a house and a farm and live stock, how much more true is it when the money is put into the education of our own children to prepare them for life. Instead of calling the campaign for the passage of the local tax in November a campaign for the purpose of levying a local tax, it should rather be called a campaign for an opportunity to make a local assessment or investment. The emphasis ought to be placed on the fact that we will get not only value received but many times more from the money now expended or to be expended for public education—and United States government statistics prove it.

DEATH OF LITTLE BURNICE CULP

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Culp on May 25 and took from them their little son, Burnice.

Little Burnice was sick only a short while when God in his wisdom saw fit to call him home to rest.

He leaves a father, mother, one brother and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. Weep not dear ones for Burnice has gone to rest, he is through with his pains and sufferings and has gone to rest with Jesus for ever more. Let us all prepare to meet little Burnice when we are called from this world of sin and sorrow.

His remains were carried to Shilo for burial. Rev. Deason conducted the funeral services.

God has taken him and now he is another link in heaven.

His cousin,
ANNIE CULP.

HUGHES IS FAVORED FOR THE PRESIDENCY BY GERMAN EDITORS

NEW YORK, May 24.—German editors in the United States, asked as to what is the attitude of the German-American voters toward Supreme Court Justice Hughes as a presidential possibility, have replied as follows:

"The New York Staats-Zeitung has nothing to add to the editorial which it printed last Friday," said Reginal Schroeder, managing editor. This editorial, in part, follows: "The closer we approach to the time when the delegates to the Republican National Convention will gather to nominate a candidate and draw up a platform, the more evident it becomes that Justice Charles E. Hughes of the Supreme Court may prove the man on whom the two great wings of the Republican party will unite."

F. P. Kenkel, editor of Amerika of St Louis, said:

"Hughes would certainly be a candidate to inspire the citizens of German blood with confidence. A man of integrity, conservative tendencies, he will appeal to this element, as Roosevelt, who has been chasing issues these many years, never can."

"Roosevelt Too Bombastic."

The editor of the Germania Herald of Milwaukee said: "We must maintain the position that we cannot discuss politice outside of our own editorial columns. New York papers are so unfairly pro-ally that we prefer to do nothing at the request of New York papers."

Gustav Mayer, publisher of the Gazette and the Demokrat of Philadelphia, declared: German-American voters and the Philadelphia Gazette and German Demokrat are for Justice Charles E. Hughes of the United States Supreme Court for president. At the present time the sentiment among our readers is in favor of Justice Hughes in preference to any of the presidential possibilities. Philander C. Knox stands next to Justice Hughes with the Germans for the Republican nomination. Col. Roosevelt, accoding to expressions of sentiment we have received from our readers, is too bombastic."

Dr. Emil Rosinger of the Detroit Abend Post and representing more than fifty-six German societies in Detroit, said: "If Justice Hughe sis nominated at the Chicago convention and comes out for 'true Americanism,' the Abend Post will support him, and the Detroit Germans undoubtedly will cast a large majority of their votes for him."

Held In Hightest Esteem.

Joseph F. Eltges, editor of the Buffalo Volksfreund, said: "I believe Justice Hughes is the one man who would have the German-American vote behind him. This is especially true of the New York State voters of German descent. Every German-American is for good goverment and holds Justice Hughes in the highest esteem because of his fight in this connection. The German-American voters of New York State and the country I believe only wish for a chance to cast their ballot for Hughes."

Edward Selbmann, city editor of the Illinois Staats Zeitung of Chicago, said: "None of the German papers has as much as intimated whom it will support. Not until after the Democratic and Republican conventions will the Germans make their choice. I will say, however, that there will be no German votes cast for Wilson, Roosevelt or Root."

IN MEMORY

On last Wednesday evening the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wash Heflin and took from them their darling babe, Thomas.

Little Thomas had been sick only a short time when God saw fit to call him to live with him on high. Weep not dear friends for your loss is heaven's gain.

Thomas was about two years old. He was laid to rest in cane creek cemetery on last Thursday evening at 4:30.

Weep not dear parents for we know Thomas is at rest on high.

Ones who loved him,

WEEKLY FARM LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER J. A. WADE.

If your oats are too short for binding or blighting from dry weather, it is best to make hay of them while the straw is gren rather than wait for them to mature. This applies to a greater percentage of upland oats in the state which are already considered a failure so far as grain is concerned. By saving the green straw for hay you get the greatest amount of feed value under the circumstances and get early possession of the land with other crops such as peas, soy beans, sorghum or late corn. Do not try cotton after oats as it is too late and will only produce boll weevils instead of cotton.

Have you looked over your cotton fields closely and destroyed all the adult weevils before they infested squares? If you have not, you have given the weevil the first advantage. The weevil charges more for his teaching than any other instructor and always collects his fees in advance. They work while you sleep, never go to town or take off a rainy day. They multiply as fast as fleas and each egg destroys a square and makes a boll weevil if not destroyed. Killing the weevil to prevent the egg is the solution.

When your cotton begins to show a few blooms and a light sprinkle of squares are seen lying under a plant here and there, it will be wise to get these squares and burn them while the task is small. If you fail to do this, business will pick up in your cotton crop about two weeks later.

Attach a chain drag or brush to your plow and agitate the cotton gently as you cuultivate. Cultivate shallow and avoid plowing up any more moist soil than possible. Moisture will not kill weevils or destroy the eggs in the squares but hot dry soil will kill the weevils and cook the eggs in the squares. Cultivate once a week until late in the summer. Use a cultivator, spring tooth harrow or some implement that cultivates a row at a time.

The writer saw a fellow this spring bar off his cotton two furrows to the row, then plow it two furrow to the row and then plow it again two furrows to the row, making six furrows before he got it ready to chop. That fellow has lots of patience and naturally loves to work his brawn instead of his brain. He is evidently good natured and would not complain if you served him soup with a fork. A spring tooth cultivator with the center tooth removed and run astride the row once a week for two weeks would have done the work in one third the time, saved two thirds of the expence and left the field in better condition for future cultivation.

When our farmers quit hitting three licks in the same place to accomplish that which one good, well directed stroke should have accomplished, they will then have taken the rock out of the other end of the sack and filled both ends with corn.

Look carefully over your system of farming and see how much lost motion you can eliminate. Many farmers that I know can eliminate half the expense without decreasing the results by useing a little more brain power and better machinery. They say machinery is expensive. This is true but wasted labor is twice as expensive.

JAMES A. WADE,
Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries.

THIS COUNTRY NEEDS ROOSEVELT AGAIN SAYS EX-SENATOR AGNEW

Because he is Leader of the Most Vital Issues On Americanism.

REPUBLICAN PARTY READY TO FOLLOW.

Declares Hughes Better Fitted to Serve People in Present Place. In Supreme Court

Former Senator George B. Agnew, who was the chief spokeman for Governor Hughes in the Legislature during the strenuous days of the race-track legislation, declared yesterday that he favored the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt because the latter has been the recognized leader on the vital question of Americanism. Mr. Agnew said yesterday that he retained the fullest measure of confidence in Justice Hughes, but he believed that the people of the country wished him to remain in the Supreme Court.

When asked why so strong a friend of Justice Hughes as he should support the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt, Mr. Agnew said:

"I am glad you have asked that question, as I think I can also explain the position of numerous members of the Roosevelt Republican Committee, particularly from New York, who were earnest supporters of Governor Hughes, but who now urge the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt. These men, including myself, retain in full measure the confidence in Justice Hughes which we made known by our public course while he was governor. We have no doubt of his Americanism or his courage, and we resent the suggestion that if elected President he could by any chance continue the weak and irresolute policies of the present administration at home and abroad.

Reason for Favoring T. R.

"But we favor Colonel Rooevelt at this time because he has been the recognized leader on the vital issue—Americanism. The people have already responded to his leadership, and we believe that the individual members of the Republican party in large numbers are ready to follow him.

"Justice Hughes, through a sense of duty which must be as irksome as it is compelling, feels himself required to remain silent. Issues which would be determined by the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt would simply be thrown into further controversy by the nomination of Charles Evans Hughes.

"The nomination of Theodore Roosevelt will in itself be a victory for the principle or preparedness and Americanism, which he has enunciated in utterances having no connection with the campaign. On the other hand, should Roosevelt fail of nomination, the impetus already gained on behalf of these dominant issues would be entirely lost.

Nation Needs Strong Hand

"The country needs a strong, dominant personality as leader in the present crisis in domestic as well international affairs.

"Justice Hughes is one of the best men we have ever had in the highest court of this country, and the people of the country, we believe, wish him to remain where he is. Justice Hughes is happy in his present work, and in the outlook for its continuance and I am satisfied from what I know of his past and present history and his capacity for public affairs, that he is much better fitted to serve the people on the most powerful court in the world than he is as President of the United States."

If the Irish must fight, it is understood that there are excellent openings in France and Flanders.

OUR ERROR

We have been informed by a friend, a democrat, who was at the Democratic meeting at the court house on Saturday, May 20, that we misprepresented in our last week's issue the number that was in attendance at the meeting. We regret having made the error, and desire to correct it. The friend who called our attention to the matter stated that there were 39 present instead of 37. Our information was secured from a Republican who was present for a short while in the meeting. He counted 37 in the audience.

But this Republican did not stay there during the entire program. When the crowd entered into secrecy with their proceedings, of course the Republican had to leave. We suppose the other two came in after he left.

The Democrats, for some cause or other, are worrying much more about the "disfranchisement" of Republicans than the Republicans themselves are. Now we wonder why that is. Oh of course the Democrats don't particularly crave the votes for their own ticket (?) but they are just sorry for us, and are sorry to see us following so blindly after a faking false conviction. Ye—h—u—h—er—a—right.

Autos On The Highway.

From the number of recent injuries of children by automobiles on the highway, it is easy to see that somebody is in fault. Somebody is to blame for these altogether unnecessary and most painful occurences.

Within the past month we have learned of about three accidents in which a child on the road was run over by a passing auto and badly hurt.

This calls for more diligent precaution, both on the part of the driver of the car, and on the part of the guardians of the children.

We heard of an instance last Sunday that happened on the highway that indicated that someone must be seeking to wreak vengeance on autoists for some reason or other.

Large quantity of tacks were strewn on a certain section of the Birmingham-Montgomery highway in Chilton county, and a number of cars were completely disabled before the cause was learned.

Of course it could not be told who the trap was set for, but that was a mean way of seeking retribution whatever may have been the circumstances.

Careless driving resulting in the injury of some child will cause hatred and general disrespect with some people for all persons who drive cars. The result then, as in the case of the tacks, will be the suffering of some person who is innocent.

The operation of autos on the highway calls for care and precaution.

And equal care and precaution should be exercised by the people living on the highway to protect their property and their interests.

HENRY FORD CALLS T. R. AN ORDINARY CNTIZEN

DETROIT, Mich,. May 21.—Before departing on a fishing trip today Henry Ford, in reply to Col. Theodore Roosevelt's speech in Detroit Friday, said:

"I consider an ex-president but little from the ordinary citizen. In Roosevelt's case it is different. It has been seven years since he was president and in that time he has entirely failed to understand the trend of events and the sentiments of the people.

"I consider Roosevelt so antiquated that the 'ex' business does not mean anything. You know what an 'ex' amounts to anyway. I consider him just an ordinary citizen because he does not keep up with the times.

"What Col. Roosevelt thinks about me and my work doesn't disturb me in the least. It does my propaganda good. I have no feeling in the matter except that I feel like thanking him for antagonism, bringing to the attention of the public his views and thereby arraying the public against his armament crowd.

"I am not important. The people are and the people will attend to Roosevelt at the proper time. The trouble with the Detroit demonstration was that the armament and munitions crowd were too prominent in it. I know this crowd and I know that it is not all patriotism.

"As to what I am trying to do I just want to say that I am going the limit with everything I have to help the forces of disarmament throughout the world."

Ford admitted he was interested in a new type of submarine, "that will blow battleships off the seas." He said he believes this a good way of forcing disarmament.

He was asked concerning the report that he intended to put $100,000 in the districts of all the congressmen who voted for the army bill.

"I have not said I would do such a thing," he said. "The first I heard of it was when it was brought to my attention by a correspondent a few day ago. But I might if I thought it would help; I would do it in a minute."

Ford plans to sail for Stockholm within a couple of weeks. Mrs. Ford will accompany him to aid in futher organizing the "neutral conferences at The Hague and Stockholm.

"I think the Stockholm conference is having good effect," he said. "We are going to keep at it anyway.

CHICAGO HEARS OF KNOX BOOM

CHICAGO, May 26.—Senator Boise Penrose, of Pennsylvania, will be here next week with a full-fledged boom for the Presidency for ex-Secretary of State Philander C. Knox, according to the latest story along candidates' row.

Mr. Knox is to be offered as the candidate of a united party in Pennsylvania, with seventy-six votes for him on the first ballot from that state. It is claimed that his nomination is the only one emanating from "old guard" quarters that can get the O. K. of Theodore Roosevelt.

The first surprise is the report, which came directly from Washington, that the entire seventy-six votes of Pennsylvania would be recorded for Knox.

This was explained by the theory that the Penrose and the Brumbaugh factions were together in supporting Knox for the United States Senatorship in the recent Pennsylvania primaries and that he is acceptable to both sides.

"If Mr. Knox's name is presented to the convention, as it certainly will be," commented an Eastern Republican, "it is pretty sure that Governor Brumbraugh's friends in the delegation will support Knox rather than have the Governor's name injected into the situation at the beginnings of the balloting."

Knox's name will be urged as a candidate satisfactory to the Roosevelt wing on the ground of his service as Attorney General in the Roosevelt Cabinet.

The advance guard of the Pennsylvania delegation is expected Tuesday.

ALL DAY SINGING

There will be an all day singing at Concord church two miles east of Clanton, on Sunday June 4th.

Public cordially invited. Bring your 1916 song books, and a well filled basket. At 11 o'clock Prof. H. C. McDonald will give us a lecture.

JOHN M. PARRISH.

The yards around the county court house are being improved greatly by the planting of grass. The work is being done by Judge Deason and Mr. J. N. Dennis Tax Assessor. When the grass begins to grow on the yards the appearance will be much better. Our officials are all to be congratulated for the neetness in which they keep the temple of justice.

No wonder the Democrats of Chilton county are so worried about our people "disfranchising" themselves by voting the Republican ticket. It takes such a handsome number of votes out of their State and Congressional scrambles.

THANKS FROM MR. APPERSON

Maplesville, Ala., May 31, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to express my appreciation to those who supported me so loyally in my race for commissioner of the 3rd District. While I was defeated, yet, I fail to find words to express my sincere thanks to those who honored me with their votes.

I contribute my defeat to but one cause and that is I didn't canvass quite enough.

Especially I do wish to thank the people of my District for the large majority they gave me in the campaign.

Now the primary is over and we have a clean and competent ticket nominated, and now lets all fall in line and work for the success of our party from now until elction day and victory will be ours by the largest majority ever had in our county.

Again thanking you for your support and promising every effort at my command for the success of the ticket nominated. Any time I can do anything for the benefit of our people I am ready.

I am not only satisfied by carrying the county in the general election, but I want us to work to the point of carrying Alabama by as large a majority as we do Chilton county.

Yours Respectfully,
D. M. APPERSON.

ALFRED du PONT BOLTS RELATIVE TO SUPPORT T.R.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 26.Alfred I. du Pont, one of the six delegates from this state to the Republican National Convention, has announced that he will vote for the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt, despite the instructions to support T. Coleman du Pont. The latter controlled the state convention, but the instructions were given in such a bungling manner that Alfred I. du Pont easily found an excuse for bolting his relative. It is not unlikely that other delegates will follow.

Alfred I. du Pont has taken the helm of the Roosevelt movement in this city, which resulted this week in the organization of a Roosevelt Republican committee. Mixed in the situation is a fight between the two factions of the du Pont family for control of the state Republican party, thus affording the novel spectacle of rival members of one family and of a tremendous business corporation fighting for political supremacy.

We suppose the next thing in order is the organization of the Daughters of the Irish Revolution.

Another attempt to take the life of Col. Roosevelt. But the grandest American of all Americans is with us still. And may he long remain.

FROM MR. JOHN S. DENNIS

Clanton, Ala., June 1, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

Please give me space to thank those who voted for me in the primary on May the 9th. I wish to say that I am not one bit sore over the outcome of the primary election. The people have a right to vote for the one they want. Of course I would have liked to have gotten the nomination, but the choice of the people is my choice.

Fellow citizens, let's stand to the ticket, and elect all our nominees in November. I will do anything that is right to help elect the entire ticket. Don't pay any attention to the talking of the Clanton crowd of Democrats. Let us stick to the men whom we have nominated

I see some are fighting Reynolds for Probate Judge. I say he is the man for the place, and the man we need at present. Let us all stick to him and give him the biggest majority we have ever given a man when the election comes off in November.

Again thanking those who voted for me, and assuring those that voted for the other fellow that I am with and for the entire ticket in November, I remain,

Sincerely,
JOHN S. DENNIS.

IN MEMORY

On last Wednesday night, May 24, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Cost and took from them their darling baby boy, little Eurle J. He was about twenty-one months old.

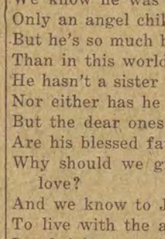
We know 'tis hard to give up a beloved one, but God saw fit to take him home and we know that our father's will must be done.

The little one suffered awfully but he bore his sufferings with patience. All was done for him that willing hands could do, but nothing that was done seemed to do any good. We know that the lithtle one has never done anything wrong. We know that he has gone to a home of eternal rest, where he will never be trampled with the trials and temptation of this earth. He is now sleeping in the arms of our blessed Father above. He was sick only a few days.

Weep not dear parents for the little one is at rest.

The remains were laid to rest at Liberty Hill cemetery. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Lowery.

Everybody that was acquainted with little EurleJ. loved him because he was so harmless and so sweet.



Weep not his blessed parents
For the one who bore such pain
For if we only trust Jesus
We know we shall meet him again.
We know 'tis hard to give him up
It reaches thy blessed heart
But we shall meet him over yonder
Where we never more shall part
We know he was so harmless
Only an angel child
But he's so much better off in heaven
Than in this world so wild.
He hasn't a sister to mour his loss
Nor either has he a brother
But the dear ones who will miss him
Are his blessed father and mother.
Why should we grieve for those we love?
And we know to Jesus have gone
To live with the angels above
In a brighter and happier home?
Why should we shed such bitter tears
For the little one at rest
And we know the Lord will care for him
And we know He knoweth best.
The little one will ne'er be troubled
With the idle things of this earth
But all of us that loved him
Will ne'er forget his birth.
One that loved him.
RUTH JONES.

The Boy is Father to the Man

will aid the expectant mother in conserving her health, her strength, her mental repose and the absence of vexatious pains is a subject of vast moment. Among the recognized helps is a splendid remedy known as "Mother's Friend." Applied to the muscles it sinks in deeply to make them firm and pliant, it thus lifts the strain on ligaments that produce pain, it lightens the burden on the nervous system, induces calm, restful nights of health-giving sleep and makes the days sunny and happy. Get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" of any druggist and you will then realize why it has been considered true to its name in our best homes through three generations. It is perfectly harmless but so effective that once used it is recommended to all expectant mothers by those who went through the ordeal with surprising ease. By writing to Bradfield Regulator Co., 712 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., you can have a free copy of a wonderful stork book that unfolds those things which all expectant mothers delight to read. Write today.

It is mailed free. Among its features are an explanation of the remedy's action, the first pulsations, prefatory uneasiness, date of expectancy, how to be comfortable, and a great variety of topics all bearing upon the one subject of expectant motherhood. Then there are many letters which describe actual experiences, making of it a guide book of great value. Don't fail to write for this book.

BRIDAL PARTY FOR MISS IDA BILBRO

Mesdames R. E. Luckie and M. L. White and Miss Dovie Roper were joint hostesses on Saturday afternoon, when they charmingly entertained the bridal party of the Youn-Bilbro wedding at the pretty home of Mrs. White on Second Avenue.

A Shakespear weding contest was greatly enjoyed. On the cut the highest score fell to Mrs. Greenway. On drawing for consolation the prize fell to Mrs. Mande Morgan.

The bride was presented with a handsome cut glass cream pitcher and sugar bowl.

The guests were ushered into the spacious dining room, where the bride's table was prettily decorated in pink and white, and the cutting of the cake created much merriment.

Later in the afternoon a delicious ice course was served with cake. The color scheme of pink and white was carried out. Handsome vases of cut flowers lent their fragrance, and music was greatly enjoyed at intervals throughout the afternoon.

The guests participating were Misses Bilbro, Young, Austin, Pope, Daley, Hester, and Mesdames I. F. Bilbro, Morgan, Milton White, Roper Frank Bilbro, and Greenway.

IN MEMORIAM

Almighty God, the alwise ruler of the universe, has deemed it best to call from our midst to his heavenly home, the little infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Ward. She passed away at 10:20 p.m., May 15, 1916.

Lurene was only 2 years and nine months old, so sweet and beautiful made her more attractive to everyone that knew her. Everything possible was done to save her by loving hands and willing friends. Medical aid was in vain. But it pleased God to take her from earth, for of such is the Kingdom.

Nothing but sweet memories can console the mother, father, little brother and relatives.

Oh God eternal source of life.
Oh God eternal source of love.
Oh Lord eternal source of light,
Father, all-wise supreme above,
Before Thee, Mighty God, I write.
Thou knowest all things for the best,
Thou hast so deemed it right and just
To take Lurene away from us
To that far home sweet home of rest
In heav'n above forever blest.
Oh Lord, I sit this summer morn.
I meditate so much alone,
And think of home made sad, so sad
I cannot help but weep and mourn
Because Lurene's forever gone .
It makes our sad, sad hearts stand still
To miss her smiles and little cheers.
Nothing on earth her place can fill,
Nomore her little words we hear
We miss her presence everywhere.
The days she spent with us were sweet
The time was short but full of love
Her angel voice is heard no more
We trust in Thee with her we'll meet
And hear her voice once more above
Oh death; thou art a cruel thing
To old and young to great and small
Thou gives the same old deathly sting
When will thou cease thy works and fall?
Not till the Saviour comes again.
How sad to see the babies die
The hardest hearts would change to fear
And turn to Thee with tearful eyes
To stand beside the bed and hear
Their last sad groans and deathly cries.
Thy ways are hard to understand
We know not why thou took Lurene
From earth so soon to that fair land
Thou art wise and is supréme
Its our sad loss and heavens sweet gain.

Valuable Health Hints For Our Readers

CATARRH

Just because you hawk and spit and your nose is wet, cold, red, sore and a nuisance, don't merely plug it up. You can't cure catarrh by greasing your nose. Take S. S. S. regularly and you will drive catarrhal poisons out of your blood. The membranes will soon recover and no longer continue to accumulate the mucous that gathers and thickens into catarrh. S. S. S. stimulates the cells of the tissues to select from the blood their own essential nutriment. Rapid recovery from catarrhal inflamation in the stomach, kidney, bladder and all membranes is the result.

MALARIA.

Throughout the country, wherever malaria abounds, are happy, joyful people to whom S. S. S. has given wonderful help in the treatment of malaria after the most sickening torture imaginable.

The gaunt complexion of malaria's victims, the chills and fever, the malarial dysentery that seems to defy all other treatment, the malarial leg, the enlarged liver, the persistent anemia where the blood turns to water and the system wastes away. These are the conditions that S. S. S. so effectually asissts in overcoming, by helping to restore the blood to its natural vigor.

STUBBORN SORES

Sometimes a sore spot becomes indolent. The tissues surrounding it lose tone and are unable to provide sufficient nutriment to stop the drain. It is then chronic. Just saturate your blood with S. S. S. This is quickly accomplished, as S. S. S. is naturally assimilated the same as milk or any other healthful liquid.

Nature acts with marvelous rapidity when given the proper assistance, and S. S. S. so stimulates cellular activity that the parts surrounding an ulcer select from the blood the materials that make new tissue. Thus the sore spot rapidly heals in a natural way.

Local applications for any skin disease will afford protection from without, but have no medical value. Eczema, tetter, acne and all such eruptive diseases should be treated with S. S. S.

POISONED BLOOD.

So many different things contribute to poison the blood and the effect is so startling that the sufferer becomes panic-stricken and is led to use harmful drugs. If you have any blood trouble, get a bottle of S. S. S. and take according to directions.

Don't take anything else. Poisoned blood is bad enough without ruining your bones, joints, teeth and vitals with minerals. S. S. S. so stimulates cellular activity that they reject all poisonous influences and select only those materials in the blood that make healthy tissue. This is why its assistance toward recovery is so noticeable and at times remarkable.

S. S. S. is welcome to the weakest stomach and is assimilated just as readily as the most nutritious food. It has helped to cure a host of sufferers.

RHEUMATISM.

In any form of rheumatism give the blood a good effectual cleansing with S. S. S.

Use this remedy for three days and take a hot salt water bath to open the pores. This relieves the lungs and kidneys and assists S. S. S. to utilize the skin as the principal avenue of elimination.

Avoid salts, calomel and other drastic purgatives, as they absorb the moisture from the walls and membranes of the intestines, weaken the muscular action, produce chronic constipation and thus stagnate the system with rheumatic poisons. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store. Don't take a substitute.

S. S. S. is purely vegetable and is prepared only by the Swift Specific Co., 271 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for special booklet on any of the diseases mentioned and if medical advice is wanted, write for that also to address given above. Both booklet and medical advice are free.

CIRCUIT COURT FOR COOSA COUNTY ADJOURNED

The Spring Term of the Circuit Court of Coosa County, adjourned last Saturday after the whole docket was disposed of. This competes the Spring Term and there will be no court in July which it was thought would be necessary to complete the docket. This court was conducted in the fastest manner that has ever been before, and the docket was completed by Saturday noon.

The largest crowd of people that has ever been witnessed in Rockford at one time before was here last Friday to attend the trial of Fuller. The Court House was filled beyond its capacity, with a crowd standing on the outside.

Washington succeeded in getting the next Reunion of the Confederate Veterans, which will be held in that City next May.

The Boy Scouts of Birmingham who were so good and courteous to the old Soldiers at the Reunion have been rewarded by the City of Birmingham to the amount of $5000.00. They fully deserve this amount and thanks too.

BEST PAID MEN ARE NOW ASKING FOR HIGHER PAY

Government Officials Fail To Find Justice In Demands Of Train Service Employees.

By Judson C. Welliver in The Washington Times.

Administrative and legislative authorities in Washington are taking a distinctly different views of the present effort of railway trainmen to compel an advancement in their wages, from any that has been taker on former occasions.

It is very apparent that the case for the employes seeking higher wages is viewed with less amiability than ordinarily. In legislative circles there has recently been serious talk of legislation to prohibit strikes by employes of interstate carriers, and to provide a procedure for compulsory arbitration.

The impression has gained a good deal of ground, that certain favored classes of employes have for a long time been systematically aggregating to themselves most of the increases in wages.

Highest Paid Class Of Men

On behalf of the enginemen and trainmen who are making the demand for a large wage increase, it is urged that the higher cost of living justifies their demand. Yet these men, the engineers, firemen, conductors and brakemen, are the highest paid classes of railroad labor. The question being asked why an engineer getting an average wage in 1913 of $5.20, should require an increase, while trackmen, who were getting $1.58 per day, should be left out?

Again, the average wage of conductors in 1913 is shown by the statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission to have been $4.39 per day. At the same time, telegraph operators and dispatchers were getting an average wage of $2.52 per day.

If the increased cost of living for the $4.39 conductor necessitates a large increase in his compensation, where does the $2.52 dispatcher come in?

No demand is being urged on behalf of the operators and dispatchers, and some of the railroads have lately been intimating vigorously that if a big additional burden must be laid on their labor funds they would like to give the benefit to the poorer paid classes of employes.

The truth of the whole business is that, as a whole, the railroad employes of the country are not very highly paid as compared to other people. A few classes of railroad men are paid very high wages. The most fortunate of all these classes are the engineers, firemen, conductors and brakemen.

Rate Rising Rapidly

Not only are these four classes paid much more liberally than other employes, but the figures show that their rate of wages has been rising more rapidly than that of any other classes.

In 1914 the Interstate Commerce Commission's report showed the number of railroad employes for the entire country to be 1,710,296. Out of this number there were 62,021 engineers, 64,959 firemen, 48,201 conductors, and 136,809 other trainmen; a total of 311,990, or just about one-sixth of the entire number.

At that same date, the number of trackmen, exclusive of foremen, was 337,451. That is, the number of common laborers on the section was greater than the entire roll of engineers, firemen, conductors, and brakemen. Yet this huge army of trackmen was working for an average wage of $1.58 per day, while engineers were getting $5.20, firemen were getting $2.13, conductors were getting $4.39, and other trainmen were getting $3.04. These figures are the commission's averages for the entire country.

Condition Bettered

Largely because they are the best organized classes or railway workers and have been unremitting in their demands for better wages, these four classes have succeeded in bettering their condition rapidly and regularly, at the expense of the other classes which are not so highly organized.

The trainmen, whenever they insist on a wage increase, have, on their side, the tremendousiy potent argument that if they don't get what they ask, they can walk out and tie up the whole railroad system. No other class of employes could do this, because no other is so instantly indispensable.

How effectively the four favored classes have used their power is shown by the cold figures. In the ten years from 1903 to 1912, inclusive, the salaries of general officers increased an average of 17 per cent.

In that same ten-year period the salaries of engineers increased 24 per cent.

During those same ten years the wages of general office clerks increased 13 per cent, while the wages of firemen increased 32 per cent.

During those same ten years the wages of telegraph operators and dispatchers increased 14 per cent, while those of trainmen other than conductors increased 36 per cent.

Impressive Statement

Here is an impressive statement of fact about railway wages that ought not to escape attention. There were a total of 37,873 employes classified as switch tenders, crossing tenders, and watchmen. These were receiving in 1912 an average of $1.70 per day, which was actually 6 cents a day less than they had been receiving ten years earlier.

At that time there were 48,201 conductors with whom the statistics dealt. The conductors, therefore, were only a slightly more numerous class than the tenders and watchmen; yet, while the conductors had had their wages raised from $3.38 to $4.29 per day, the less fortunate class of tenders and watchmen had to stand a reduction from $1.76 to $1.70 per day.

If the cost of living has been steadily advancing for conductors, so as to justify an increase of 27 per cent in their wages, it seems difficult to explain why that same cost of living should have fallen sufficiently to warrant a decrease of 3 per cent in the wages of switch tenders, crossing tenders, and watchmen.

Take the single classification of general office clerks. There were 87,106 of these according to the official report. A much larger number than of either engineers, firemen, or conductors.

These general office clerks were paid an average of $2.21 per day in 1903, and of $2.50 in 1912; an increase of only 13 per cent in the ten-year period.

General office clerks, without exception, are compelled to live in cities, where the cost of living is high.

Engineers Better Off

Engineers, on the other hand, are distributed between large towns and small towns; on the average, their living circumstances ought to make their expenses average considerably less than those of office clerks, yet the statistics show that engineers have received in the ten-year period an increase of 24 per cent in their wages, making them average exactly $5 per day, while general office clerks have received an increase of only 13 per cent, making them average $2.50 per day.

One of the worst underpaid classifications of railway employes is that of the station agents. There are just about 40,000 of these in the country, or nearly as many as the number of conductors.

In 1903 station agents averaged $1.80 a day, and in 1912 they had been raised to only $2.20 a day, while in that same time conductors had advanced from $3.38 to $4.20.

That is, the station agent in 1912 was getting just about half the wages of the conductor, and in ten years he had had an average increase of 17 per cent., while the conductor's increase had been 27 per cent.

Here are two of the most numerous classes of railway employes: Trainmen, other than engineers, firemen, and conductors, numbered 136,809, while trackmen numbered 337,451. The statistics show that the trackmen were getting in 1903 an average of $1.31 per day, and in 1912 an average of $1.50 per day, an increase of 14 per cent.

What Others Got

On the other hand, the classification of other trainmen was getting in 1903 $2.17 per day, and in 1912, $2.96 per day, an increase of 36 per cent. In percentage, this is the largest advance received by any single class of railway employes during this decade.

A general survey of wage conditions in the railway service and in other industries, it is believed, would show that in the last fifteen years the highly organized and favored classes of railway wage earners have had their incomes increased more than almost any other class of workers in the country, while the much more numerous, but less effectively organized classes of railway workers have probably received rather less increases than other industrial workers in general.

In view of the strong feeling that these most fortunate classes of the railway employes are now making excessive and unreasonable demands, attention is now being called as never before to these general discrepancies. There is a strong disposition to inaugurate a general and sweeping inivestigation of the whole question of railway wages with a view to establishing some sort of public regulation not unlike that already applied to railroad rates, in the interest of employes and public alike. Meanwhile, there is a marked indisposition to extend further favors to those classes already most highly favored, at the expense of other classes of employes who appear to be getting very low wages.

HUNDRED BANDS TO MAKE MUSIC AT G .O. P. CONVENTION

CHICAGO, Ill., May 22.—Indications are that the Republican National convention of 1916 will be one of the noisiest and exciting in the history of the party.

With sixteen candidates for president in the field, and with the result in doubt until the last ballot has been taken, there is likely to be an unusual amount of enthusiasm every day the convention is in session.

Fred W. Upham, Chairman of the local Committee on Arrangements, was informed today that plans have been made to bring more than 100 brass bands and fifty glee and marching clubs here during convention week.

Every state that has a favorite son as a candidate for president will bring from five to ten bands, with innumerable other organizations. Harry Daugherty of Columbus, Ohio, telegraphed that he would bring a glee club of sixty-five voices to Chicago to boom the candidacy of Theodore E. Burton of Ohio.

Hotel reservation are being made daily for other organizations in the interest of "favorite "son candidates.

Word comes from Indiana that every large city in the state is planning to send either a band or a club to the convention for Charles W. Fairbanks. Similar reports were received from other states which have candidates.

The demand for convention tickets continues to increase. Today season tickets for the convention were quoted at $250 each.

Seargent-at-Arms William F. Stone has begun the appointment of his 1900 aids, which include 1500 assistant sergeant-at-arms, 100 doorkeepers, 100 ushers, 100 messengers and 100 pages.

OLD TIME ENGINEER GAINS 20 POUNDS

Wouldn't Take All Money In Universe For Good Tanlac Did Him

Everybody in Jacksonville either knows or has heard of Engineer Chas. J. Weeks, who runs the Seaboard Air Line fast train "Fox" between Jacksonville and Tampa. Mr. Weeks bears the distinction of being the second oldest engineer in point of service with his road, having been with the company for thirty-three years. He is a man of very temperate habits, few words and strong convictions. According to his own statement he has never taken a drink or used tobacco in any form. He not only has a splendid record of efficiency as a railroad man, but is held in the very highest esteem by his fellow citizens in Jacksonville.

"I've gained twenty pounds on seven bottles of Tanlac, and feel as well and happy as I did when a boy," said Mr. Weeks to the Tanlac representative who had called by special invitation at his attractive residence, 2139 Lydia Street, for his statement a few days ago.

"For twenty years I suffered with nervous indigestion of the worst sort," he continued, "and at times during the past fifteen years I didn't think I would last much longer. To tell you the truth I finally reached the point wher I didn't much care whether I lived or died.

"After eating I would have so much gas on my stomach and would get so puffed up I couldn't hardly fasten my clothes on. My food would sour and curdle and I would have heartburn so bad I would feel like a piece of hot iron was laying in my stomach, and the pains was simply awful. To tell you the truth I just don't know how I lived. I could eat no meats or sweets of any kind, and for days I would have to live almost entirely on bread and water. God only knows how I suffered. I just can't describe it. The pains around my heart and the palpitation were so intense I thought at times I must have heart trouble too. I couldn't find anything to relieve my troubles, although I tried hard.

"Tanlac was so highly recommended to me that I bought a bottle and cannot express in words how grateful I feel for the good it has done me. Just think of it, a few bottles of this medi cine has made me feel better than I have in fifteen years, it seems almost unbelieveable, but it's the plain simple truth. I can now eat anythin simply truth. I can now eat anything placed before me, and everything agrees with me perfectly and I enjoy my sleepas much as a child, and I'm feeling just fine in every way. I feel so nimble I think I could hold a good runner a tight fot race.

"Tanlac has entirely relieved me of the things that troubled me so long, and I just don't know how to express my gratitude. I wouldn't be in the same shape I was in before for all the money in the universe.

"If anybody doubts my statement you can just tell them to write me a personal letter and I'll answer it. I'll be only too glad to have the opportunity of telling them what this great medicine has done for me."

Tanlac is sold in Clanton exclusively by Upchurch Drug Co.

Miss Dovie Roper is taking vacation this week from her duties in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court.

Pays Banks To Aid the Farmers

Banker Comes Out Strong For Giving Real Aid to Farmers Who Are Progressive

"If I might be allowed to write the epitaph of my administration, I would place on the head board the single word, 'Agriculture.'"

This sentence in the address of B. C. Powell retiring president of the Arkansas Bankers' Association, at the association's convention, summed up concisely the great change that has been wrought in the attitude of the Arkansas banker toward the farmer.

It was not so long ago that the average Arkansas banker would have considered absurd a suggestion that he should interest himself in the farmer and in agriculture.

Progressive Banking

"I say this for the reason that I have, as your president, devoted practically eight weeks of my time to this one subject and say, with some degree of modesty, that my time has been well spent. I have talked agriculture with the splendid men our government has in this state. I have talked it before organizations of business men in several Southern cities, also before the convention of the Arkansas Farmers' Union and in every instance have heard only praise for the progressiveness of the bankers of Arkansas in the fine work they are doing for 'safe farming.' There is not a bank in Arkansas that is not alive to the tremendous task before us, and there is not an executive officer in these banks who is not alive to the situation, and ready to not only do his part but is finding a place to work, and is working with a willingness heretofore unheard of.

The Cold Statistics

And, perhaps through a lingering fear that there might still be some skeptic remaining, President Powell fired a parting broadside in the form of cold, hard statistics, which are supposed to appeal to the banker above all things.

"The government forces in Arkansas report Arkansas farmers to be worth $30,000,000 more in December, 1915, than they were on the same date in 1914, and of this amount there was, according to the recent report of the state bank commissioner, $10,000,000 of this increase in actual cash in the banks of Arkansas. I merely ask the question—is it worth while to aid the farmer?"

Farming, Roads and Schools

Here are some more striking excerpts from that portion of President Powell's address which dealt with agriculture:

"When I get on the subject of 'Safe Farming,' I remind myself of a book agent, in not knowing when to stop. But the country banker of Arkansas, being alive to the situation, is bound to see that his future lies along new lines,and these new lines are safe farming, good roads and rural schools.

"You have probably already asked yourself the question, 'Why name these together?' I do this, because without good roads it is impossible to have community schools, and without a consolidation of our cross-roads school huts, it will never be possible to have a building and a teaching force that can make it possible to have a public school system that we may point to with pride. I consider the present system of country or rural schools little short of a disgrace, and the pay received by the splendid girls and men who are teaching them, under the conditions so well known to all of us, is a disgrace to the intelligent citizenship of any state.

The Banker's Responsibility

"I suspect you are again asking yourself, 'Why tell a busy banker this?' My reply is—and I hope you will get this compliment, for they are surely scarce for country bankers—no line of business can boast of a broader minded and a more progressive citizenship than the country bankers of Arkansas, and it is your duty to shoulder your part of the responsibility of our state's conditions. By so during I firmlybelieve there will be a marked improvement in conditions, as it is my judgement that the splendid assistance given to safe farming has very materially aided in bringing this subject to its present position in the minds of the people, and if your aid can be of such noticeable value in this work, why not get into line right now on the matter of good roads and rural schools? Nothing can be of more benefit to any state than these three subjects."

NO STEADY JOB FOR HIM.

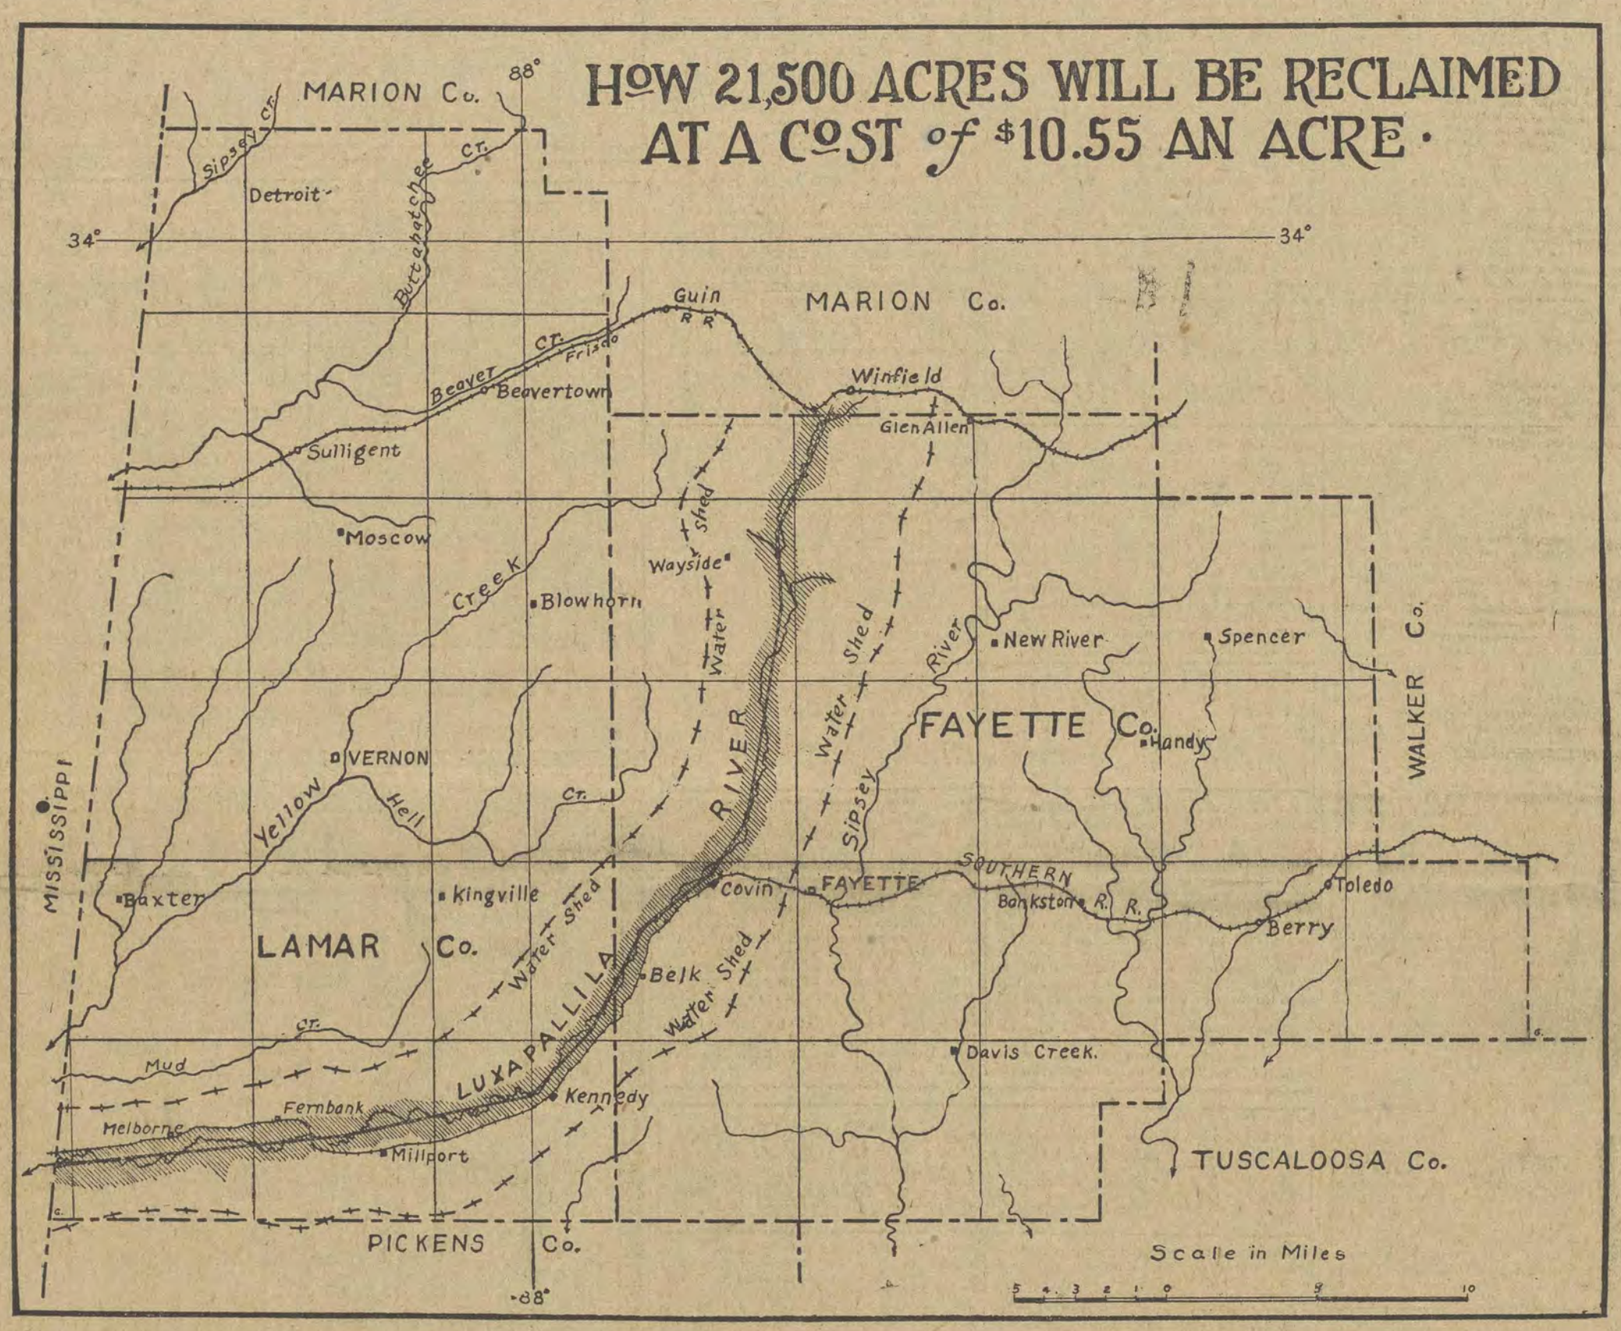
Wishing to afford a northern friend a nexample of real negro music, a Mobile woman went to Baxter's house with a view to enlisting his services at a musical function. She found his wife instead.

"Very sorry, missy," said Baxter's spouse, "but Theophilus he ain't playin de banjo any more. He just puts in all his time fishin' now."



"What led him to give up his playing?" asked the disappointed caller. "Has he got religion?

"No, missy, he ain't got religion, but he's done got skeered."

"Scared? Of what?"

"Of dat minstrel show, honey. De boss learns dat my ole man kin play an' he offers him a stiddy job doin' it. Yassum, an' it skeered Theophilus so bad dat he quit banjo playin' right away."

First Great Work Under Alabama's Drainage Law

If People Say "Yes," Then Big Work Will Be Started at Once

The above is a reproduction of the first preliminary survey made in the State of Alabama under Alabama's new and progressive Drainage Law.

The drawing above is not as complete as the "official" drawing and was made simple on purpose so it could be comprehended at a glance. You will see that here are more than twenty-one thousand acres in Lamar and Fayette counties can be drained and made productive and profitable for a cost not exceeding $10.55 an acre.

The Overflow Area.

The lands examined by the engineers comprise that section of the valley of the Luxapallila river beginning at the north line of Fayette county, near Winfield, and extending downstream in a southwesterly direction to the Alabama-Mississippi State line, a distance in a direct line of about forty-two miles. The total area of the flooded land in Fayette and Lamar counties is 22,386 acres.

Bottom Lands.

The watershed of the Luxapallila river consists of bottom land from half a mile to one mile wide, bordered by rough, rolling land and steep hills which extend back a few miles from the bottoms. The surface of the rest of the watershed is rolling and in some places quite rough. The bottom lands are comparatively level, being broken only by small sloughs and bayous. Through these bottoms the soil is uniform in character, being composed of light-brown loam or silt loam, underlain by a whitish clayey silt. In some places the yellow mottlings predominate so that the soil is of a yellow hue.

Two-Part Problem.

The drainage problem in these bottoms is of two parts—the reduction of overflow so that frequent damage to crops from the overflow shall not occur; and giving direct drainage for the bottom lands by field ditches. The engineers' report deals only with the overflow problem, as it is believed that digging small ditches to drain into the central ditch can best be done by individual land owners.

Estimated Cost.

The following is the estimate of the cost of the work as outlined by the engineers:

Excavation of 2,346,600 cubic yards of earth at $.065 per yard	$152,529
Excavation of 95,630 cubic yards of earth at $.15 per yard	14,345
Cost of right of way, 895 acres at $10 per acre	8,950
Clearing the right of way, 895 acres at $15 per acre	13,425
Bridges, 15 steel, highway	17,000
Contingent expenses (about 10 per cent)	20,651
Total	$226,900

The total number of acres that will be benefitted will be 21,500. The average cost per acre of this big work will be $10.55. In addition to the 21,500 acres, there are 348 acres of overflowed land in Marion county that will be benefitted by the propesed work. There is also a considerable area of second bottom land which, although never overflowed, will be benefitted to some extent by the work.

Story of Moore.

Now there is a story behind this big work—the first of its kind in Alabama—and we will give you a little of this story and you can think it over. Fayette county had a young man by the name of Moore—J. M. Moore—who went to the Agricultural College at Auburn and who afterwards went to Texas. Both at Auburn and in Texas he learned a great deal about drainage. In Texas he came to realize how backward his own state, Alabama, was on this great question of draining wet lands and making them sweet and productive.

And so he studied and planned and he came to the conclusion that he could do something for his own Alabama county, Fayette, in the way of drainage. He knew that Lamar and Fayette counties had many thousands of acres of valuable bottom land that was worth virtually nothing in its present condition, but which would be worth a great deal to the owners, if it were properly drained.

Started His Campaign.

And so he started to run for the legislature and he made drainage "an issue," as the politicians say. Some of the folks didn't exactly understand such a campaign as this. They couldn't understand a candidate not running on some of the old, approved political "issues" that had done duty in so many campaigns and for so many candidates in so many places. Why this thing of "drainage" wasn't an "issue" at all; it was just a matter of making some bottom land valuable. Some even said Mr. Moore was fixing to tax the "hill folks" for the benefit of the "bottom folks."

But this earnest, quiet young man was not discouraged. He realized that a man in Alabama, as well as in some other states, who runs for office on a purely economic and material issue has to do a lot of educational work for voters are not used to that kind of candidates. The candidate that has just one, big practical thing to accomplish for the people has no easy sailing against the fellow who expounds at large on "all the vital issues before the people."

Up in Wisconsin they have begun to legislate for the economic and material good of folks, and Mr. Moore didn't see why it couldn't be done in Alabama as well as in Wisconsin.

Mr. Moore wanted drainage for his section of country and he wanted a real Drainage Law for Alabama. He wanted to see a real piece of constructive progressive legislation with no odor of politics about it.

Stuck At It.

And so he went about in his district talking drainage and explaining it and showing how Alabama was letting other states get ahead of her in this big matter that means so much to the wealth—and health—of many communities. Many of the folks began to see that there was something in it." Others couldn't "see it' and began to try to get Mr. Moore into discussing "issues.' He declined to discuss them. He said that drainage for his district—and the state—was the main thing he was interested in and if he couldn't win on that he would stay at home and let a real politician go to the Legislature.

Won Out B'Gosh.

After a campaign on this issue, Mr. Moore won and he went to Montgomery to continue his educational campaign for drainage. It was a long, hard pull but Mr. Moore in his quiet way went about among his colleagues showing them the benefits of having a drainage law that would allow the people of any district to have their lands drained if they wanted them drained. Mr. Moore knew his subject first hand. his was a "non-political issue" and so he finally saw the present Drainage law of Alabama put on the books.

People Wanted It.

Then he went back home and asked the people to make his own district the first section to take advantage of the new law and thus set an eaxmple to the people of the state. Ninety per cent of the owners of those overflown lands in Fayette and Lamar counties favored the making of a preliminary survey with some estimate of the cost of doing th work.

Drainage Experts ame.

Then Lewis A. Jones, government drainage engineer, appeared on the scene. He is one of the very ablest men in the government srvice. With him as his assistant came R L Grable formerly of Indiana. oBth these men have made many drainage surveys over individual farms and large areas of land as well. They are well known as drainage experts—men competent to handle without any difficulty such a drainage problem as was presented to them in Fayette and Lamar counties.

People Will Decide.

The above drawing gives in the rough, the results of their work which has just been completed more than twenty-one thousand acres of land can be drained and made productive at a cost of not more than $10.55 an acre. At present most of this land is producing nothing except taxes.

Within a few days this preliminary survey by Mr. Jones will be presented to the owners of the land to be drained. If they favor a final survey this second survey will be made by Mr. Jones without delay. This second survey will show just how much each man's land will be benefitted by drainage—each land owner will know just exactly how each acre will be affected.

Will Be Incorporated.

Then if the landoners favor it, the land to be drained will be incorporated into a drainage district, three of the land owners will be appointed as commissioners of this district, bonds will be issued to cover the cost of all the drainage work and the Commissioners will start the work at once.

You see it is quite "democratic" after all. The landowners—the men who will get the most benefit and who pay the cost—have entire say in the matter. If they want marsh land drained and made to yield and grow in value they can have the work done under the Drainage Law and at the lowest cost for thoroughly efficient ditching.

The Drainage Law.

It is not the purpose of this article to go into the details of Alabama's new Drainage Law, You can get a copy of it by writing to Mr. Moore for it, or to Dr. Thomas M. Owen, State Librarian, the Capitol, Montgomery, Alabama. Its provisions are numerous. But one thing is sure—it is an honest-to-goodness law, planned by a man who has studied drainage and drainage laws for some years and who aimed to get the very best law possible for Alabama.

The work in Fayette and Lamar counties under this law will consist for the largest part, of a central ditch as shown on the map, the tributory ditches to be built by the farmers themselves. The complete estimates of cost to be made will show, of course how every dollar is to be spent in doing the work.

Example To State.

It seems reasonably certain that the land owners in Fayette and Lamar counties will vote to incorporate a Drainage District, issue bonds, elect Commissioners and do the work. They not only want the land drained and made productive and profitable but they have a natural ambition to do the first big drainage work ever done in Alabama. It is right and proper that they should be ambitious to set an example to the whole State of Alabama—and to other states as well.

SUMMER

Every day is summer somewhere,
Sweet, to me;
Every day is summer where the light and laughter be.
The music of the morning.
The dew of dreams and bliss;
Every day is summer
Where the lips of love may kiss.

Every day is summer in the April world of cheer
Where hearts are in the dreaming of the morning sweetheart, dear.
The laughter of the lilies
And the fragrance of the rose
In every breath of beauty
That love's deathless summer knows.

Every day is summer in these tangled lanes of love.
Every day is summer where the bright stars burn above:
With the blue skies o'er us bending
And the breezes sweet and true,
Every day is summer
When a sweetheart smiles on you.

THE NIGHT

The night is such a tender friend,
So gentle in its loving way
Of bringing warfare to an end
And closing down the glare or way.
And then with velvet finger tips
To smooth our brows and touch our eyes
And with its shadows to our lips
Kiss back the murmur and the sighs.
She is the mothering hour, indeed.
That with her gentle love bends near
To hearken to her children's need
And soothe them with the lay of cheer
She stills the rattle of the street,
She checks the tumult of the town;
Her silence is a balsam sweet,
Her shadows are a precious crown.
And when at last she says farewell,
She leaves us whispering like a dream
That we may still possess her spell
Amid our toil and gleam.

Big Money In Turkeys For South

Raising and Shipping to Northern Markets Gives Profits to Growers and Packers

The raising of turkeys for the Northern markets is fast becoming a paying industry here in the Central South.

There is always a high market for turkeys in the fall and the use of turkey meat all the year round has made the demand for turkeys exceed the supply. We in this section of the country, with a favorable spring, can raise turkeys cheap and get good profits for them.

Last fall a great many turkeys were shipped from Montgomery, Alabama, a good many from Birmingham and some from points south. This fall they will doubtless be shipped from other points in this territory. It will pay any man who knows something about preparing dressed poultry for market to arrange to buy urkeys and chickens for shipment this fall.

We earnestly commend the raising and the buying of turkeys and chickens for the dressed poultry market. Neither is a difficult matter and it means money for the buyer as well as more money for the farmers.

Texas farmers and Texas shippers are making a big thing of turkeys. In Texas several hundred cars—probably more than 300—of dressed turkeys were marketed during the past slaughtering season. Each car contained an average of about 100 barrels of turkeys and in each barrel were about 22 turkeys. The average weight of each turkey, when dressed was about ten pounds. Thus, it will be seen that the turkey crop of that state which was marketed in carlot shipments amounted to about 1,700,000 fowls, with an aggregate weight of 17,000,000 pounds.

The farmers received an average of about 12 12 cents per pound gross weight for their turkeys during the past season. In a few localities competitive packers boosted the price to as high as 15 cents per pound.

Taking 12 1-2 cents as an average and placing the gross weight of the Texas crop at 20,000,000 pounds—that is, the portion of the crop that was marketed for the purpose of shipment in carlots—and one arrives at $2,500,000 as the sum which the farmers of that state received. This sum is exclusive of the revenue which the turkey raiser derived direct from the sale of his fowls to the consumers of the different home cities and towns of the state. The total value of the 1915 turkey crop of Texas was easily $3,000,000, it is estimated.

To prepare turkeys for market during the rush season packing plants have been built in Texas. During the slaughtering period these plants are operated day and night. The rivalry between the different plants is very keen. It is a case of buy, buy, buy; kill, kill, kill and ship, ship, ship from one day's end to another. The larger packers buy practically all of their turkeys from local merchants of the surrounding territory, and the shipments of the live turkeys to the different plants are usually made by express or fast freight. Each morning prices are quoted by wire to the different merchants and the offerings of the latter are also made by telegraph. The merchant knows just what he can afford to pay the farmer for his turkeys and the farmer usually is well informed as to prices. In many instances flocks of sveral hundred up to several thousand turkeys are driven overland for distances up to 30 miles or more to the nearest local market and sold.

When the live turkeys arrive at the packing plant they are quickly put through the dressing process. The packing plants each handle 2,000 to 4,000 turkeys per day. The more modern method of killing the fowls is to pierce their brain with a needle. It is claimed that this process is painless. In the packing plant at Austin Tex., the turkeys, after being killed passed into the h nds of negroes and and Mexicans who quickly strip the bodies of feathers. The tail and wing feathers are first pulled out and placed in a separate pile, and the body feathers are kept apart from the others. Most of the turkey feathers which are collected by the packing plants in Texas are shipped to Chicago. The tail and win feathers are used for the manufacture of dusters and the body feathers are used for filling mattresses and beds.

The turkey pickers are paid at the rate of four cents per fowl. A good picker will handle 80 to 100 turkeys per day. As fast as a turkey is picked it is conveyed to the cleaning room where its head, feet and body are carefully washed. It is then wrapped in clean, fresh paper and sent to the refrigerating room. It is kept in this room for 24 hours, until it is completely chilled. The entrails are not removed from the fowls. After being chilled they are packed in barrels and loaded into refrigerator cars for shipment.

CO-OPERATIVE HOG SHIPPING A SUCCESS

H. S. Wilson, State agent of the co-operative farm demonstration work of the Mississippi A. and M. College, and the United States department of agriculture has just given out some interesting results of the work for the past month, showing that these forces are getting worth while results. Among the many activities of the county and district agents the co-operative hog shipping work of W. R. Ritch, agent of Yazoo county is an example of the practical results these "first aid to the farmers" are securing.

In one day due to Mr. Ritch's efforts five car loads of nearly 500 hogs were brought into Yazoo City for shipment by the farmers of the county. Seventy farmers brought in 103 wagon loads of porkers which were bought by the Natchez Packing Company for the highest prices ever paid for hogs in Mississippi. The good heavy corn finished hogs brought $8.00 net a hundred weight, and the total shipment returned to the farmers over $5,000.

Starting last November with one car load of hogs which brought six cents, Mr. Ritch has rapidly developed his co-operative shipping plan, having shipped a total of ten cars.

CREAMERY SUCCESS

More than 200 members and patrons of the Mississippi A. and M. College Cooperative Creamery Association attended an all day get-together dairy meeting and picnic to celebrate the success of the creamery during the past year. This was the first creamery organized in the State, its purpose being to demonstrate the benefits of handling dairy products cooperatively. According to a recent report the association now ships over 20,000 pounds of butter per month, bringing in to the farmers a gross income of between $6,000 and $7,000, and by its success has stimulated the organization of other creameries throughout the State.

Mr. W. P. Talbot, manager of Tameny Hall, a fishing resort, Geneva, Ala., writes: "I have tried Calomel, Quinine and other remedies for malaria and biliousness without effect: tried Vega-Cal" (vegetable calomel), which gave relief. Think it a God-send to the people." "Vege-Cal" is sold and guaranteed by all drug stores, 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Field of Fulghum Oats That Made 75 Bushels Per Acre

The above is a reproduction of the best picture of an oat field in Alabama that we have seen in a long while.

While the reproduction, naturally, is not as pretty as the original photograph, still it shows you a field that produced "some" oats.

The photograph was given us by J. E. Pittman county farm demonstrator of offee county. It is of a ten-acre oat field belonging to H. M. Sessions, of Enterprise, who takes his cue from the name of his town and gets out and hustles for more profitable and progressive agriculture. He is the man who has given stimulus to peanut growing in his section.

Mr Sessions' are Fulghum oats—early heading oats—and they were sown October 15th last. They were cut May 5th and the estimated yield is 75 bushels per acre. The total cost of preparing the land, sowing, harvesting, etc., was 25 cents per bushel. Mr. Sessions and Mr. Pittman too are strong for Fulghum oats after getting such a good yield in an unfavorable season.

After harvesting this profitable crop of oats Mr. Sessions is expecting to get a hay crop of about two tons to the acre. He expects to follow the hay crop with Crimson clover.

Mr. Sessions talks profitable farming a whole lot as well as work at it, and talking farming does a whole lot more than most people may think. The only way to create a sentiment for anything is to talk it, and the only way to create a real, lasting sentiment for the rotation of crops and the building up of the land is to talk profitable farming methods. The more we can talk sensible, profitable farming the more of this kind of farming we will have.

We must keep on talking crop rotation, growing and turning under of legumes and having something coming on every month in the year. And when we get this sort of talk from the men who are doing what they talk, it counts for a whole lot. One progressive farmer who does as well as he talks is about the most valuable asset any community can have.

Big Farmer Tells How He Made Oats Without Any Rain

Among the very best oats that have been made in Alabama are those of W. W. Thompson, that splendid farmer of Liverpool, Ala., who uses both head and hands in his work.

Fine Seed Bed.

Mr. Thompson tells how he won success with his oats through a mighty dry spring when many other oat fields failed. He found that the most important part of all—as with many crops—was the preparation of the seed bed. In September the land was well broken up with two-horse plows and then gone over with disc harrows. In October it was plowed again with one-horse plows, followed by drag harrows. Just before putting in the grain a drag was run over the land, pulverizing every clod; then the oats were drilled in, using one hundred pounds of phosphate and fifty pounds of meal. In March sixty pounds of nitrate of soda and sixty pounds of phosphate were thoroughly mixed and put over the oats broadcast, making a total of 275 pounds of fertilizer that cost $3.75. There were used three bushels of seed oats per acre which cost $3.30. It cost $4 per acre to do the plowing, making the total cost of production $16.05 per acre.

Net Profit Good.

The yield averaged fifty bushels per acre, which at seventy-five cents a bushel for the oats gives $35 as the value of the production of each acre. Taking off the cost, $16.05, leaves a net profit of $18.95 per acre, besides the pasture furnished and the waste grain that the hogs are getting in the field.

Rotation To Come.

"I expect," says Mr Thompson, "to sow the same land in soja beans and peas—worth $15 per ton—and when this crop is gathered the land will be enriched for having had the beans and the peas on it. On one field I will follow the oats with corn and peas and expect to realize thirty bushels of corn and five bushels of peas per acre. On still another portion of the oat field I will plant peanuts and soja beans for pasture for the hogs and the cattle too.

"On my home far this year I have 115 acres in oats, 135 acres in corn, 50 acres in peanuts, ten acres in ribbon cane for syrup, 35 acres in velvet beans, besides several truck patches.

Will Cut Out Cotton.

"In another year I expect to cut out cotton entirely, raising only feedstuffs for cattle and hogs and keeping good cover crops on my lands during the winter season. I have this year increased my truck crops twenty-five per cent and have cut down my cotton acreage the same amount. On the Liverpool Land Company's farm we have about 750 acres in cotton and the same in corn.

Let's Do Better.

"What we do not know in the South about farming will fill volumes, but we often know a great deal more than we practice. The possibilities of our best lands are truly wonderful, but the soil must have good treatment and good seed beds must be prepared before the crops are put in. We have 'the garden spot of the world' and so let's take advantage of our blessings and improve our methods."

Will Bring New Farmers Into Alabama

A. P. Gooding, Jr., is one man who believes that the real tide of immigration is just beginning to turn to Alabama.

He believes it so strongly that he left his home in Kentucky and came to Montgomery, Ala., to make his home and induce other Kentuckians to come down and buy farms and live in Alabama.

Mr. Gooding is now listing land in the Black Belt that is for sale. His plan is to get farm options from as many farmers as possible so that he will have variety, both in soil and location, to offer the newcomers.

Mr. Gooding looked over a good part of the South before settling in Alabama and deciding to bring to the attention of farmers in Kentucky and other central states the opportunities that await them in Alabama farm lands. He liked Alabama best of all the South he saw and he believes that the next couple of years are going to see many farmers coming in from states north of us. His idea is to place these new-comers all through the central part of the state, offering them farms in any part of the Black Belt.

Mr. Gooding is aiming to get the co-operation of farmers in the black belt in his work.

By the way, what he aims to do through the black belt might be done by a live man in the northern or southern part of the State.

Soil Improvement by Crop Rotation with Legumes

The advantages of growing legume crops to renovate, improve and enrich the soil, also the high protein content and consequent rich food value of legumes have long been appreciated. In order to grow legumes successfully and derive all these benefits it is necessary that they be inoculated with the proper strain of nitrogen-fixing bacteria. This has all been amply demonstrated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, by State Experiment Stations and by practical experience on the part of farmers in all sections of the country.

While it has been known for many years that legume plants left the land more fertile, instead of poorer, it is only in more recent years that we have learned the reason for this, and, because it is a natural means and entails no great expense, the enrichment of the soil in available nitrogen through the activities of these bacteria has attracted the attention of an army of investigators in the field of agricultural biology.

There is no occasion for buying expensive commercial nitrates when you can secure all the nitrogen that your crops require by adopting Nature's own method of maintaining soil fertility—by growing legumes. Cow peas are probably the most extensively grown legume in the South—but, how many of us are deriving the full benefit that this valuable crop is capable of giving us—in other words, how many of us inoculate our seed?

The study of the relation between crops, soil and germs, or bacteria, has progressed sufficiently to warrant the interest of every progressive agriculturist or farmer. Atmospheric nitrogen can be used only by the legume or pod-bearing plants—the better known of which are the peas, beans, clovers, vetches and alfalfa—but even leguminous plants have no power to obtain nitrogen from the air unless they are provided with the proper nitrogen-fixing bacteria. In general agriculture, whether you specialize in fruit, grains, cotton, corn, potatoes, truck, livestock or dairy farming, the growing of legumes is essential as a part of any economic system which shall maintain the fertility of your soil—and, to grow legumes successully, the presence and assistance of the proper nitrogen-fixing bacteria is also absolutely necessary.

Nitrogen is the one element which we cannot afford to take out of the soil without replacing it. By growing inoculated legumes we need not fear the soil becoming depleted of this element. By using legumes in rotation with our soil-robbing crops, our soil becomes more fertile, because of the increase of nitrogen and humus, therefore more valuable.

In the vicinity of the larger Southern cities are dairy interests. It is recognized that dairy cows require a comparatively large proportion of protein in their feed. Where this protein can be obtained from the roughage or home grown forage it is much cheaper than if purchased in the form of concentrates. If we grew more clovers, vetches and other legume crops for the winter, and more peas, beans and other legumes in summer, to plow under, we could thus easily and cheaply replace the natural wear and waste of nitrogen and humus from our soils, and make it profitable at the same time, by means of the beef, milk and pork we could also produce from these crops.

Nitrogen is used by most plants in greater quantities than any of the other soil elements; it is easily lost and leached out from the soil and is usually the first element to become deficient; it is our most expensive element (per unit) when purchased in commercial fertilizers. With the knowledge that by the aid of nitrogen-fixing bacteria, our legume crops are rendered capable of gathering and storing up in the soil vast quantities of atmospheric nitrogen, in a form available as plant food, there is no excuse for those who fail to profit by it. As has been so often pointed out, our average yields of cotton, corn and oats are ridiculously low. How to increase the yield without unduly increasing the expenses has been the difficult problem.

Grow inoculated legumes answers the question and means the solution of our soil fertility problem.

In a series of tests as carried out by Prof. Temple, Georgia Experiment Station, the following results were obtained:

Plat	Pounds per Acre Green feed.	Dry hay
No. 1. With inoculation	18,524	4,168
No. 2. With inoculation and lime	25,520	5,742
No. 3. No inoculation with lime	8,800	1,980
No. 4. No inoculation no lime	4,928	1,314

An acre of well inoculated cow peas, turned under when the blooms appear, will put into the soil upwards of 125 pounds of nitrogen, worth $25 when bought in the form of commercial fertilizer, and all the phosphorus and potash the plant got out of the soil.

TWELVE HUNDRED BABIES DIED

ENORMOUS LOSS OF LIFE IN LARGE CITIES.

Twelve hundred and ten babies died in the city of St. Louis in 1915 and half of the deaths were caused by ignorance on the part of those who had the care of them.

This is the startling statement made in an editorial of The St. Louis Post-Dispatch in issue of March 2, 1916, and continuing, the paper said that much of that ignorance can be removed.

Mothers can learn without cost how to care for their children by writing for a copy of a booklet that has just been published and called "Healthy Babies," says the National Druggist, published in St. Louis, in the March, 1916 issue, and this journal says this booklet can not fail to remove much of that ignorance and hence will tend to save many human lives.

It gives suggestions to prevent underfeeding and overfeeding, when and how to wean the baby, the care of the bottle, how to avoid the petty troubles like chafing, prickly heat and numerous other subjects are treated in such manner as to be easily understood by every mother.

Any mother can secure a copy of this valuable booklet free by writing the C. J. Moffett Medicine Co., 1815 1st Avenue, Columbus, Ga. The Moffett Company are the manufacturers of "Teethina," a preparation for children that has had a most successful sale since 1877. Write for a copy today, a postal card will do.

BEE REPORT

The number of colonies of honey-bees has increased according to the spring count, which shows 2.8 per cent more than last spring. The increase is most marked in the North Central states, particularly those west of the Mississippi, all showing increases except Ohio and Michigan, this increase followed last year's favorable white clover season, in that section. Heavy increases occurred in several New England states, but Connecticut shows a decided decrease. New York increased its colonies heavily. There were moderate increases in most of the Southern states, but North Carolina, Texas, and particularly Tennessee, show considerable decreases. The western mountain states increased their colonies in all states except Utah, where the alfalfa weevil has damaged the industry. On the Pacific coast disease or winter loss has held numbers to the former figure in Washington and reduced numbers somewhat in Oregon, while California increased moderately.

The condition of bees compared with normal strength and healthfulness of colonies is high, 99 per cent for the United States, compared with 98.7 last year and 97.3 in 1914.

Plant conditions are particularly good in the white clover belt of the North Central States, except in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The condition of honey plants is good, 95.2, compared with 93.3 at this date last year, but not equal to the high condition of 99.1 reported in the spring of 1914. Many reported low because the spring was late.

Winter losses for the United States were 18.3 per cent against 12.6 per cent the previous winter.

Tamworth Breeder Speaks For the Bacon Type Hog

I have been flooded with inquiries about the Tamworth hog for the South, and I beg space in your valuable farm paper to reply to all.

I have been a breeder of Tamworth hogs for several years and find them the ideal hog for the South.

They are very prolific, often farrowing eleven to thirteen pigs per litter and they rarely ever lose a pig. The pigs are thrifty, grow fast and are marketable from six months to two years. I exhibited a pig at the Hale county fair two years ago that weighed 203 poungs. The pig was farrowed on May 29 and the fair was held October 27 of the same year, of course.

I have never had a sick hog since I have been breeding Tamworths. As to the quality of the meat, everyone knows the value of breakfast bason.

One can greatly improve their breed by crossing the Tamworth on the lard breeds, as the Tamworth increases vigor and improves the lard breed otherwise.

The Tamworths are great foragers doing well on pasture. They are easily kept and are very quiet, never having any tendency to fight. My herd boar will fatten 1,000 pounds and is as harmless as a little pig.

Silo Talk No. 5

Durability is the cheapest thing on earth. A silo that lasts for fifty years is worth ten times as much as one that lasts five years. But it does not cost ten times as much. That is why we say that durability is the cheapest thing on each.

A POLK SYSTEM SILO lasts forever. It never calls for a cent for upkeep or repairs—first cost is total cost. It renders perfect silage-keeping service, and it insures silage against fire and wind. There is really no end to the economy of a POLK SYSTEM SILO.

Figs "The Apples of the South" and the Great Things They Offer Us

By W. J. Warrington of Louisiana

Figs were first introduced into the South by the early Spanish and French settlers.

A few hardy varieties were grown and propogated and now there is hardly a home in the land that has not one or more fig trees about the house.

In the cities the fruit is eagerly sought after, and the market never fully supplied. Yet the commercializing of the fig as one of our most profitable industries has made very slow progress. Every one claims that "Figs grow like weeds" yet how many can point to a single successful fig orchard? I venture to say that not one in a hundred, yet we agree that figs are easily grown. Then why no orchards and no recognised system of marketing this valuable fruit? Our tables at home are not even well supplied. Fig preserves and fig products are a high priced luxury.

Why Is It?

For many years I tried to learn the "why it is so." Then eleven years ago, I began a careful study of this remarkable state of affairs, and have come to the conclusion that we do not know how to grow figs. The majority believe that figs can and should be the most profitable crop in the South, and far more renumerative than the apple and peach crop of the more Northern States. Yet most of us have only a few luxurient trees round our homes or along fences. After careful study and research one can count on his fingers all the successfully grown and profitable orchards in the South. For years I have been trying out every fig that possesed merit, over one hundred varieties in all. Some are shy fruiters or unfruitful, others ripen too early, others too late etc.

I have come to the conclusion that figs can easily be grown almost anywhere in the South, if given the proper attention and treatment. Ten or twelve varieties cover the desirable kinds to plant. Some varieties grow almost without care in certain soil, as for instance the Celeste in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana; the Brunswick, Purple Mission, and Brown Turkey along the South Atlantic Coast, and the Magnolia in Texas. All thrive under certain conditions, even though they are neglected, for instance around buildings along fenses, in dooryards and on shell banks. If strong trees grow in these places, why not in the orchard? Our attempts in field culture in poorly prepared land with little or no cultivation, always end in dismal failures.

Care Needed

Figs of most any variety except the Smyrna, will bear heavy crops of fruits in almost any place if cultivated and fed properly. No great amount of labor is necessary, if a simple intelligent method of culture is used. And on half as much work done in the orchard as there is on cotton and many other crops, a much greater profit could be made.

Preparing Land

First plant trees of only the best varieties, and never plant trees in new ground. At least one year's cultivation in some crop is necessary. Old ground moderately rich is better than new ground. Any kind of land should be well and deeply broken before planting. The trees should be set from sixteen to twenty feet apart. Much depends on the variety and location etc. The method of culture, bush or tree form, depends largely on the variety. Cultivate at least two years but not over three.

Use Lime And Legumes

Grow some leguminous plant, like cow or field peas, between the trees and plough in the green crop late in the fall. Two to four barrels of air slaked lime should be scattered over each acre every three or four years. On the coast where shells are abundant this is not necessary. The land should be well drained and the water level three or four feet below the surface. Oyster shells can be worked in around the trees to great advantage. Trees in shell banks or where shells are abundant, always heavy fruiters. The necessary sulphite of lime is supplied by the shells.

Second Year Cultivation

After the second years cultivation plough or disc the ground, not more than two or three inches deep. Fig roots are surface feeders, and must not be disturbed during the growing season. Fall breaking is desirable receding from the trees as they grow larger. Peas and strawberries may be profitably grown between them for several years.

To Get Fine Fruit

The ground around the trees can be used as a poultry yard for several years to great advantage. However light harrowing should be done and a dust-mulch maintained. Figs do well on a moist land, on a high dry soil they grow more slowly but are more resistant to frost, to a greater degree. After the second year cultivate the soil very shallow, oats may be sown late in the fall and ploughed in early in the spring. Always cultivate when the trees are dormant, the light harrowing and discing can most always be done to advantage. The addition of stable manure, woodpile dirt, and mulching, with hay straw or cane tops is always helpful. Do not forget that the roots are near the surface, and are sometimes killed or injured, by doing the right thing at the wrong time. Where discing is not practicable and weeds grow, mow them and leave them on the ground, they form a light covering and can be ploughed in during the winter months. Trees that have not had the proper care are in poor condition to withstand the droughts and rainy seasons and frequently shed their fruit. Sometimes figs mature too quickly and are of poor quality. Also when the vitality is low the trees are less frost resistant On the other hand, trees that have better care mature more and finer fruit, which is larger, better flavored, and the ripening extends over a longer period.

The Texas "Magnolia"

I have found on the Atlantic coast and Gulf bordering States, a number of desirable varieties, seemingly better adapted to certain localities, as for instance, the Brunswick, Brown Turkey, and Purple Mission along the Atlantic coast from Virginia south; the Brunswick, Green Ischia and Brown Turkey in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The most universal fig along the Gulf bordering States is the Celeste, a medium sized hardy variety. It is a splendid home fig, but not most desirable for commercial purposes. Texas lays great stress on the Magnolia, a large fig having a long bearing season, and by far the most profitable and high priced fig for preserving purposes. It is usually grown in bush form, and is very profitable. This fig also grows well in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, and no doubt could be profitably grown in all the Gulf States.

The "Florentine"

The best commercial fig is the Florentine. It is the best for shipping, preserving and drying. It is a new variety and a heavy fruiter. The skin of the fruit is of a pale green color, the flesh is a rich yellow or amber tint. The Florentine is the longest keeper of any fig. For the past two years fruit of this variety has been shipped through the mails in trial packages. three thousand miles and were from four to six days in transit. If packed in strawberry boxes, and shipped in refrigerator cars, there is no doubt that the fruit will keep from ten to twelve days. The quality and flavor of the Florentine is the best. It seems to combine all the good qualities of the other varieties and few of their objectional ones. It is a highly improved fig and destined to lead all other varieties.

Another good fig is the Norman. It has many of the good qualities of the Florentine, both as a shipping and preserving fig and is delicious as a breakfast fruit.

The Jennings Fig

There is a fig that probably originated on the Louisiana coast, that has its advantages as a shipping fig. It is Father Carey's, and is known as the Jennings Fig. I have made two trips to Jennings to study this fig, and although there on both occasions at inopportune times, I am sure that it is a sport of the old popular Mission Fig or Brunswick. It is a variety possessing merit and is desirable for more general cultivation.

As a commercial proposition, it is my belief that the fig can be made one of the most profitable crops in the South.

In Upper Fig Belt

In the upper fig belt where the freezes are severe, it is important that growing stop early in the fall so that the sap thickens, (goes down) the wood ripens, and the tree or bush hardens for the winter. Often we see old fields, or where homes have been, fig trees that are very hardy, the result of slow growth and hard wood. They usually bear little fruit, and of poor quality, due to neglect and want of nourishment.

Our Fig Opportunity

The area where figs will grow is limited. The North and West are hungry for the fruit. The rich dainty Cleste is too perishable for shipping and rather small for preserving or pickling, and commands only half the price of the larger varieties. Probably its commercial use would be to make Marmalade, Fig butter and fig paste. The larger and more select varieties will always be expensive and money makers. The possibilities of this business are just beginning to dawn upon our people. Small investments in the choicer varieties of figs, bring quick returns and there is no possibility of a glut on the market. Figs offer one of the most seductive inducements to the enterprising man or woman to reap a golden harvest.

Why We Have Failed.

Fig orchards, why we have so few. I am sure is due to our want of knowledge of how to care for them. How to feed and cultivate the trees. We see magnificent trees that fruit well by houses, along fences, in yards, and along the coast, literally growing in mounds of shells. Countless orchards have been planted and that was all. We took it for granted that if this "Apple of the South" grows so readily without care, that the same results would follow if planted in the orchard row, and that we would only have to gather the fruit. Not many of us know why figs have not thrived under these conditions of field culture. We see figs and peaches growing around our homes that have rich humus added to the soil by grasses, poultry and other droppings, and there is always more plant food freed from the soil. The conditions for gathering, storing up in the earth of nitrogen, the very essence of plant life, and so necessary to fig culture is there. Other trees around the house grow in rich firm soil, their roots run in earth rich in the life giving properties that nature has stored up in her laboratory in the hard firm ground around the house and barn. The delicate roots along the fense romping in earth made rich by decaying grasses, or under buildings where the dampness furnishes nitrogen and other plant foods, these conditions are most favorable. Compare these trees to the ones in the orchard or on the open poor land, sunbaked, hard, and amongst numerous clods and probably grasses, sapping the soil of what little fertility it possesed. Then add to the woes of the fig culturest, the wanton folly of turning in the stock to eat the grass and incidently prune the trees.

People that manage their groves in this manner, have told me that "Figs will not grow in orchards, and they honestly believed it.

Give Figs A Chance

Give the figs a chance. Make the conditions as near as possible like those around our homes, and along the fences. Do not let the stock prune the trees. Remember the trees near the buildings and along the fences are growing under different conditions such as they require. Nature's laboratary and her wonderful chemistry transform the elements necessary into available plant food. In the orchard we must assist by planting nitrogen storing plants. We must plough in vegetable matter and quantities of humus by planting, peas, Peanuts and oats for cover crops. The latter should be ploughed in early in the spring. Don't forget, where possible, to work in quantities of shell and lime. Use stable manure, straw and grass for mulching. Plough in during the fall or winter. Conserve the moisture by keeping a dust mulch three or four inches deep during the summer. This mulch can be maintained by using the disc or harrow. In other words, learn the cause for the trees around the house being so vigorous, and apply the same conditions to the orchard. Trees should be properly pruned to give the best results, either for producing figs, for preserving, shipping or drying.

Great Profit In Them

Two to four hundred dollars is a conservative estimate, although some claim from five to twelve hundred dollars profit an acre. In either case it is well worth the attention of the ambitious farmer. It requires little work and money to begin, and is a work that women, boys and girls can assist in. Gathering, packing and selecting fresh fruit, for shipping, canning, preserving, pickling and drying, is work made play, play that will bring golden returns.

In an early issue of this farm paper Mr. Warrington will give you recipes for preserving figs, canning figs, Pickling figs, drying figs, etc.

A CRUSHER WITH EVERY GIN HOUSE

Feed is now the paramount question before the Southern farmers. When we have grown it, then comes the question of getting it in the best condition for feeding.

In conversation with Mr. E. T. Boswell, of Siloam, Ga., a few days ago, he was loud in his praise of his Williams patent crusher and grinder. He said: "Mine has paid for itself this season, in the saving I have made in the high price of cotton seed hulls. I have fed corn stalks hauled out of the field since Chirstmas, and even broom sage. The other day I cut one ton corn stalks, one of broom sedge and 1,000 pounds of good alfalfa hay. This made me 5,000 pounds of feed better than hulls."

These machines require 20 to 40-horse power engines to pull them. It is a machine that should be placed at every gin stand, and run in connection with the ginnery. Farmers far and near could then haul in their corn, hay and stalks and have them all ground up for food. As the boll weevil advances, this machine should come right along with his march, and furnish us ample food for all cattle.

"Cows and Cash"
That's what the author of this book says is the crying need of the South

MR. SAMUEL E. BARNES of Knoxville, Tenn., the author of the book, through long study of the problems of the Southern farmer and planter, has been able to point the way to a steady cash income and greater profits.

He doesn't theorize: he talks facts.

He says that what the South needs is more dairy cows.

He points out the advantages of a cream crop that brings in cash every week or month, along with a cotton or tobacco crop that brings income only once a year—or sometimes not at all.

He tells what kind of cows to get, how to feed and care for them, and how to market their product.

Just fill out the coupon or send the information requested on a post card, mentioning this paper, and the book will be mailed, postage paid.

PLANS FOR SEED STRIPPER

The best device for saving crimson clover seed is the home made stripper, which may be made at little expense by any farmer who is handy with a ax and hammer. The stripper can be made any desired width, ranging from one to six feet, and may be be run by hand, or built on wheels and drawn by a horse. It consists of a board sawed to resemble a common seed fork, the prongs about three-quarters of an inch in diameter and the spaces between about one-quarter inch. Upright pieces are nailed on the sides, and a box for the clover seed is attached just behind.

Plans for making this stripper have been prepared in circular form by C. T. Ames, of the Holly Springs experiment station Miss., who has secured good results with it for several years Any farmer who desires further information on the machine may obtain this circular on application to Mr. Ames at Holly Springs, Mississippi.

COTTON SEED BAGS

The expense and trouble of using bags in handling and marketing cotton seed outweigh any advantage bags may give in reducing the loss from careless handling of this crop. according to cottonseed specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. They therefore recommend the use of bags only in special cases, as for planting seed, less than carload shipments, and for river transportation. In such cases the bags protect and facilitate handling. Careful studies, however, show that in handling cotton seed in large quantities the first cost of the bags, coupled with the fact that they deteriorate quickly and have to be kept in repair, makes them too expensive.

Shipping in bags involves an extra cost and labor in filling, emptying, and weighing, and makes accurate sampling more difficult. Time is lost in emptying seed from bags, as loose locks of cotton and burs tend to make the seed cling to the bagging. Thread from the mouth of the bag also often gets mixed with the seed, catches in the conveying and cleaning machinery, and causes choke-up and delays.

JUST BOY

Bubbling all over with sunshine and laughter,
Joy of the here and the dream of hereafter;
Rosy-checked, tawny-skinned, chin like a berry,
Eyes that are stars, all a-twinkle and merry;
Boy, boy, just little boy—
God keep him young in that land that is fair
With nothing to worry and nothing to care!

Whatever of beauty this life has within it,
He sees it and gets at its sweet in a minute:
Rollicking, roystering, hale little fellow,
With cheeks of the sunrise 'neath blown locks of yellow;
Boy, boy, just little boy—
God gives him happiness all the long way
He dances down life in his gladness today.

Sparkling and springing with motion and rapture.
A butterfly born for the mornings to capture
And hold in the cup of their blossoms, distilling
The beauty and bubble of life round him spilling:
Boy, boy, just little boy—
Fashioned for fun with the sun in his soul,
God keep him sweet while the swift mornings roll!

Cheecks that are streaked with the delible marking
Of little soiled fingers so fit for sky-larking;
Lips that are flageloets trembling and squealing.
With infinite measures of rare boyhood feeling—
Boy, boy, just little boy—
Good keep him dancing and prancing before us
Till the boy in us answers and echoes the chorus!
—The Bentztown Bard.

FINDING THINGS

Finding things at cleanin' time,
Plague my buttons, sir, but I'm
Fagged righ out with tryin' to,
And I guess it's so with you,
And with all the rest of us—
One eternal springtime fuss
Findin' things that ought to be
There where anyone could see.

First thing when she comes along—
Hummin' all her little song—
Tawes the fishin' tackle down
F'um behind the shelf, and, jing,
Every doddled bit uv string
I've kept bringin' home f'um town,
Gone as clip an' clean—by gum
Cleaningin' house is goin' some!

That old cap of mine; now where
Is that knife I left right there
So's I'd have it handy when
Whittlin' season came again!
An' that crab line, and that net—
Beats most all that I've seen yet
How f'um cleanin' up in spring
You can't find a single thing!

The plaits can be extended to the belt or cut off and joined to a yoke, and there are suspenders that may be used if liked. The blouse is distinctly novel. It is in middy style and it shows new features in the dropped shoulders, rolled over cuffs and pockets that consist of one straight piece applied over the front and stitched into place. Here it is made of blue linen with the collar, cuffs and belt of white.

For the 16 year size the blouse will require, 3 yards of material 36 inches wide, 2 7-8 yards 44 with 5-8 of a yard 36 inches wide for the trimming. For the skirt will be needed, 4 yards of material 36 or 44 inches wide or 2 3-8 yard 54.

SMART BLOUSE

No. 8709—A good model that can be finished with or without frills.

This blouse with frills at the front is one of the newes and it is very interesting. It is prettily and becomingly full and the collar can be adjusted to form an open neck or it can be buttoned up closely consequently it is an exceptionally available model. Here, it is made of the fashionable organdie, and the edges are finished with picot or cut hem-stitching, but the design will be found a good one for crepe de chine, for the tub silks, handkerchief lawn, cotton voiles and indeed for almost all waisting materials. If preferred, the frills can be omitted but they make a new feature and a smart one. In the back view, the sleeves are shorter with plain bands.

For the medium size will be required 4 yards, of material 27 inch wide, 3 1-2 yard 36 2 1-8 yards, 44.

The pattern No. 8709 is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 inch bust measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Pattern Department of Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala., upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

SMOCKING

No. 8786—Smocking has grown in favor week by week until it has become a really important element in the autumn fashions. This little dress show it used most effectively and as a matter of course, any form of the work and any preferred stitches can be used. The dress is one of the one-piece sort with raglan sleeves and the fulness is held at the waist line by means of a belt. It is very simple little dress to make and any mother who can sew a straight seam will be sure of success. Raglan sleeves are the easiest in the world for they require no fitting and the dress hangs in long straight lines with the front edges hemmed. Here, it is made of light weight wool crepe and the collar and the cuffs are of taneta, with the belt of patent leather. It would be very pretty made from cotton crepe or from one of the fall ginghams, or indeed from any of the washable materials, while it also is good for challis, albatross and the like. The pattern allows all seams and gives, also, the perfect basting line.

For the 10 year size will be needed 4 1-2 yards of material 27 inch wide 2 1-2 yards 36, 3 yards 44 with 3-8 yard 27 inch wide for the collar and cuffs.s

APRON

No 8820—Here is one of the most perfect work aprons that could be found for it completely covers the gown. It is perfectly simple too and easy to make and easy to adjust. If preferred, it can be made with square neck and without sleeves but the women who seeks to protect her gown will like the complete apron as shown on the figure. Checked gingham in the material illustrated with trimming of plain chambray, and since the pattern provides both the seams and the basting line, the garment may be put together in a very brief space of time. Arkansas Man Urges Town People to Buy Home Products

"The farmers of Arkansas responded splendidly last year to the slogan of 'Let Arkansas Feed Herself,' " said Dean Miller of the extension service of the University and Department of Agriculture, "but many of them in their desire to reduce cotton acreage planted too heavily of the perishable crops. From many counties have come complaints from the farmers that the home towns could not use their produce last year. Investigations have shown two things:

"(1) The farmers did not put their stuff in good marketable condition and did not advertise, and (2) the merchants of the small towns feared to buy local stuff because they were uncertain about the sale of their produce to the home people."

Mr. Miller is of the opinion that the time is ripe now, with the fine feeling that exists between farmers and town people, to organize in every town a "Marketing Committee," to consist of five persons, both men and women, to assume some responsibility for the marketing of the home produce. Such a committee should be consulted by the farmers before going heavily into the growing of a new crop, especially a perishable crop. This committee might well have a public session every Saturday from 1 to 3 p. m., Mr. Miller suggests, for conference with the county agricultural agent and with farmers interested in the growing of certain crops, relative to local demands, shipping arrangements and local and foreign standards.

Town's Responsibility

"This is in harmony with the new idea of communal responsibility. Cities and towns have obligations as well as privileges," he said. "Our towns and cities have gone beyond the country in many lines of advancement and a halt is sure to come. A town that wants the country trade ought to assume some responsibility for the profitable marketing of the farmers' produce. The farmer ought to have enough for his produce to pay interest on his investment, good pay for his labor and a profit. It is to the interest of the town merchant that the farmers make money, and I want to see these marketing committees formed in all Arkansas towns."

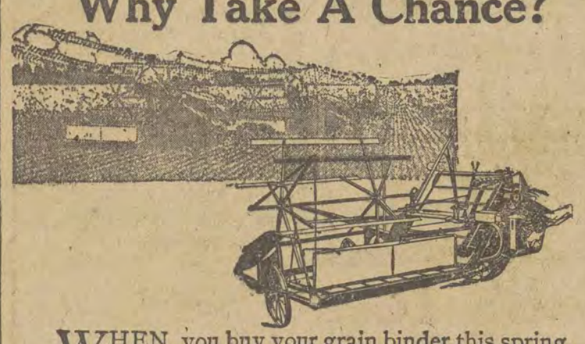
Hope in Women's Clubs

Last year farmers' produce rotted on the ground and similar stuff from other states was later sold in the same town. Mr. Miller hopes the Women's Clubs will take this up at once and arouse public sentiment to use home grown stuff. He says the constructive work of the Women's Clubs in Arkansas has been wonderful. He says that where such a marketing committee is formed the extension service will hold meetings and otherwise instruct both farmers and townspeople in the matter of standards, and therefore, it ought to be possible for town and country to help each other.

Buy Home Produce First

"Bradford Knapp of Washington has just written me," said Mr. Miller, "of a city of 18,000 population in Louisiana where the whole city has declared that they will not buy outside produce until they have exhausted the local supply. Mr. Cole, a grocer of Conway, not only bought all the canned goods the girls' clubs had to sell but he bought hundreds of cans of fruit and vegetables from the farmers. He bought many cars of sweet potatoes and handled them on a very narrow margin."

Mr. Miller thinks it a fine thing that in many towns merchants are beginning to pay farmers for their non-perishable stuff almost as much as they sell it for. It is hardly fair, he thinks, for a merchant to buy eggs, for example, in March at 11 cents a dozen when they are selling in Memphis for 30 cents a dozen. A marketing committee would gradually take on a finer spirit of cordial fellowship with the leading women, bankers and merchants working with the farmers and their wives for a more prosperous town and country. Mr. Miller has recently written to all the bankers and women's clubs of the state asking them to lead in this movement for each town to have a marketing committee.



A CALL TO ARMS

Growing food for the family and feed for the livestock is the farmer's surest form of preparedness against the enemies hard times and debt. Good gardens, fresh milk and butter fresh eggs and fruits with home raied ham and hominy for the folks; and plenty of home grown grain and hay supplemented with permanent pastures for the livestock is the best ammunition to use against these enemies in the war for prosperity.

A call to Mississippi farmers to arm themselves with fertile soil, good livestock, and practical implements to wage this war is now being issued by the State Bankers Association in coporeation with the Mississippi A. and M. College Extension Deartment.

As an aid to the volunteers who want to join this farmer's prosperity army, the extension forces of the college have with suggestions given by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the Extension Division of Arkansas, worked out a plan of campaign for the most efficient operation of the small farms in the different sections of the state. Larger units are recommended for the most profitable use of the farmers time where the land is available, but the following enterprises will be found to supply plenty for family use and leave some to sell.

Why Take A Chance?

WHEN you buy your grain binder this spring, do not make the mistake of experimenting with an untried or cheap machine. You cannot make money that way. A binder is useful for one purpose only—to get all the grain cut and bound in the short time allowed for the harvest. That is no time to risk experiments, especially when you do not have to. Choose your binder from one of the old reliable, yet up-to-date in every way, International Harvester binders sold under the trade names—

Champion Deering McCormick
Milwaukee Osborne Plano

You will find practical farmers, who know what particular harvesting difficulties they must overcome each year, urging the use of some binder with an IHC name. Years of building and betterment have resulted in these machines that insure as complete a harvest as it is possible ever to get, even under worst field and grain conditions.

Look for the same high-grade workmanship, the same famous IHC quality in IHC twine. Make the most of your crops. Your local dealer can furnish you with IHC binder repairs and twine. See him or write to us for information.

To Farmers of Boll Weevil Sections:-
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG will do effective and rapid work in brushing to the ground boll weevils and punctured squares. THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is a strong, practical and economical device for getting rid of the most weevils in the QUICKEST TIME and the CHEAPEST WAY. It is used and highly recommended by some of the most successful farmers in Mississippi and Alabama. THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is the best device known for the use of tenant farmers in fighting the weevil.

THE DRAG DESCRIBED
The Drag is a steel rod that holds a light durable chain, the rod and chain being attached to the beam of the plow stock with a casting arranged so as to be adjustable to the size of plants at the time for plowing. The rod is placed at an angle to the beam and as the plow proceeds down the row the rod bends down the plant over towards the middle between the rows and the chain agitates the plant sufficiently to cause the Weevil and infested squares to fall off into the middle of the row. The attachment is reversible as well as adjustable, up and down, and can be used on either right or left side of the plow below or above the beam.

We do not desire to create the impression among farmers that any device will prevent all the damage the weevil usually causes, unless the approved measures for control be carefully followed.
Write us so we can take care of your order before the growing season starts.

"Boll Weevil" Burley Meets The Weevil In Lowndes

By W. O. Winston, County Agent of Lowndes

Mr. C. B. Burley, of Louisiana, who was in Lowndes county last week, had some good advice to give on fighting the boll weevil and all who heard him got valuable information as to the best methods to use this year in making cotton. Mr. Burley is a practical farmer of Louisiana and what he tells us of conditions there should be of great value in adapting ourselves to new conditions here. His advice to cotton farmers in this section was about as follows:

Go After Old Weevils.

First—Go after the old weevils which have come through the winter and are now to be found in the cotton fields. These are not numerous enough to do the cotton any material damage but get in their work by laying eggs in squares and producing a succession of crops of young weevils which, if left alone, will destroy almost the entire cotton crop. We have from now until squares commence to form to get these old weevils and they are to be found in the bud of the cotton plants. They feed on the soft buds and young leaves of the cotton. Watch for his sign wherethese leaves have become dark and wilted and the weevil will be found nearby. This work should be done at least once a week, the cotton being gone over carefully.

Gather the Squares.

Second—As soon as squares commence to form and are punctured by the weevil, gather them from the cotton plants and from the ground, and destroy them before they have time to hatch. The old weevils will continue to come out of winter quarters until the middle of June and consequently many squares will be punctured, as each female weevil lays on an average of 230 eggs and destroys this number of squares. Hence the importance of destroying these old wintered weevils, and young weevils in the squares, in order to keep down their increase.

For Botton Crop.

Third—If the work of picking up weevils and squares is done thoroughly once a week from now until July first, there should be very few weevils in a man's field by that time and a good bottom crop of cotton can be put on by August. We cannot hope for a top crop of cotton with the boll weevil.

When Crop is Made.

Fourth—Remember that until about August 10th the weevil does not fly from field to field, but stays in the fields he enters when coming out of winter quarters. About Augusta 10th they commence to spread over the whole country and after this time very few squares will develop into bolls. The fight from now until July first is to get rid of the weevil so that what cotton is made can be put on before the first weeks in August.

Continued Cultivation.

Fifth—Cultivate cotton at least once a week until bolls begin to open. This will make a heavy crop of squares for the weevils to occupy themselves with in August. If they haven't these squares they will go to work on the bolls put on in July. They prefer the squares, but lacking these, will go after the bolls.

Destroy Stalks.

Sixth—Destroy cotton stalks, by plowing them under as early in October as possible. This is the easiest and cheapest method of destroying the weevils. Where done early in October, not over two weevils out of every thousand will go through the winter. The weevil doesn't fly very far in the spring when he comes out of his winter home, and if a man will destroy him in the fall, and cut off his feed early, he will have only a few to start with next year, although his neighbor may be eaten up with them.

Race Till August.

This sums up the fight that will have to be made here to head off the boll weevil. Its a race until about August 10th. Each farmer must be the judge of whether or not he can make cotton at a profit. By reducing the acreage, using nothing but early lands which are being built up with soil improving crops, every other year, planting early maturing varieties, raising more live stock and sticking to the live-at-home polcy, we believe that some cotton can be made here yet at a profit. Hard work and good judgment are necessary to win. Read the government bulletins, listen to all advice and take that part of it which appeals to your good sense and after awhile the boll weevil will not appear the dreaded pest that he seems today.

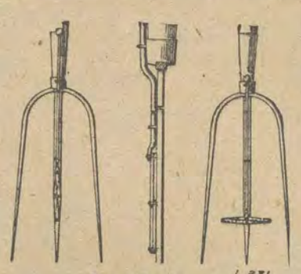
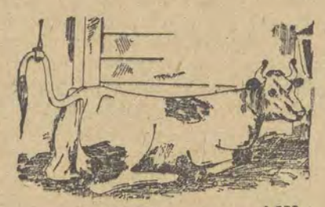
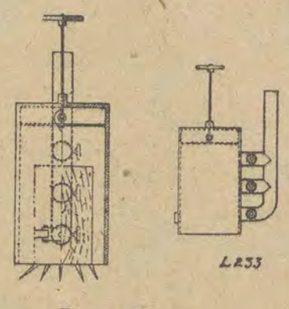
Recent Inventions For Farmers--Maybe You Can Make Them For Yourself



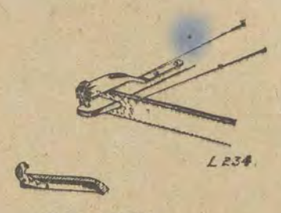
By C. J. LYNDE



Fruit Picker



Trap Nest



Hay Fork

Tail Clip

Stump Burner

Trace Holder

Fruit Picker.

This device is used in picking fruit from the lower branches. It consists of a canvas chute attached to a canvas bag and strapped to the right wrist. The fruit is picked with the right hand and allowed to slide through the chute into the bag. It is claimed that the device saves considerable time.

Trap Nest.

A hen, when entering this nest, lifts the guard and allows the curved supports to drop; when one is inside, the guard falls to the closed position and is held there by the supports, which are slightly curved down at the ends for this purpose.

Hay Fork.

The advantage claimed for this fork is that it holds a large forkful of hay more securely than the ordinary fork. A pair of toggle links are attached to the flattened central tyne and are operated by a rod with a button at the end. When the links are cut, the hay is held; when they are in, it is released.

Tail Clip.

This clip is designed to support the tail of a cow in an elevated position when she is lying down or when she is being milked. It consists of two half cylindrical pieces of sheet metal hinged together.

Stump Burner.

It is stated that with this burner even green stumps may be reduced to ashes. It consists of an air tight cylindrical fire chamber, large enough to pass entirely over the stump, and a pipe with three entrances. The special feature is the inside top plate which may be lowered to confine the heat to the stump. Dry fuel is inserted through the door in front.

Trace Holder

The latch of this holder permits the trace to be slipped easily over the end of the whiffle tree and then holds it securely in place. When the upper end of the latch is moved out, the lower end is raised, and the trace is readily removed.

You can teach your boy only what you have learned about farming; but at the agricultural college they will teach him the best that thousands of other good farmers have learned. If he likes farming, think over the question of sending him to the college next autumn.

How to Get Northern Farmers to Come Into Central South and Stay

By G. A. McCollum, Aurora, Illinois

I have just returned from another trip through your wonderful Black Soil Belt located in Alabama. We have studied these lands for some four years and each time that I look them over, I am convinced that these lime lands are better than our average Illinois or Iowa farms that are selling today from $150 to $200 per acre.

Wont Cut Up Land

I have had a vision of these lands being peopled by the practical farmer from Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Iowa and the great farming districts of the corn belt. But, in trying to arrive at some conclusion, as to the best way of interesting these white farmers and bringing them South, it was not a question of selling, the main question is, that your average planter seems to be averse to having his place cut up into small farms. It is impossible for a colonization company to acquire enough land to control a district. It would require a cash investment of at least two hundred thousand dolars, besides almost the same amount for overhead expense and advertising.

Cutting It Up Will Pay

There is one solution of this problem as to how to bring emigrants and people, and that is, for the plantation owner to put his property into a selling organization at a fair price, with an agreement that the farm shall be sold in small areas from 80 acres up. He will receive more net out of his land by taking a small payment down and giving time from five to ten years at six per cent interest on the balance than he will by trying to farm it in cotton or corn under the present labor conditions.

Community Idea

The community idea is the only one that will successfully colonize any area of land. It is imposible to bring a Northern farmer South and sell him a farm in a district where he has few white neighbors. He does not understand his negro neighbors, to begin with, and his wife does not understand them and fears them, and his children have not proper school advantages.

Profit By Experience

The trouble has been in the past in the colonization of your lands, which has been attempted by railways and agents, was to place Northern farmers at considerable distances from one another, when there should be started a community of white people. Let us try and start and get a true and correct understanding of all the problems we are to meet and use the experience of reputable colonization people as to the best ways and means of bringing the right kind of settler into this district.

Colonization ordinarily means the transplanting of farmers and having to do with the development of the country in agriculture. This is not quite broad enough, for it should embrace the bringing of manufactures, new industries, which open up new vocations. In other words, colonization and development must go hand in hand.

Something Must Be Done

In my talks with people and representative men generally, they are all favorable to the thought and support that we want the Northern man here to properly farm these large tracts. I venture to say, that not over ten per cent of your land owners would go upon the farms today and cultivate them as they should be done. Your people have been born and reared in the atmosphere of cotton and corn; the ancestry has been this and while you may have prospered immensely through this era, the fact is apparent now that the boll weevil has struck you hard and is going to remain, that something must be done to change the condition of farming.

Settling on Arid Lands.

In my experience I have never found land, which was better adapted to the live stock industry than your prairie lands in Alabama. Practically all of the homestead land has been taken up the past few years. Thousands of settlers have gone into the West and are raising cattle and wheat. Most of that western country is a one crop country. They cannot raise corn successfully. If you will draw a line from the 100 to the 107 Meridian, you will fin dthat they are in a semi-arid country, running from the Saskatchewan in Canada down to the Dakotas, Western Nebraska down into the Panhandle of Texas. That country does not receive sufficient rain and it is only by a freak of nature once in three or four years they have enough rainfall to raise a good crop. But, notwithstanding this, these lands are being peopled by thousands of new settlers. When we go beyond that region we get into the irrigated districts, but it has been proven the past few years that the average farmer does not make good on the irrigated lands. The government today is reclaiming these lands from alkali. If he puts too much water on his land, it brings out the salt and then he finds more often that he cannot get water when he wants it and there is a heavy tax.

Small Net Profit in Iowa.

When we talk of the wonderful fruit gardens of Washington and California, we find that these rolling lands are high in price and they really do not raise as good apples as Michigan or New York. Take the state of Iowa, the past decade shows that while Iowa's population has decreased, her land values have increased one billion dollars, while she had been sleeping, and Iowa today with her high priced lands cannot compare with the Black Soil with the lime content, which grows alfalfa successfully. The average farmer of Iowa and Illinois is not making $15 net on his land.

Don't Know Us.

Now, why is it that all of these hundreds of thousands of farmers who have gone from Iowa and other northern states into Canada and the west did not come South. There is a reason for it, and if the South is going to take advantage of the "Back to the Farm Movement," it is imperative that her lands be placed before these people in an attractive manner at a price and on terms that will be attractive and move the man from the north, who has a natural prejudice about coming South fearing that he will not be well received; besides he has the idea that Mississippi, Alabama and these Southern states are swampy and filled with all sorts of reptiles. It is a peculiar fact and one that I have noticed lately, that very few northern people go South and there are less of the Southern people who go north. You know nothing with reference to the farming conditions nor the demand for land and they know nothing of the wonderful opportunities within 24 hours ride of Chicago.

The Need To Know.

As an economic proposition, there is no state in the Union that needs farmers and territory colonization as does Alabama. I would say that there should be a united support back of a good colonization project. You are too self satisfied and do not realize the imperative necessity of capitalizing the desire of these northern people for good land. This desire for prairie land is inherent; it is a desire that does not have to be created. All these people need to be shown is the fact that there is such a country here like the prairie district of the corn belt, and as Governor Shaw of Iowa said recently, "If the people of Iowa knew as much as he did about the lime lands, Iowa tenants would be down here in hordes and Iowa would be depopulated.

What We Have.

Alabama has a store house of possibilities, not only in her fertile valleys up in the Tennessee valley country, nor in the prairie district, but also in her cut over lands, which are fine for stock and which can compare now with California in her citrus industry. Under the cotton system such as you have been operating in the past, land values cannot reach a stable value, being devoted to this one crop, which fluctuates.

Can Get Germans.

California's land values today are due to a comprehensive united get-together support and she has drawn to her capital and men, and her real estate values have risen at an astonishing rate. Western Canada through railway coopertion brought three hundred thousand of our American farmers, and just as soon as the war is over, I know of hundreds of German families who will be coming across the border of Canada and must locate somewhere. The lands of Iowa are too high. They want to raise corn and hogs and it seems to me that this district here offers the best opportunity for them. These people can be segregated into a community by themselves and they will make good. I have one colony of Hollanders who desire six thousand acres of lands for dairying. There is another sect of people who desire thirty thousand acres of land. This is what we call nationality colonization and the best in the long run, for they have their own schools and churches.

What Possible Returns.

If you have ever traveled through the states of the north and compared their natural equipment of soil cultivation, growing season, markets, crops and shipping facilities with your own country here, you must have thought that what returns these same people could get on these fertile prairies of your black soil belt. If these same people were now on your prairie lands, can you doubt but what industries would come; a packing plant would become an important necessity.

Maximum 6 Per Cent.

The first question that is asked by a hard-headed money-making farmer when we tell him about these wonderful fertile lands is, "Why is it that you have such good land, that it has not been farmed and people are not there?" And the only answer that we can give is, "that the plantations run from a section to several thousand acres; you have raised cotton for generations mostly without the aid of any kind of fertilizer, and that heretofore, your planters would not sell off a small farm out of his holdings." It has been a matter of education that a great many people, great many colonists and others have come south and have gone back, because they were not able to purchase a half section and could not buy a thousand acres. You will never be able to people these lands until there is a different spirit inculcated into the plantation owners nor until the banker has gotten out of the idea that he can charge more than 6 per cent for his money. The banker is just as much responsible for the opening up of these lands as is the planter.

When your lands are offered for sale, it must be with the understanding that the maximum must be 6 per cent.

Now is the Time

It is with the idea of directing the attention of the planter and the men who have the large plantations, to the possibilities of colonizing these lands with progressive farmers from the north. We believe the time is here now, and unless we can bring them in the next two or three years, other states will get them. I know intimately the farming conditions in the corn belt. I have worked and colonized lands in the west and know most of the irrigation and reclamation projects; I have studied the prospects and possibilities of this prairie land for the past four years, and from my knowledge and observations, I have no hesitation in saying, that if we can have the united co-operation of people owning plantations generally, who will place their properties in the hands of responsible colonists, that these lands will be sold and peopled with farmers, who will raise forage, live stock and getting the maximum out of the land.

There must be a hearty co-operation for we are going to get the right northern man in here. I have visited a number of northern men, who are here and without exception, they have all done well financially. We want more of this kind.

Get together. Arrange with responsible colonists for at least one-half of your plantation to be sold to good white farmers who will farm the land right and build it up and make a success in the South. The balance of your holdings will double in value, or more.

Vaccinate Your Pigs at Weaning Time

By C. H. Goebel

BY C. H. GOEBEL

Never in the history of the United States has a serum been discovered that has caused as much State and Government legislation than anti-hog cholera serum and virus.

No one State in the Union has the same regulations as to its usages and protection for the users of this product. The Government has spent millions in regulating serum plants and educational work among the hog raisers. Their work has been such as to remove all skepticism from the minds of those who were disbelievers and established serum as a household word in every hog raising community.

Taking Chances

Each day we read and hear new authority as to when and how serum should be used. Right here the South can reap the full benefit that the Northern hog raising States have paid dearly, and that is to vaccinate your pigs at weaning time. Do not wait until infection sets in. This saves you financially, and relieves all worry. For example, a pig at weaning time will weigh from 20 to 40 pounds. This pig can be "immuned" or made free from cholera for life at the cost of about 35 cents. This same pig at three months will cost you $1 to vaccinate. Supposing your herd consists of 100 head, and for $35 you can protect them; yet at this time you figure it too expensive, and at three months or too soon for market, cholera becomes evident in your herd, and before the serum treatment can do them any good lose 25 per cent on top of the higher cost of vacination.

At Weaning Time

A good many people believe that serum is a curative, but it is not. It is a preventive, and the only way to get the results is to vaccinate at weaning time. For five years after the discovery of serum farmers would not listen to vaccinating their hogs before they became infected, but waited, and expected serum to perform miracles, and there was only one consequence—serum could not produce the desired results.

After years of missionary work amongst the farmers by the Government, State demonstrators and serum manufacturers the hog raisers have remedied this to such an extent that last year the serum production was far over than the demand. This has never happened before in serum history. Thousands of farms were rid of this dreaded disease that had cholera on them for forty years, and the only answer is to vaccinate your pigs at weaning time, so heed this, start out on the right foot first.

The farmer is the man.

THE "HOG SOUTH"

By M. S. McFadden of Illinois

"Taxi, Mister?"

Taxicab drivers in Chicago were reaping a harvest on the snowy, windy evening, early last month, when we started on our trip to the Central South with the carload of Poland-Chinas which were sold at Montgomery on the 23d of March. We gladly accepted the invitation to ride to the depot in the shelter of a "yellow cab," and as we recalled various similar "hog" trips we had made under like weather conditions we had but little confidence in the prospect for a comfortable trip We had visions of long, cold nights on freight trains with resultant colds, and grip, and we expected to arrive at the jourey's end in a blinding rainstorm so common in the South during the winter months; in fact, our thoughts were distinctly "gloomy weather" thoughts.

On Hog Train Through Tennessee

Three days later we were sitting in the open door of a box car riding out of Nashville, Tenn. It was a little before six o'clock in the morning and the weather was perfect. The green grass and wheat fields, with a veritable charm of song-birds in the trees made us feel sincerely glad to be on the trip. We passed various herds of Jersey cows pasturing on the early oats and many teams were at work in the fields making preparations for the crops of the year. We forthwith forgot taxis, snowstorms, and even the famous Chicago "lake breeze."

War Helps Southern Agriculture.

The greatest impetus was given to diversified agriculture in the South by the effect of the European war on the price of the one southern farm crop—cotton. For years and years the entire commercial and agricultural business of that section had been based upon the production of that one crop. It has never been a safe and sure source of income—always finding ready sale and always being a safe basis for credit at the banks. But after the great war opened cotton dropped in price to six, five and even four cents per pound, and considering the fact that great sums had already been borrowed on the crop and that more money was necessary with which to buy foods and other necessities from the North, the South faced a problem that seemed almost impossible of solution. For years it had been the practice of the southerners to take their "cotton money" and buy all their necessities and luxuries from the north—very few even having garden patches by which grocery bills might be reduced. The people were simply cotton poor at the close of 1914 and an awakening came to them through the situation that then faced them.

We Heard the Southern Cry.

The cry went up, "The South must feed herself." It was heard all over the country.

We heard it in the North, but many felt that after the cotton market recovered from the depression incident to the war in Europe that the South would again fall into the same rut which she had followed for so many, many years. But Providence took a hand just there A severe gulf storm swept north across the Central South from the Gulf of Mexico and carried with it the dreaded boll weevil. The result was that successful cotton production was placed in permanent jeopardy—that is, cotton could still be raised, but the chance of failure was greatly increased through the advent of this dreaded and dreadful little insect. The solution of the problem was that the cotton must be raised, but raised in equal amounts with previos years on fewer acres. In other words the soil must be built up by a systematic order of crop rotation and the addition of that most economical and satisfactory of all ferilizers—namely, ordinary barnyard manure—so that when the boll weevil got in his dreaded work in the cotton fields there was still enough left from the acres put to other uses to feed and clothe those who are depeident upon the land for their existence—and that meant virtually everyone.

Weevil a Blessing in Disguise.

As a concrete example of how the whole thing worked out, let us cite the facts incident to the change in Covington county, Alabama. In 1914 there were produced by that county 35,000 bales of cotton, while in 1915 the crop fell, through the activity of the boll weevil, to about 3,500 bales, or a decrease of 1,000 per cent. The 1914 crop had to be sold at less than half of the normal price and the short 1915 crop could not begin to counteract the deficit. Coordinate with these cotton conditions, in 1914 over two hundred carloads of corn were shipped into the county, while following the 1915 season over fifty carloads have been shipped out, or an increase of production in corn alone of nearly 500 per cent. And gardens are now common nearly every home having its little cultivated patch, furnishing its portion of the table food, thus reducing not only the cost of living, but also the indebtedness of the individual.

The Result Was Livestock

And what of it all?

With twelve months of pasture each year and with much land suitable for pasturing purposes, the logical and consistent turn for the diversification movement to take was toward livestock. There are several crops possible of production in the Central South that cannot be successfully grown further north. Most prominent of these are velvet beans, a very nutritious feed costing but little to grow, and peanuts, a splendid fattening feed, cheap to grow and feed in the field, but rather expensive to harvest, owing to their tendency to spoil easily. Pastures of blue grass, Bermuda grass and Johnson grass, as well as of burr and other clovers, are easy to establish. Corn of excellent quality can be grown also, making, with the various kinds of hay which are raised a variety of foodstuffs for livestock which, with the full year of pasture and mild weather, makes possible the cheap production of almost any kind of livestock when handled intelligently with good business judgment.

But the devastations of the boll weevil and the low price on cotton during the past two years has made imperative the handling of that stock which would bring quickest returns on the investment.

Where The Hog Came In.

The answer is hogs. And the entire Central South is today talking thinking—and buying—hogs. And in order to receive largest returns on investments made, they are buying good hogs of all breeds and are conservative buyers of pure-breds.

Future For Hogs in South.

What of the future in the hog business there? Will it last?

Skepticism of the permanency of the business is often heard The change from a procedure long established and much beloved to one very new and very different has made many wonder whether or not, when the cotton situation has been modified by experience and thought, the South would return to the old, one-idea, method.

We do not believe that they will. In the first place, the lesson was a bitter one. The hardship caused by the limited cotton market in 1914 will not soon be forgotten. The banks and wholesale merchants who have ever handled the credits of the South will long have the evidence of the extravagance of the one-crop method staring them in the face from the books of the past two years. And realizing that the outstanding debt which they have cannot be paid by the boll weevil-cotton combination, they have set themselves about the task of furnishing to their customers means of livelihood which make possible the payment of those debts.

They have furnished seeds and instruction for the raising of the many crops possible of production, and when produced they have equipped themselves to handle the surplus of the crops. Hitherto the practice was to sell to the farmers for their cotton money the necessities of life. Now they are buying from the farmer and selling away from home. They are establishing packing houses to furnish a close local market for their stock. The newest of these is the one about to be opened at Andalusia, Ala. This is a strictly high-class, modern, sanitary building costing $125,000, with a daily capacity of 500 hogs and 40 cattle. The packing house at Moultrie, Ga., opened a year ago, has, during the past few months, doubled its daily capacity.

County agricultural agents are becoming more and more numerous, and the effect of their teachings is bound to be far-reaching, for they have the almost unanimous support of their constituents. In short, it seems highly improbable that the cotton crop can be made to "come back" to the place where it was a decade ago, but even if it should, this new and more satisfying and more profitable method of utilizing the agricultural resources of that section will by that time be so firmly established that cotton will be merely a part of the farming procedure and will not again gain the dominating position it once held.

We Must Aid Southerners.

There are many phases of the future of the southern hog development in which there are problems to be solved and lessons to be learned, but it is for breeders and farmersh troughout the hog belt to aid in the development of that portion of the United States which is so well adapted by nature to become a great livestock producing section.

The Country Woman's Corner of this paper is for country women and women in the small towns who want to make some money out of the garden, the field and orchard, and the poultry. The Corner is run by a country woman and her problems and successes are the same as many hundreds of her sisters who read this farm paper. If you are making a success or have overcome difficulties, or can give any suggestions that will help mothers in the home or on the farm, why please send them along. Write Country Woman's Corner, Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala.

Most of the chicken articles published these days start off by telling how much to invest in a fine breed chicken, but I'm going to vary the program as I know most farmer-women have no cash to invest in any such enterprise, and yet are eager and anxious to know how to improve and increase on the supply already at hand to turn every nickel into dollars.

To begin at the beginning, eggs must come first, so have you whitewashed those coops as I suggested last issue? If not, get at it at once, and put kerosene in the whitewash to keep out mites. Do you know what mites are and what they do They are chicken bed bugs that lay in wait all day in cracks and crevices and as soon as your chickens are comfortably settled on their perches for the night they swarm out, and with thousands of them sucking the blood from one chicken, it is small wonder that chicken droops and dies and we can see or guess no cause for it.

Getting Rid of Them

If you have these mites have everything movable taken from the coop and sprayed or mopped with kerosene and crude carbolic acid, and if your coop is a close one burn sulphur in it, keeping it tightly closed, but let it air out before chickens go to roost.

Oil all the walls and nests with the above mixture and fill the nests with new clean straw.

Don't wait for the mites to run off with your coop again before cleaning it, but clean it like this every week or two for they are easier to prevent than to get rid of.

If your fowls have lice hold them by their feet, head down, and sift lime or dalmation powder, which is very cheap, into the feathers.

Dirty or uncomfortable chickens will not produce eggs as these pests draw out their nourishment through the blood as fast as the hen consumes it and only clean, healthy hens will yield you eggs if you give them clean quarters and plenty of food, especially drink.

What Are Your Eggs Worth.

Are you selling your eggs for eight, ten or twelve cents to the wagon peddlers? Why throw them away when your time, patience and hard work have all been spent on the raising of the producers. Day old chicks sell for ten cents apiece, thus a dozen eggs hatched are worth one dollar and twenty cents and you sell them for less than a cent apiece. Why sell them in the spring for the eight cents a dozen they brought this year when you can keep them until Thanksgiving and from then until Christmas get thirty-five cents for them! Does the difference between eight and thirty-five appeal to you? If so try this way of preserving your eggs for winter sales:

1 water bucket of water.
2 pints fresh lacked lime.
1 pint common salt.
Mix thoroughly.

This Will Keep Them.

Fill a barrel half full of this liquid, measuring it in the exact proportions and put the eggs down in it. Eggs have kept two years under this test, so suppose you try it and have a nice little Christmas nest egg to spend as you choose. This is worth a trial even if you only do so on a small scale this year to see what is in it, and maybe next year coin money.

Now about those setting hens; have you many?

Hens On Strike.

The hens seem to have caught the war spirit this season and refuse to set. I've only had six out of my flock to show any motherly desires and I'm working them over time, so as soon as they hatch one set of fifteen biddies I slip fifteen more eggs right under them and take all the little chicks away and they set merrily on, thus each hen hatches thirty biddies instead of fifteen and my six hens bring me one hundred and eighty chickens instead of ninety, which difference is considerable.

The "Babies."

I put the babies I adopt into a soap box on an old rug and cover them each night with a cloth until they are a week old, then I put them out in a little run, six by six feet, made of four foot-wide boards, with a shelter at one end made by placing another board across the run, having a hole cut in it large enough for them to go in and out, which they have to be taught to do the first few nights. I never feed them the first three days anything but clean sand and clear cool water, both of which clean out their systems, get them in running order and prevent bowel troubles. Out of fifty hatched in the past few weeks I have lost but one through sickness, and two by accident.

Setting Hens.

I set all of my hens by themselves in small coops such as are usually made for a hen with biddies, so no chickens can disturb her by laying to her nor does she miss her food as I feed all setting hens three times a day, and have never yet had one to leave her nest, and when she comes off with her little brood she is already familiar with her little bungalow, though I slide it along to a fresh spot for them to pick and scratch and each day drop some green food into the brooder for the "orphans," as greens are essential to their growth. If you can mix their food with milk instead of water and give them milk to drink (though they must have plenty of water) it will give them a boosting start in life.

Get Rid of Poor Ones.

Keep an eye on your chickens and those that do not lay, sell or eat as they kill profits. I have heard people say they got so tired of meat (pork) before winter was over, so why not vary the menu with chicken cooked in any one of a dozen ways? When you start frying your chickens kill the roosters first, still if you raise an especially nice looking rooster of good carriage and size it is a good idea to kill off an older one when this is grown old enough to fill his place, though one of the world's most noted chicken fanciers says if you want eggs to hatch pullets breed your hens to old roosters.

Don't believe in the old adage of long eggs hatching roosters, for not long ago a lady selected fifteen beautiful round eggs to be sure and hatch all pullets and behold when that brood "grew up" she had eleven roosters among them.

Hens To Buy.

If you buy up a few hens from a neighbor or wagon, buy those that are broad across the fluff, and heavy built if possible as their offspring being like them will grow up rapidly to a selling size which of course counts in the profits. An easy way to learn what eggs are worth to you is to keep a little monthly memorandum, put down each day the eggs you gather, set, hatch, and sell and at the end of each month make a record like this:

JUNE—
Eggs laid	00
Eggs set	00
Eggs hatched	00
Eggs sold	00

Value your eggs set at the market price when you set them and the chickens hatched at ten cents each, put down price given you for eggs you sold and see how the egg business counts up in a few months.

Why Not Write Me?

Training The Child to Work For The Lord

By Rev. W. B. Crumpton, Montgomery, Ala.

Child training is being studied never as before. Experts on child welfare are revealing secrets about children that the wisest parents never knew. The ingenuity of men and women is being taxed to the utmost to discover the best methods of making most of the child life. Children are being trained along every line that makes for usefulness.

Girls and boys are organized into tomato clubs and corn clubs; canning clubs and pig clubs. Only the narrowest and smallest men cry out against thee "littleness" of it. It is not too little for your great old Uncle Sam to reach down his fatherly hand to help the States in the movement.

While the work eis on, for material improvement among all classes, reaching down to the smallest child, shall parents in a country called a Christian land be indifferent about habit-forming training alonge unslfish lines—Christian lines

Is it to be forever true that: "The children of this world, in their generation, are wiser than the children of light?"

Way To Do It.

Why not organize our girls into tomato clubs and canning clubs; our boys into pig clubs and corn clubs, to raise money for religious purposes? Why not, in country and city, teach the children that God has claims upon their money, their time, their service, and teach them to do the thing? In His last great command, He didn't say: "Teach the baptized my commandmens," but "teach them to observe (do) whatsoever I have commanded."

Habit Is The Thing.

Do not have in mind the amount of money that will flow into the Lord's treasury from the children, though that would be a considerable sum, but think of the habit-forming training that will tell in the years to come.

The miser, when he teaches his child to save his pennies, to wear mean clothes and live on scraps, doesn't have in mind immediate results; but he knows the habit to save will grip the child and in after life he will amass wealth.

Said a dying Shylock: "My sons make money; make it honestly if you can, but make money" Make money, my boy, or my girl, by raising pigs and corn, or tomatoes or by canning fruit or vegetables; is not a bad thing to teach one's children; but if that is all, only the natural selfishness of their natures has been appealed to.

The Command To Give.

God's claim, humanity's claim, if you wish to call it, has been left out. The gospel of money has been lost sight of because the people do not like it. It runs counter to their selfish natures.

Hear it: "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God; for it is He that givth thee power to get wealth." He commands us to "Give" and adds the promise: "and it shall be given unto you: good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." "Freely ye have received, freely give"; "it is more blessed to give than to receive." When prosperity comes upon you and you have abundance: "Then beware lest thou forget the Lord." Finnally He announces: "God loves a cheerful giver."

We Spend on Ourselves.

When we see how the great mass of Christians lavish their wealth on themselves and the insignificant sums they are giving to God and humanity it ought to shame us and all the more, when we see how His cause is suffering for money, and still, all the more, when we see how frequently money horded by parents proves the ruin of their children. As wealth increases the luxury-loving habit gets possession, personal needs grow and God is yet more left out of the count.

The Remedy.

Let every denomination of Christians get a man or woman in each State to undertake the task of organizing the children and young people for doing things for religious purposes, just as the State and nation are organizing them for useful, money-making ends. With the cooperation of preachers, teachers and parents the effects on contributions for religious purposes will be seen in a few years. More than that, the effects on the people, their changed attitude towards God, one another and the world, will be seen also.

Of course, if parenss want their children to live selfish lives, care nothing for the cause of God and humanity, they will withhold cooperation in such an enterprise. But the path of greatness in the mind of God and good men, lies here.

One Farmer Gives Real Credit to Demonstration Agent

Perhaps I should write you a description of my waterworks. But I feel the government is doing so much for us farmers that we should at least acknowledge some of these favors.

The farmers have been complaining that our government has been favoring big interests and neglecting farmers. But some favors are coming our way now. The favor that is doing us the most good now is our demonstration agent, W. D. Barton. He is a rapid worker and can inoculate hogs faster than I can take the temperature, and never wants to quit until the job is finished.

Ten months ago I had a few hogs to be found dead. I was ready to order serum when Barton appeared. He looked my hogs over and said he saw no symptoms of cholera and advis me to save my money. I took his advice and afterwards took a bunch of young mules out of my hog pasture, then hogs quit dying.

My neighbor, T. M. Smith, had a lot of hogs that were dying. He was scared to death it was cholera. He had Barton to visit his hogs. I was interested enough to meet the doctor in the pasture. Barton advised Mr. Smith to put his hogs where they could get water to drink. The result was no more dead hogs.

While this represents but two days' work of Mr. Barton, and he does such jobs every day, one day's work often saves or makes a farmer several hundred dollars.

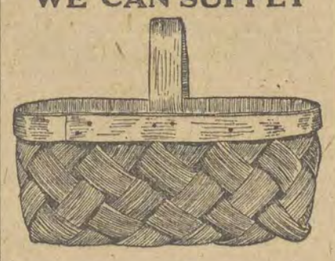
Fortunate is the county that has a real live couity demonstrator. Autauga is one of the fortunate counties. While Mr. Barton has been with us but two years he has worked up the tick eradication movement from its lowest ebb, and we will soon be free of ticks. This alone is worth thousands of dollars to our county.

He will soon have burr clover, crimson clover, lespedeza and vetch growing all over the county. He seems to know what to work at that will succeed. He was a live stock man in a dead stock county, and is making a live stock county here very fast. We do not give him any credit for what he does. He is only a tool in the hands of the government, sent here to work for the farmers benefit. Besides him the government sends us Dr. Ensly. Dr. Wilson, also a man to have our vats filled and tested and cattle dipped.

While I do not get in the sun to write this letter, still the sunlight enters the windows, and furnishes a soft sufficient light. Thus many do not attend Auburn. But the light from Auburn illuminates every farm, every farm paper. With sun light we see through the air. With Auburn's light we see the air. With sun light we see the surface of the earth. With Auburn's light we see into the earth.

True the many may not have time to study out Auburn's literature, but some man will grasp each idea and carry it to perfection. These ideas will in time be put in operation by the many. It may take a little time but all will learn when they have object lessons thrust upon them.

Our agricultural Colleges are doing us a great service. All are reaping the benefit. Those who will not adopt the colleges teaching keep one eye on these experiments and one eye on their own way, and when they see the college's way is the best they switch over unconsciously and never give the college any credit at all.



Happy is the state that has a real live agricultural college. Alabama has a real live agricultural college at Auburn. We generally attend the summer schools in August and meet the professors and know every one to be a real live wife. This college is an endowment that the State has made to the farmers. And while all boys can not attend still the experiments tested out can be read in every home and the results stand as object lessons on every roadside.

Suppose the State money was used to experiment to ascertain the cheapest process to manufacture cloth. And after finding the secret send demonstrators into the factories to explain the mode? We would call this favoritism. Yet this is what the government is doing for the farmers. Agriculture is in its infancy, and it is the business of the government to help infant industries. More meat, bread and cotton means cheaper meat, bread and clothes.

Solomon was called the wisest man because he prayed for wisdom. Agricultural knowledge is the most priceless asset to a farmer. The State is trying to give us this knowledge. Many a boy will not take an education his father is so anxious for him to have to his father's grief. It grieves the State that so many of her sons trample this pearl of great price under their feet and turn and rend her.

Little Colonel Laughter

Little Coloniel Laughter
Leads the vanguards of green youth
Beneath the flying banners
Of the blessed wars of truth;
His sword is lovely sunshine,
And the music of his drums
Across the garden closes
In a rippling echo comes!

Little Colonel Laughter
Wears a uniform of white,
With epaulets of silver
And a smile that leads to light;
Beyond him wheel the columns
Of the imagery of child;
And on the world is dancing
And the heart of love is wild!

Little Colonel Laughter,
Let me be a soldier, too,
And fight the tender shadows
On their velvet wings of blue;
Enlist me for the crusade,
And I'll follow and obey,
Forever and forever,
Yes, forever and a day!

Farmer Finds The Way In God's Own Country

By W. W. Eyster

I have looked over the entire State of Alabama and have often had a hard time to make up my mind as to which territory the Lord really favored. But I had less trouble in deciding that here at last I had found the long lost home of our first parents picked up bodily and dropped down in the Tennessee Valley.

It is not only a paradise to look upon, but the soil produces most anything whether man assists or no. It looks productive and is productive. Nature has bestowed her richest blessings in the way of scenery, aside from the question of productiveness. A man never feels so sore with himself till he sees this land and finds himself too poor to settle here. Yet it does not take a rich man to own an independent farm in this section.

Nature is your partner and a farmer with just a limited amount of good sense and cents can more than make good; he can live, and believe me, this is living here too.

As an example of what can be done with even the sorriest worn out, neglected, abused, run down, abandoned, cotton plantation for a hundred years with intelligent farming, you only have to take a trip out to Jim Gambill's place, about five miles out on the pike from Sheffield in Colbert county, Alabama, to see a definite illustration of how the right kind of farming pays.

Oak Grove Farm.

J. B. Gambill's place has been rightly named Oak Grove after the magnificent grove of oaks in the foreground of this old Colonial home. Here was opportunity enough to satisfy the most ardent student of soil culture. Here Mr. Gambill found about 400 acres upon which nothing but cotton had been raised for a hundred years.

Gradually but surely the life of the soil had been sapped by the one-crop method, and it would long ago have proved unprofitable had not the soil possessed wonderfully productive powers. Situated nearly a mile from the Tennessee river, it lies in a beautiful oval with the house at the highest point in the center. Here the old master of former days could lie in the huge gable windows in the roof of the house and watch the darkies as they labored in the cotton fields on either side.

Started Right.

The first thing that suggested itself to Mr. Gambill to do with a place like this was to fence it so he could put on the real fertility builders—stock. And he was too shrewd a farmer to try anything but good stock. He attended a meeting at Sheffield where the virtues of the Shorthorn were extolled and it was advocated that the farmers try them out in Colbert county. So he got on the train and went to Johnson county, Missouri, home of thoroughbred Shorthorns, and picked out a good herd to make a good start. He now breeds Shorthorns altogether, and in the thirteen months he has had this place, he as sold off 18 bulls alone at an average of $180 apiece. He ad as high as eighty head of cattle at one time. He finds it difficult to keep enough for his own needs, the demand for pure-zred cattle is growing so fast, in the Tennessee Valley.

With the fences in and the cattle located, he put down an 83-foot well and a gasoline pump to provide an ample supply of good fresh water, the first requisite in raising stock. Next, he built a big, commodious barn that will hold 75 tons of hay, in which to feed during the winter.

Pasture Plots.

Then he began a systematic campaign for pasture, studying every inch of the farm so as to determine each plot's particular needs and what crops to put in to bring back its fertility, to stop the washes, to clear the thickets, to build up the barren knolls. So one field is found in peas, one in soy beans followed by crimson clover, another in Japanese clover, another in red clover, another in Bermuda, and still others in orchard grass, crab grass, rye or wheat. By systematic rotation and turning under, he obtains a good stand in all plots.

Hogs of Course.

While he is particularly interested in Shorthorns, he has not lost sight of the usefulness and profitableness of pure-bred hogs. He has some fine specimens of both Poland Chinas and Duroc Jerseys. He has his own dipping vat on his place, for Colbert county has not been freed of ticks as yet.

Goats Did It.

That a real farmer can make money out of most anything on the farm while a poor one would spend money obtaining the same results is proven by one of Mr. Gambill's little stunts. He found his fields literally covered with sassafras bushes and cockleburs. To get rid of the latter requires cutting before they go to seed for at least three years, and the tedious task of cutting the former is too well known to dwell upon. Mr. Gambill invested in $40 worth of goats. They absolutely solved the sassafras and cocklebur proposition and in one year he has an increase to 53 head, which figuring at $3 per head will mean about $150 profit in one year on the goats alone, which have cost him not one penny to feed. He is now free of sassafras and cockleburs.

Mr. Gambill has demonstrated that money can be made out of native cattle if you put pure blood in them to build on. His scrub and grade cattle purchased in Alabama and bred to his pure-bred Shorthorn bulls bring very fine calves. By continuing this process, the native stock soon lose their identity altogether.

What a Difference.

As a concrete example of the unprofitableness of trying to raise scrub stock—in his purchases were two yearling calves exactly the same age as two of his pure-bred Shorthorns. The scrubs were as poor as race horses, but he thought if given some of his good pasture and fed up in winter they ought to yield a profitable increase. Not so. They weighed about 225 when he bought them and will weigh about 250 or 275 now at two years of age. His two Shorthorns about the same age weigh 1,100 to 1,150 pounds apiece. One particularly fine heifer, 26 months old, a model Shorthorn, weighs about 1,250 pounds. Several days ago one of his heifers dropped a fine calf, and this same calf will in a year or eighteen months from now bring him $150 or $250.

What Mr. Gambill is doing with pure-bred stock, anyone can do. It certainly does not pay to raise scrubs.

Ditch or Tile? Just What Drainage Does For Your Land

Tile drainage has been carried on for more than two hundred years, and like many other lines, had a very crude beginning.

Under-ground drainage was first accomplished by laying poles or logs, later small tile being used. The benefits were so apparent, even with these imperfect means, that under-drainage was recognized as a necessity. Early drainage was carried on only in some low swampy place. Today, systems are laid out for high land as well as low, and with excellent results.

This enlarged scope of drainage has been brought about by recognition of the fact that "better drainage means bigger crops," and this need not be accepted without proof, for actual results on farms in our own section have shown increases in yields that in every case was a handsome return on the investment.

Needed Most in Spring

When land is under-drained the soil is made porous and open and holds in suspension water available for plant life, the excess draining off. The soil being made porous, the roots of the plant can penetrate deeper, and thus crops start a healthy growth as soon as planted. The time when the best drainage is needed is in the spring, when we have heavy rainfall. It is just as unhealthy for a plant to stand with its feet in the water as for a human to do so. Thus in the early part of the season when the root system is developing the water level should be lowered so they can go deeper and farther in search of food.

Makes Land Warmer

Water is more difficult to heat than is the solid matter of the soil. It is stated by authorities that tile drainage raises the temperature of soil as much as 3 degrees. This is in effect the same as transporting your land 150 miles south, and the great advantage to be gained by this in the early spring is obvious. This is especially true now when we are face to face with the boll weevil. Two weeks earlier planting, as can be obtained on tiled land, will go a long way towards getting the crop matured before the weevil destroys it.

The trouble and expense of replanting is almost entirely eliminated on land that is tiled, for the reason that a hard rain cannot wash away the seed, and the land along with them, but soaks through the soil depositing the fertilizer there, where it is needed.

Which System

Farm land must be drained, either with open ditches or by underground drainage. The cost, up-keep and returns of both should be carefully considered and then the system employed which pays better on the investment. To determine this the following points should enter into the calculation:

The cost of digging a pitch?

The cost of keeping it open, each year

The cost of the tile

The planting area lost by open ditches?

The value of crops grown on this area?

Cost About Same.

The cost of digging the ditch will be practically the same for a tile system as for open ditches. The tile ditches require more accurate grading, but being narrow, not so much dirt has to be removed as for an open ditch, so as stated, the cost of one will about equal the other.

No Ditch Cleaning.

It is necessary to clean ditches of weeds, briars and loose dirt and a conservative average estimate of this expense is one cent a yard annually. The cost of four inch tile can be figured at $20 per thousand feet, including freight or hauling, which is six cents a yard. Being necessary to dig the ditch with either system, if the tile had been put in at first, it would have been paid for in six years with the money saved from keeping the ditch cleaned out. Tile properly put in needs no further attention beyond merely keeping the outlet open.

Land Lost by Ditching.

The planting area lost because of open ditches will vary according to whether the rows are parallel or at right angles to the ditch, but a general width of fifteen feet is about correct. Multiply this width by the length of open ditches. The acreage lost is surprising. The value of crops raised on this acreage will more than take care of the interest on money invested in the tile and the increase in yield on the whole body of land will be clear gain.

The cost of tile draining land varies according to the character of land cost of labor and cost of tile. A system properly installed is a permanent investment requiring no upkeep and the increase in yield will pay for it in a very few years, after which this is a clear profit running on for an indefinite time.

Tile to Get Out of Debt.

One authority has stated, "We cannot afford not to drain land if we have land that needs it. Shall we wait until we get out of debt to tile it, or shall we tile it in order to get out of debt? The latter case as a rule?"

Letter From Wisconsin, Our Most Progressive State

Wyatt Rushton, Alabama Man, Tells of Great Progress There in Immigration and Farmers' Co-operative Societies

Lands are going fast up there. It is cut-over timber land much like that in Alabama's long-leaf or coast pine belts and apparently no better in soil quality; but it is going like "hot-cakes." Every little town along the railroad has its "landoffice." The University college of agriculture is doing its part in inducing settlers to locate in these northern counties. The smaller cities are paved and electrically lighted in anticipation of a second properity to come from agriculture when the timber is all cut off And apparently there is no lack of settlers.

Yet as I went along the railway in the middle of April the farmers were just turning over the soil for the first spring plowing. All along on the hillsides and deep down in the gullies and ravines and under the trees there were still great patches of snow. Two or three weeks previously, as I have occasion to know most of the ground was still frozen. The summer crop was not seeded before the first of May. And there won't be more than one yield of that.

Why?

Now why, you may ask, are settlers rushing onto these lands in a barren, still largely undrained country, purchasing them probably at good prices (considering the character of the soil and the nearnes s to markets) paying heavy taxes, cultivating them six months in the year and never giving a thought to going South and taking up unoccupied lands at a cheaper price and in a milder climate there?

For one thing, these lands in Wisconsin are extensively advertised. The many "land-offices" show that. Every where there is a "boom" spirit on Another, which I mentioned in a previous letter, November 10, is the prevalent diversification. The product of the individual farm is determined by the soil of which it is composed or the nearness to markets. Every kind of soil is not expected to raise the same product and when one product becomes unprofitable it is but natural to turn to some other to which the soil is adapted. Since the '70's there has been no "one-crop system."

A third item, of course, is the absence of the tenant system. This of course, is not a necessary element of a Southern pine-belt farm. But historically this has been the cause of the failure of much of the immigration to turn South.

People Get Returns.

Good government and education are other items the balue o f which it is impossible to suppose that the settler on Wisconsin lands is ignorant. Much money may have been wasted in Wisconsin both in maintaining the University and in supporting the activities of the state government. But whatever the cost there has been a great deal returned to the people of the state. The dweller in the farthest country districts is assured of literature, correspondence courses and even personal advice from the University if he only but lives on a mail route. No further than his county seat at least there is a personal representative of the University at all times and at stated intervals institute workers, lyceum lecturers, and popular educators galore.

The state health board armed with full powers, takes care that he is not afflicted with typhoid or malaria. The Railroad Commission one of the first of the country, sees that he is not discriminated against on freight rates or telephone tolls or electric power.

Cooperative Creameries.

More than anything else, however, I believe that he realizes that the prosperity which awaits him will come largely from the benefits of the agricultural cooperation already so successful in the more settled parts of the state. Returning to Madison across the southern half of Wisconsin, the word "cooperative creamery" met my eye almost as frequently as did "land office" in the north. As is evidenced by the recent great "milk strike" in Chicago as the result of which the return to producers was increased 20 cents on the hundred pounds, the farmers of the upper Mississippi valley insist on "getting together."

"Farmers have rapidly been tending toward organization during the last 40 years," says my gazetteer," and their position in this respect is stronger, taking the country as a whole, than it has ever been before. The many attempts, both successful and otherwise, have all worked toward learning the needs and possibilites of farmer's clubs."

At present the states of the upper Mississippi valley are honey-combed with farmer's mutual insurance companies. Illinois has 230, Iowa 176, Minnesota 150 and Wisconsin 203."

"Cooperative creameries have taken an important place among the rural organizations. Illinois has 62, Indiana 67, Iowa 308, Michigan 105, Minnesota 632 and Wisconsin 355."

Cooperative Associations

"Along with the development of creameries has come the growth of cooperative cheese factories and in this respect, Wisconsin is far in the lead. She has 247."

"In addition, there has been an exceedingly rapid growth of local associations for cow testing, for the ownership of pure bred sires, for purchasing fertilizers, seeds, feeding stuff and general merchandise, To attempt to give a list of them would be out of the question since many of them have no official connection and are so local in character as to be almost unknown."

Outside of cremeries, cheese factories, and insurance, a bulletin of the experiment station here gives the number of livestock shipping organizations in Wascinsin as 35, the fruit exchanges as five, the grain elevators as forty and the telephone systems as 609, all cooperatively owned. "In all," says the bulletin, "there are over 1,500 farmers' companies in Wisconsin.

Real Cooperation.

"The success of cooperation" continues the pamphlet "depends upon several factors.

A sufficient amount of business is essential. The co-operators should live near enoug htogether to have a community interest and personal acquaintance. The business transacted should be simple in nature, free from any great degree of speculation and of vital importance or convenience to the co-operators. Loyalty to the organization and an intelligent spirit of co-operation are fundamental. Leadership and harmony are essential and minor differences among cooperators must be subordinated to the common good.

Active Farmers Only.

"The membership of the company should consist of active farmers; at least they should be in control. Outsiders, if admitted as they sometimes are to furnish capital, should not be allowed to influence the business policy toward large dividends on the investment. The one-man-one-vote principle will keep the organization democratic. Mischief-makers and "drones" should be kept out but in no wise should a cooperative society become a "closed shop." A trust among farmers is as illegal as among other people.

"A federation of cooperative societies is of great benefit to local units. The largest and best known instance of the kind is the California Fruit Exchange. Attempts in federation along other lines are being made but, as yet, with rather indifferent success."

Surely the states of the lower Mississippi and along the Gulf can learn a great deal from the experience of these states at the headwaters.

Inoculated Legumes To Build Up Soil

Legume plants, as you may already know, have the valuable property of being able to gather and store up in the soil vast quaintities of atmospheric nitrogen, for the benefit of their own growth and of other succeedings crops.

Nitrogen is an element of plant food that is necessary to every form of plant life, but it is also the most expensive element (per unit) contained in a complete fertilizer. The value of nitrogen in a commercial form is about twenty cents per pound, or $400 per ton.

Four-fifths of all the atmosphere is nitrogen, and the nodule-forming bacteria on the roots of legume plants are the agency responsible for the gathering and storing of this atmospheric nitrogen in the soil. The composition of the nodules formed on the roots of the legume plants is eight per cent. nitrogen and this nitrogen becomes immediately available as plant food. This explains why legume plants make the soil more fertile than it was before their growth.

Many progressive farmers throughout the country have reduced their fertilizer bills fully fifty per cent. by growing inoculated legumes, and we strongly urge that this method be followed, rather than the old, expensive, soil-robbing system that is, unfortunately, all too common. Soil building is absolutely essential to the maintenance of soil fertility, and the sooner the fertilizing value of legumes becomes generally understood, the sooner shall we find better agricultural conditions. Inoculation will enable farmers to grow legumes in any sweet, well-drained soil—regardless of its type. If you would increase the fertility of your soil, by the aid of valuable hay and pasture crops, "grow inoculated legumes."

SENATOR HARDING SOUNDS KEYNOTE

Address to G. O. P. Convention by Temporary Chairman.

EARNEST PLEA FOR HARMONY

National Defense, Protective Tariff, Square Deal for Business and Straight Americanism Set Forth as Country's Needs.

Chicago, June 7.—Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio as temporary chairman of the Republican national convention today sounded the keynote of the party's campaign. His address was in part as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention: It is good to greet this representative body of that American Republicanism on which are centered the high hopes of the republic. I can believe—nay, I know—that a vast majority of the people of our United States is expecting the party sponsors here assembled to write anew the sacred covenant of Republicanism, and reconsecrate the party to the nation's service and the people's advancement. That same majority expects you to select a standard-bearer who shall not only typify our expression of faith, but shall so enlist the confidence and trust of our American citizenship that the work of this convention will be confirmed overwhelmingly at the ballot-box next November.

The country, wearied afresh by a disappointing and distressing Democratic administration, is calling for Republican relief, and there is every inspiration, every encouragement, every confidence that the light of Republican conscience, set aflame in this convention, will illumine the way to the country's restoration.

We did not do very well in making for harmony the last time we met. The country has regretted, let us forget—and make amends to our country. We did not divide over fundamental principles, we did not disagree over a national policy. We split over methods of party procedure and preferred personalities. Let us forget the differences, and find new inspiration and new compensation in an united endeavor to restore the country.

The essential principles of Republicanism are unchanged and unchanging; the lofty intent, the indestructible soul and the undying spirit of Republicanism are as dominant today as in the destined beginning 60 years ago, or at any time during the intervening years, and they are emphasized today by the proof recorded to Republican credit in the matchless chapters of American progress.

The World at War.

Much of the discussion of the hour is hinged upon a world at war. We need not wonder thereat, because the enormity of the conflict and the influences of its upheaval have set mankind in upheaval. The traditions of civilization have been broken and international laws have been ignored. There is a tidal wave of distress and disaster, there are violent emotions and magnified fears. There are the extremes of incalculable sacrifices and measureless new fortunes—not all American. There are new wonders and new hindrances in commerce, changed balances of trade, new marvels in finance and utterly changed economic conditions. These have attended embarrassments in our foreign relations as difficult as those which the individual citizen experiences whose every neighbor is involved in deadly quarrel. Everything is abnormal except the depleted condition of the federal treasury, which is characteristic of Democratic control, and the facility of the administration in writing varied notes without effective notice.

Amid these conditions has stood this unarmed giant, typifying the American republic, neutral and sane, to whom the neutral nations have turned for leadership. Our national unselfishness had been proven, our devotion to humanity had been established, our committal to international justice had long been proclaimed. The world had previously heard the voice of American fearlessness, and all the conditions single us out for leadership among the neutral powers, but the administration at Washington spoke with more rhetoric than resolution, and we came to realize what the warring powers soon came to know, that the official American voice lacked the volume of determined expression that once demanded international heed, and we lacked the strength of confidence in our own defenses.

For National Defense.

Perhaps it is a reminder more than a discovery, but there has come to us a conviction that this great nation, rich in resources and strong in patriotic manhood, has been negligent concerning its own defense. We have dwelt in fancied rather than real security. Pride mingles with regret in this, because it suggests the mind of a nation so free from intended offense that there was no cultivated thought of needed defense. Our righteousness of purpose is portrayed in our trust in unarmed safety. But there is a warning in bleeding Europe, and there is a call today for prudent, patriotic and ample national defense. There is no mistaking the sentiment. We are not thinking of the hysterical, we need not be moved by a preparedness which is partisan in conception. We need not believe in a defense propaganda inspired by those who aim to wax fat in the production of arms and munitions, because there is none. I deplore the teaching that an anxiety about our national defense is inspired by greed. We rejoice in free speech and free press and untrammeled opinion, but patriotism is illy promoted by the imputation of false motives, whether aimed at those who believe in defense or those who doubt its wisdom. Such a teaching rends the concord of citizenship, which may develop a worse peril from within than from any enemy without.

Though we do not pretend to be exclusive in our devotion, we Republicans believe, sincerely and soberly, in adequate national defense. We have always believed in an ample navy, as invincible in modern might as John Paul Jones builded in our freedom's earliest fight. We have in mind a protected commerce on the waters, and a seacoast secure in strong naval defense. We were building to high rank among naval powers when the Democratic party interrupted, and we subscribe to a stronger committal now, because of a new realization of the envy which our wealth and our commerce invite, and a new appreciation of our commanding place in the affairs of the world. I shall not say that it is ours to have the greatest navy in the world, but noting the elimination of distance and the passing of our onetime isolation, we ought to have a navy that fears none in the world, and can say any time and anywhere: These are American rights and must be respected.

No Curse of Militarism.

Let no one apprehend the curse of militarism in this fair land. We declare unalterably against it. Our free citizenship, walking confidently, absorbed in the triumphs of peace, would tolerate no such blight on American institutions. There is no surrender of cherished ideals. With that yearning for peace which has marked our continued development, with that same committal to justice which has given us front rank in the onward march of civilization, with that rare unselfishness which led us to unsheath the sword for humanity's sake and put all territorial aggrandizement aside, with that belief in the square deal, individual, national and international, which is the foundation of American faith, we mean to go on, an exemplar of peace to all the nations, an arbiter of justice to all the world, a promoter of righteousness to all the people of the earth.

At the same time we have more to do than to chart a national course through the waters surging with the turbulence of war; our inspiring course is on the highway of peace. Our armed defense must ever be linked with our industrial self-reliance, and the nation worth dying for must first be worth living for. Out of nature's prodigality we have incalculable resources and limitless possibilities, and there is need only for the unhindered application of man's genius and industry to make us as independent industrially as we are free politically. Ample defense rests on industrial freedom and self-reliance as well as patriotic sacrifice, and industrial preparedness gives that assurance of material good fortune in peace on which must be founded all our higher aspirations.

The Protective Policy.

Subsistence is the first requisite of existence, and we have the higher American standard of living because of the Republican protective policy which makes of Americans the best-paid workmen in all the world. Out of the abundance of employment and higher compensation, together with the beckoning opportunity which offers every reward, we Americans have attracted the laborers of the earth, and set new standards here.

It is not for me to put the stamp of relative importance on pending issues—the intelligent voters will determine that for themselves. But I know what they are thinking, and they believe that the protective policy which made us industrially and commercially eminent is necessary to preserve that eminence. I know they want it restored and maintained. For myself, I prefer a protective and productive tariff which prospers America first. I choose the economic policy which sends the American working men to the savings banks rather than the souphouses. I commend the plan under which the healthful glow of prospering business is reflected in every face from the great captain of industry to the schooling child of the daily wage-earner.

The Democratic party is always concerned about the American consumer. Our Republican achievement is the making of a nation of prospering producers, and by producers I mean every human being who applies muscle or skill or brain or all to the conversion of nature's abundance into the necessities and luxuries of life or participates in the ways and means of their transportation and exchange. Far better a high cost of living and ability to buy than a lowering of cost attended by destruction of purchasing capacity.

Square Deal for Business.

No honest business in this country is too big to be good and useful, or too little to be protected and encouraged, and both big and little deserve the American shield against destruction by foreign competition, and protection from the raiders, political or otherwise, at home. Business and its agencies of transportation are so inseparable from each other and from the common weal that the political party which does not pledge them a square deal, no more and no less, does not deserve the confidence of the people. The strength of the business heart shows in every countenance in all the land, and the weakness of that heart holds a nation ill. We must strengthen the heart of American business in government co-operation rather than official opposition.

It is not inspiring to recite Democratic failures. I shall not dwell on that party's insincerity or incapacity. The country indicts and the record convicts. It proclaimed the sacredness of its pledges and then profaned them. It professed economy and is staggered by its own extravagance. It has turned adequacy or revenue under direct and unfelt taxes to insufficiency and direct taxation.

The National Expansion.

The president has said ours is a provincial party, evidently forgetting the federalist founding of our nationality and Republican expansion to greater national glory. The Democratic party not only fails to grasp our immensity and importance, it is sectional on the mainland and unheeding of our island possessions. Its vision does not catch the splendor of Old Glory in the sunlight of the world. Right now when the devouring flames of war are burning most fiercely, when our national view must be world-wide to be comprehensive, the Democratic administration has proposed to set adrift an island empire, in violation of our obligations to the world, to the Philippine people and ourselves. No administration which hauls down the flag and none which proposes to haul it down ever can succeed in directing the affairs of the American people.

One century of marvelous development has led us into another century of international sponsorship. This mighty people, idealizing popular government and committed to human progress, can no longer live within and for ourselves alone. Obliterated distance makes it impossible to stand aloof from mankind and escape widened responsibility. If we are to become the agency of a progressive civilization and God's great intent—and to believe otherwise is to deny the proofs of American development—we must assume the responsibilities of influence and example, and accept the burdens of enlarged participation.

To meet the obligations we must first make sure of maintained mental, moral and physical health at home.

The American Spirit.

In the travail of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness the American soul was born. Set aglow at Bunker Hill, it was reflected in the faces of patriots of a fearless republic, where men dedicated themselves to the solemn and momentous task which was traced by an infinite hand. They were not all Americans by birth, but they were dedicated Americans in the baptismal rites of a new republic and a new patriotism. They could not all sign the Declaration of Independence, but they committed all Americans to it for all succeeding time. They could not all join in making the Constitution, but they pledged the succeeding millions of Americans to its everlasting defense.

The gates of our ports have swung inward ever since, there has been a welcome to the foreign-born, whom we asked to drink freely of the waters of our political life and find their places in the sun of American opportunity. They are an inseparable and important and valued part of American citizenship, and the few zealots of any origin who violate our neutrality do not and cannot impugn the loyalty or the American patriotism of that great body which adds to the swelling chorus of "My country, 'tis of thee,

Sweet land of liberty."

It is not surprising that in their hearts there is sympathy or partiality for the land of their nativity when it is involved in a life-and-death struggle like that which saturates Europe with the blood of their kinsmen. Search your hearts deeply, my countrymen. One must be human to be an American, he must have human sympathies and human loves, and I should pity the foreign-born and the sons of foreign-born whose very souls are not wrung by the cataclysmal sorrow of the old world. But sorrow is the test of soul and the very altar of reconsecration. This is the momentous hour for the blazing soul of American allegiance. The spirit of the fathers is calling, and the safety of unborn Americans is demanding and the security of the republic is requiring that now and here and everywhere, under the Star and Stripes, we proclaim a plain, simple, glad and unalterable Americanism. It must be the offering of loyalty and devotion and love and trust, and life, if need be to these United States, now and ever lasting.

GENUINE BOOM IS MANIFEST FOR THE JUSTCE'S NOMINATION

A Roosevelt Stampede will No Longer be feared by "Old Guard."

CHICAGO, June 5.—The movement for the nomination of Justice Hughes today took on the aspects of a genuine boom.

Arriving delegates brought evidences of sentiment in favor of the jurist, and men who have been identified with the old guard of the Republican party declared that many delegates instructed for others were ready to turn their votes to him after the first ballot.

The lack of controling leadership by the men who have composed the old guard is emphasized on every hand. They express themselves as not favoring Justice Hughes for any reason of personality but because the delegates bring first and reports of sentiment from the states believe he can be the harmonizer who can rehabilitate the party and bring in the progressives strength.

On every hand explanations are sought of the failure of expected sentiment for Colonel Roosevelt to crystalize. A week ago those who opposed the nomination of Roosevelt, were fearful of a stampede on him, but now it is said that is impossible. Many cannot understand what caused this change.

Republican leaders after a canvass today, declared the Colonel Roosevelt's ultimate strength would not be more than 200 delegates, and they believe the number would be nearer 150. They asserted that the remaining 750 or 800 delegates would not vote for him under any circumstances.

It was pointed out that when the state delegations were selected, it was known that Roosevelt would be a strong factor and probably a candidate. Men were chosen who were believed to be for harmony and are regarded, therefore, as not of the stampedable type. The great mass of the delegates are uninstructed and are counted on to vote for any man who can bring a majority of the progressives back to the republican fold.

All talk of demanding a pre-convention statement from Justice Hughes as a candidate, a condition of this nomination, has practically been abandoned. It was being talked of last night, but today it has been eliminated from the discussions.

It is generally agreed that the Justice will continue to preserve his silence, while he occupied a place on the supreme bench, but that if nominated he will immediately make a satisfactory statement of his position on national questions.

In discouraging proposals for pre-nomination, statement from Justice Hughes, his supporters point out that so far as his position on national issues is concerned, addresses he made before he went on the bench show him to be for preparedness and sound from a party point of view as regards all of the important issues. It is being argued that lack of information regarding Mr. Hughes' declarations is wholly responsible for the change that he is a "a mystery candidate."

Word has come out from Govenor Whitman's quarters that it is futile to look forward to any spectacular eleventh hour move on the part of those who are demanding the jurist's nomination. No one will go to Washington, said Governor Whitman, to induce Justice Hughes to send a "night before the battle" message, nor will the long distance telephone lines be working between Chicago and Washington. Governor Whitman made it clear that one of the men fighting for the nomination of Justice Hughes have had direct word from him that their efforts have his approval. It was reiterated that neither Governor Whitman, Frank H. Hitchcack, nor any other man has been delegated by Justice Hughes to work for his nomination.

In discussing the Hughes movement today Governor Whitman said he believed it had attained proportions of a boom and cannot be headed off.

On every hand there seems to be sentiment to adoid making the nominee the campaign issue and to select someone on whom republicans and progressives can agree so the word will go out to the country that the party has rehabilitated by the uniting of factions which split it four years ago. It is realized that of all of the possibilities Colonel Roosevelt has the greatest personal following but at the same time he had the most enemies. The situation respecting both Roosevelt and Hughes contains all the necessary elements to produce a dark horse candidate, but there are so many strong men among the favorite sons that the possibility of the selection of someone yet unmentioed is minimized.

WADE'S WEEKLY LETTER

Since the oat crop as a general rule has been unsatisfactory on account of the recent dry weather, the stubbles should be planted to some other crop early while there is plenty of moisture and a chance yet to make a profit on the land.

Bottom land and fertile upland that holds moisture fairly well can be made to produce good crops of corn if planted any time in June, especially during the first half of the month. In this case, I would recommend one to plant prolific varities in wide rows and water furrows for convenience in cultivating and assurance of moisture. Corn is the most profitable crop for rich moist stubble. Do not plant corn and peas on the same land at the same time. Peas will not grow while the corn is growing but will grow after the corn gets its mature growth, if planted several days after the corn. There is yet a chance to increase the corn crop in Alabama, and it is hoped that farmers will do so, wherever the opportunity is favorable.

All thin soil where oats or wheat have been grown should be planted to peas, either for soil omprovement, or hay or for producing peas for seed purposes. Turning under a crop of pea vines is the best for soil improvement. Cutting the vines for hay does not prevent the crop from improving the soil by adding nitrogen but takes away the greater source of the humus. Where the hay is not desired, it is probably best to gather the peas and turn the vines under. By this method it is possible to get from ten to twenty bushels of peas per acre on medium poor land, and add both nitrogen and humus to the soil.

It is always best to plant peas in June and the first of the month is best. If you desire to cut the vines for hay, they will be ready by the 1st of September, when there is more hot sunshine, better curing weather, more ilde lobor and less weather risk. If you desire to pick the peas, have them mature the lattre part of August to the first of September, before cotton picking time, as labor will not pick peas when cotton can be picked.

There are several methods used in planting peas, and the best depends upon the character and condition of the soil and whether or not it is desired to save the vines for hay. Broad casting is the most common method, where hay machines are to be used. Personally, I have found it more satisfactory to plant peas in drills in very narrow rows. This gives an opportunity to cultivate them, if such should be considered necessary. Rows facilitate gathering peas by hand. The rows should be sufficiently narrow to admit the blade of a mower to cut two rows at a time.

The best machine for planting peas is the ordinary grain drill by stopping up half of the feeders, closing one and opening the other, commonly expressed as every other one. In the absence of a regular grain drill, other drills and planters may be used, and from a bushel to a bushel and a half to the acre.

BEGINNING TO GIVE CONSIDERATION TO PLATFORM OF G.O.P.

Lodge, Borah and Sutherland Have Many Suggestions in Mind.

CHICAGO, June 5.—Although the disposition among Republican leaders is to leave decision on the platform to the convention itself, consideration was given today to outstanding features. The advance preparation that characterized other conventions, has been lacking, but Senators Lodge, Borah, Sutherland and many others inthe Senate and House have had suggestions under consideration for many weeks. These probably will form a basis for discussion in the committee on resolutions when it gets to work, with the convention as the final judge.

Every effort will be made in the platform, if the suggestions are followed, to incorporate some progressive ideas. A recall plank probably will not be approved by leaders but a strong fight will be made for an endorsement of woman suffrage.

In what the three senators have done the first thought has been to give the greatest prominence to Americanism. Senator Sutherland has gone so far as to suggest that the world should be used as a key to the whole superstructure, all other declarations being built around a ringing pronouncement in favor of American nationalism. His belief is that a satisfactory platform could be constructed upon that principle, and that even the tariff plank could be made to fit into a declaration of Americanism only.

While not committing themselves entirely to this plan of procedure, other platform builders support an out and out declaration for nationalism. Some of them are inclined to the belief that this plan might result in too great restriction and thus exclude many necessary matters.

Need not be Brief.

Some also are getting away from the thought the platform should be exceptionally brief. "We don't want to be unusually prolix," said Senator Boron, soon after his arrival today, "but we cannot and must not overlook the fact that the republican party is out of power, and that being the case, we owe it to the country to present a comprehensive statement of the basis of our appeal for support. If we had a Republican president, his record might be a sufficient platform in itself. Not being thus situated, we are thus called upon to say what we propose to do and, incidentally, to point out some of the mistakes of the opponents. We should not deny ourselves this opportunity in our desire to be epigrammatic.

"I think that Americanism will be the dominant feature of the platform." The plank on Americanism should include the declarations of the party regarding the European war and our relations to it; the Mexican problem and the expression of the obligations of the American citizens.'

As the draft stands, it is at once a criticism of the dramatic management of affairs as vacillating and unsatisfactory, and a pronouncement in favor of the protection of the lives and poperty of the American citizens at home and abroad.

Th eDemocratic direction of affairs in connection with Mexico will be attacked with special severity as totally inadequate to the demands of the situation, bot no declaration for actual intervention in Mexico is contemplated now. An army and navy adequate to protection of American interests will be advocated as the best means of preserving peace and protection of the national honor.

The Tariff Plank.

The tariff plank will include not only the usual republican pronouncement in support of the principle of protection, but in addition there will be an assertion of the inadequacy of the present tariff law to meet the revenue demands. It will be asserted that but for the stimulus of the war, business in the United States would have suffered many hardships as the result of the Underwood-Simmons law, while at the same time the treasury would have been continuously empty. Promise will be made of an immediate revision that will be to the advantage to both the national treasury and to private business. A tariff commission will be demanded in the interest of the stability and equality o fthe tariff.

Much attention is to be given to features of the platform, which it is believed will appeal to the progressive element and to the former members of the party, who supported the candidacy of Colonel Roosevelt four years ago. To this end resolutions have been prepared concerning most of the destinctive points of the progressive platform of four years ago. These do not include an indorsement of the recall,but they do embrace the subject of woman suffroge. It is the belief of the framers of these resolutions that the declaration along progressive lines should be so comprehensive and clear as to leave no room for opposition on this score. The advocates of the suffrage provision expect to fight, but say they have no equal chance to win.

Senator Lodge, it is conceded, will be chairman of the resolutions committee. He has filled this position in previous conventions, and it is believed his experience as well as knowledge of legislation and of foreign and domestic affairs will greatly facilitate the work. He is credited with the authorship of the proposed declarations concerning foreign affairs, but he refused today to discuss the platform in any of its phases.

LETTER FROM MR. J. N. SCOTT

Jemison, Ala., June 5, 1916.—
Editor Union-Banner:

I would have written you sooner, but I have ben waiting for the rumbling to cease from the great Democratic rally a few weeks ago. Now, as all is quiet along the Potomac, I will proceed to give expression to some of my silent reflections concerning politics, Democrats and other things.

Yes, you know the siren cry was sent out for all the faithful to gather at Clanton and prepare for war. I expected to hear the great crowds pass my house before daylight, rushing to that great meeting; but,lo! and behold! there were only 37 of the invincible that assembled. But, my, my what resounding speeches they did make!

I see from the papers that Senator Curry spoke for an hour. I wonder if he is the same Senator Curry that made such a brilliant canvass two years ago for the Democrats. I remember a speaking we had at Jemison when Judge Reynolds and Mr. Curry each represented their sides of the political questions. And by the way, as a result of that campaign, we only beat the Democrats 575 in the last campaign. Can't we make it one thousand this time?

I wonder if Senator Curry explained in that hour's speech the bills he tried to get through the last legislature to disfranchise the people of this county, establish a new court for lawyers, and to abolish our commissioners court, and let a few bosses around the court house name a board of revenue to do their biddings, and to spend the peoples' money as they saw fit.

In just a few years our county is ruined by the Judge of Probate and some of our commissioners doing like a crowd around Clanton wanted them to do. But when we get another chance to vote we will give them what is coming to them, and you can depend on it. If we had to put up with this crowd always, what do you reckon would become of us anyway?

I wish I could have been down to the wonderful meeting and have seen the tears as they fell from the weeping eyes of the Democrats who were defeated.

I am sorry for some of the Democrats of this county. There are a few of them who are honest and want to do the right thing, but they are greatly in the minority and consequently have to be treated to the leavings of the crowd which bosses the ring.

Just a few days ago Judge Adams was advocating an independent party here in Chilton County. And just two years ago, he was at Birmingham making a speech at a Progressive-Republican meeting. Now who can tell where he stands? In fact, if he has ever stood for anything,other than just to get an office, in any way or from any party, it is more than I have been able to learn from his past record.

The people of this county have been fooled by the Democrats a few times in the past twenty years, but I think the last dose will last us a long time. Every time we go to pay our tax for years to come, we will face the perpetual monument that has been erected for us by the Democrats.

I hope we will continue to pull together, and if we do we can poll one thousand five hundred votes in November as easy as the Democrats can poll five hundred.

Mr. Tax Payer, let us look well into our interests. What will help you will help me; and what will hurt you will also hurt me. Our interests are mutual. Now for our common good, let us all make up our minds to vote for the men that we know will save our money, and spend it in the right way.

Respectfully,
J. N. SCOTT.

We wonder what would become of the Democratic party if it did not have the ancient bullwark of niggerism and reconstruction days to hide behind every time they are pursued and questioned on the matter of their party attainments.

Even in the case of the great and enthusiastic meeting which the Democrats recently held in Clanton, we asked the Clanton Press something about it, and they at once sought refuge in the worn out cry of Republican niggerism.

Democrats of any sense have long ago learned that it is futile to throw the negro up to the Republicans. They have found that it is as a boomerang that returns to him who threw it, inflicting a wound in the Democrat as much as in the Republican.

Will the Clanton Press deny that the negro is a factor in Democratic politics? If it thinks the cloak of the Democrat is so spotless and unblemished by the negro politically, let them express themselves, and we will show them the light on the situation.

NEGROES NOT SEATED

Recently the State Republican Convention of Alabama refused to endorse negro delegates to the National convention, whereupon the negro factions proceeded to elect a delegation of their own to go to Chicago. This meant of course a contest there, and Democrats in the South who have always found pleasure in throwing the negro up to the Republicans, thought they saw in this an outcome that would give the white Republican party a death blow in the South. They of course opined that the negroes would be seated and the white delegates denied recognition.

This was at least their hopes, for it was the only source of their continual harangue against the Republicans. They never have anything to charge against the Republicans but the negro and reconstruction days, you know.

Even the Clanton Press last week, though it didn't want to embarrass us, desired us to tell who headed the Republican delegation from Alabama to Chicago. We are not embarassed with the Alabama delegation that was given seats in the Chicago convention. For they were white men, everyone of them.

Major Allison of the ninth district had a contest with the negro who went to fight for the place, but we are glad to say that the white delegate, Mr. Allison, was given the seat and the negro was not recognized.

We wish the Clanton Press, the Democrats of Chilton county, and the whole world at large to know that the Republicans of this county are not ashamed of their standing. They are not ashamed of their party and its platform and record. It does not humiliate us in the least to tell anything and everything concerning the Republican party.

The ghost of the empty treasure is haunting the Free-Trade contingent these days, for they reason that unless something can be done to fill the deplete coffers of the nation at once somebody will hit Billy Patterson a terrible blow in the November election.—American Economist.

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING

A special meeting of the stockholders of the E. E. Jackson Lumber Co., will be held on the 10th day of July, 1916, at four o'clock in the afternoon at the principal office of the company at Riderville, Ala.

The meeting is called for the purpose of taking action on the following matters, to be submitted to the meeting: The authorization of the increase of the capital stock of the company from $150,00.00 to $500,-000.00; the authorization of the sale of the increased amount of capital stock of the company, viz: $350,000, subject to the approval of the board of directors of the company.

J.L. NORWOOD, Ass't. Sec.

In regard to the seating of negroes in the Chicago convention as delegates from Alabama, here is what Hugh Roberts in the Age-Herald had to say about the last of the contests and its outcome. Will the Clanton Press please read and take notice?

Chicago, June 7.—The convention honors of William Sanders, negro carpenter of Birmingham, were short lived. The Republican committee on credentials this afternoon unanimously voted that the executive committee in seating Sanders and unseating Maj. Charles J. Allison had blundered. As a result, the negro is short of his fine feathers and Major Allison is a delegate in good standing.

As heretofore reported, Sanders was successful in his efforts before the executive committee because the committee, according to the charges, was anxious to give a sop to the negro voters of the north. His sole contention was that he should be seated because negroes had been excluded from the Alabama convention of the party.

J. O. Thompson and O. D. Street have been re-elected to represent Alabama on the executive committes of the progressive and republican parties, respectively.

FINE WOMANHOOD

Ideals may vary, but it seems that the Chippewayan Indians also had a well-rounded conception of "woman's sphere." "Women are made to labor," an old chief told the traveller Hearne. "One of them can carry or haul as much as two men. They also patch our tents, make and mend our clothing, keep us warm at night. In fact, there is no such thing as traveling any considerable distance without their assistance."

MR. BICE'S REPLY

Editor Union-Banner:

Please give me space in your paper for one other dose for Bro. Jackson. The subject of my letter was "All Day Sunday Singings." replying to Bro. Jackson as to what he said about my letter, that I did not consider all day singings a mode of worship. I do not consider them a sincere mode of worship, in the way and manner that they are carried on these days in Chilton County. I do not know how they are carried on in Birmingham or Jefferson County; I only speak for this county. I did not say that church and Sunday Schools are the only mode of God's worship. I know of one other. Prayer meetings are one of the modes of worship, and I believe those three things are about all the real genuine ways of worship that I can think of just now,—church, Sunday Schooland prayer meetings; and all these services are mixed with singing, or should be: but it is so seldom we can have any singers to help us.

Now, If Bro. Jackson can give me a better mode of worship than the three I have mentioned, I will be glad to have it, and all three that I have mentioned is church work. I cannot say so much for all day singings, for quite a number of the leaders of the singings are not Christians and do not profess to be; and I repeat that the all day singings are robbing God of that which justly belongs to Him.

Paul says, "I beseech you, therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."—Romans, 12 Chapter; first and second verses.

Now, Bro. Jackson, don't gag at a gnat and swallow a camel. I did not say anything about anyone not being Christian that went to the all day singings; I only spoke of the leaders not all being Christians. Anyone, if he be a saint or sinner can and does lead the singing at all day singings, but sinners do not lead in the Sunday School work, neither in church.

Yes, Bro. Jackson, sinners go to Sunday Schools and churches, and we invite them to come, for it is the church and the Sunday schoo lthat convert sinners and bring them into the church. Statistics show that about 85 per cent. of the Christians are brought to Christ through the Sunday Schools. Will Bro. Jackson tell me how many are brought to Him through singing without any other services. No one loves singing better thanI, and it is necessary that we have singing in our churches and Sunday Schools; and that is just the thing that I am grumbling about. The all day singings take all the singers away from the churches and Sunday Schools. Bro. Jackon, can't you have all day singings on other days besides Sunday? Why not sing Saturday or Sunday afternoon. But no, the good women have to cook and worry preparing dinner for hunlreds of people who go for miles to the all day singings for the purpose of having a good time as they all call it, and many times half of them don't go in the house, in fact the house won't hold half that goes; while the benches in churches and Sunday Schools are vacant. And what is causing it? The all day Sunday singings are robbing God.

Bro. Jackson, do you go to Sunday School, and how often? Please answer through the paper. And I want to ask Bro. Jackson how often does he pitch or set the song service for Sunday school or church services?

Bro. Jackson, you asked why I object to all day singings when it brings us Methodists and Primitive Baptists together as one in God's service. Bro. Jackson, can't all denominations meet in Sunday School conventions and worship God together in singing and praiseing Him? But, no, I suppose the primitive Baptists will not take any part in Sunday School, will they, Bro. Jackson? I do not need any more light on all day Sunday singings where there is no other services of God.

I am a Baptist, not Primitive but Missionary. I believe in the Sunday School work and Missionary work. I can rejoice with all Christians, Bro. Jackson. You claim that the all day singing is religious service. If so, how can you make it so, when men carry it on, who do not claim to be Christians and do not belong to any church. Then tell me how can it be religious service?

Now, Bro. Jackson, I am only speaking of all day Sunday singings. I love singing as good as anybody, but there is time for all things. I do not believe that anyone intends to break up the churches and Sundap Schools but they are doing it nevertheless, in their all day Sunday singings they are not thinking of what they are doing. I believe when they give it the right thought, they will have their song service in the afternoon, on Sunday and their all day song service on other days besides Sunday. Then we will have the sweet soul stirring song service at churches and Sunday Schools.

I would like to say more but the editor may cast it in the waste basket.

Yours for building up God'sKingdom,
Thorsby, Ala., June 5, 1916.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Regulator Co., 718 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers, It is a delight to read it.

CLANTON BOY SCOUTS EVEN WITH MONTGOMERY

The Clanton Boy Scouts went down to Montgomery on Wednesday to play a couple of games of beseball with the Y. M. C. A. Junior team of that city. The scuffle took place at the city ball park, and resulted in an even break. The Montgomery boys took the first game in a score of 1 to 4. The second game was won by Clanton, score 7 to 9.

In the first game batteries for Clanton were Smith and Hayes; for Montgomery were Waldo and Laurie. In the second game batteries for Clanton were Mullins, Hayes and Smith; for Montgomery were Stiner, Worthington and Lacy.

The loss of the first game by Clanton was due to some serious errors of the players throwing wild twice in succession.

DR. SHAW'S FOUNT OF YOUTH

When Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was asked recently how she keeps so young, she replied that though it may have been runing for trains all her life, yet she is rather inclined to think that, "mental activity and constitutional cheerfulness are always responsible for keeping young.

"A woman, whose mind is active does not realize that she is not always at exactly the same age," said Dr. Shaw, "therefore she never grows old. It is not the mental activity that keeps her young, she IS young. My advice to those who are growing old, is, 'Keep busy.' The really important thing in life to me is to be so absorbed by a great fundamental principle and to be so inspired by a love of humanity that you forget everything else. This is the fountain of eternal youth."

Here's A 'Tip' On Rheumatism Follow It

AN ACCURATE DESCRIPTION

When your arm or your leg feels "all knotted" with rheumatism, when you feel as though your muscles were "tied up with a rope," you are really describing your pains accurately. Rheumatism is a condition of the body when acids and other deposits of impurities are actually "tieing up" the strands of muscles in your body, or strangling the nerves and thus producing the awful shooting pains of sciatica, lumbago, etc. Medical authorities agree that these acid deposits are carried and deposited by the blood in the various parts of the body. It stands to reason, therefore, that local applications such as rubbing with so-called remedies can't do any permanent good. At best they can relieve the pain a little and only for a little while. The only way to effect a real cure is to attack the real cause—the blood. It is cleansed from the troublesome deposits by S. S. S., the reliable blood purifier that is now easing the pains and healing the ills of the third generation. S. S. S. "goes after" the impurities in the blood as relentlessly, as eagerly and as thoroughly as a ferret goes after rats; pursuing the poison into every vein and artery, into every nook and corner of the body, and chasing the troublesome substances out of the system. The blood thus cleansed, carries off the acid and other injurious deposits and "filters" them out of the body through the kidneys. S. S. S. is not a drug. It is a purely vegetable blood purifier. You can get S. S. S. at every drug store. But if in addition you should like to have the advice of the doctors in charge of our laboratory, do not hesitate to write us. You will receive free, conscientious and confidential advice. This is in line with our policy to make every effort to insure the best results from S. S. S. to every sufferer. COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT THORSBY INSTITUTE

The past week was an exceedingly busy time for Faculty, Students and friends of Thorsby Institute, as it always is in any well regulated institution during the days that are occupied in closing the work of the school year.

Saturday evening, May 27th, the Music Department, under the direction of Miss Lassfolk for the past two years, gave a music recital before a discriminating and appreciative audience. Many of the students were quite young but showed the effect of careful training and surprising accomplishment, considering the comparatively brief time they have been under instruction, while the older students reflected credit on themselves and their instructor.

Sunday night Rev. C. E. Moorman of Marbury delivered the Commencement Sermon, a thoughtful and impressive discourse, to an audience which filled the large assembly hall to capacity.

Tuesday night the hall was again filled for the spirited contest between the Stars and Cresents of the Helen Keller Literary Society, which by the way has been the means of development in many of the students of force with ease in public speaking.

Wednesday night was given over to a recital by the Graduating Class of the Music Department. Miss Giula Williams and Miss Agnes Gerald whose handling of difficult classical selections from such authors as Beethoven, Bach, Schubert, Bendal and others, displayed a remarkable development in their appreciation of and ability to interpret good music, that reflected credit on themselves and their instructor. The audience expressed their appreciation in frequent and vigorous applause.

Thursday night Bates Hall was again filled to capacity on account of the graduating exercises interspersed with vocal selections, music by Thorsby Band, a stirring address by Dr. Jas. M. Shelburne, President of Howard Colege, closing with the confeering of Diplomas.

Mr. Fendell Peterson chose for the subject of his essay "Colonel Goethals—The Boss of our Big Job," and handled the subject in a masterly fashion and with a pleasing delivery that exhibited the development of abilities that will no doubt be heard from later.

Miss Alma Dippery delivered her essay in a very pleasing, easy style and with a voice distinctly heard in all parts of the hall. Her subject "My Native Land" depicted the wonderful effects of amalgamation of the races in the melting pot of American Citizenship.

After the excersises were over an informal reception was held in honor of Dr. Shelburne and the graduating students, the Ladies Guild of Thorsby having charge and serving refreshments.

Friday and Saturday were devoted to the exodus of students and members of the Faculty.

SPEAKING

Hon. L. D. Holloway, State Mgr. of the W. O. W. will make a public address at the court house on Mondaynight, June 12, at 8:30 o'clock.

Subject: dealing with the order of the Woodmen of the World.

Mrs. L. D. Holloway, State Mgr. of the Woodmen Circle will also make an address relating to the circle work.

The public, both ladies and gentlemen cordially invited to attend.

COMES OUT WITH A SWORN STATEMENT

Life Long Invalid Restored To Health By Tanlac Gains 31 Pounds

On Friday, June 18th of last year there appeared in the Chattanooga Evening News the remarkable story of a frail little woman, who had been restored to health and happiness by the use of Tanlac. The person referred to is Miss LaRue Davis, who is now a resident of Memphis and lives at 286, Looney Avenue. This statement which is so remarkable as to be almost incredible, was published in newspapers all over the South, from the Mason and Dixon Line to the Texas border. In telling of her wonderful resoration to health at that time Miss Davis said:

"I have always been very delicate and have suffered a great deal from stomach trouble and rheumatism. I rarely ever had any appetite and simbly couldn't relish anything. I fell off in weight until I only weighed 75 pounds, and was so thin I looked perfectly awful. After taking three bottles of Tanlac I now weigh over 100 pounds and am gaining every day. My appetite is good and I can hardly get enough to eat. Even my complection has improved and I feel better in every way. Tanlac is simply grand and I can truthfully say this is the only medicine that ever did me any good."

At the time she made this statement Miss Davis lived in Chattanooga and made her home at 210 Class St., East Chattanooga.

A still more remarkable feature of this case came to light just last week when she came of her own free will and accord to tell Dr. W. B. Logan, the special Tanlac representative at Memphis, that she was still in the best of health and that she had gained seven pounds in addition to the 24 pounds reported last June, and she felt that she owed not only her present health but her life to this medicine.

Out of sheer gratitude Miss Davis consented to give not only a second statement but to make a sworn affidavit to the facts in her remarkable case, which appears below.

Miss LaRue Davis formerly of 210 Glass Street, Chattanooga, Tenn., now living at 286 Looney Avenue, Memphis, appeared before me in person and made the following statement

"In June, 1915, I, of my own free will and accord, went to the Live and Let Live Drug Co., at Chattanooga, Tenn., to see the Tanlac representative, and gave him my testimonial stating the fact that I had used three or four bottles of Tanlac, and that the statement then given was true and that I wish to state now that every word contained therein still holds true. Furthermore, I have not had a day of sickness since that time, have gained seven pounds more, making thirty-one pounds gained since I began taking Tanlac. Before I began taking it, I weighed seventy-six pounds, and now I weigh one hundred and seven.

"Idesire to state further that I am willing to answer all inquiries and consider that I owe my present health to Tanlac. I cannot refrain from adding this second statement to the one I have already given, that I cannot give enough praise to Tanlac.

"I have not taken any Tanlac or felt the need of any medicine up to the present time since the above date."

(Signed) Miss La Rue Davis,
May 12, 1916.

Personally apeared before me, Nina R. This is the reverse side of the tidy red tin

THE Prince Albert tidy red tin, and in fact, every Prince Albert package, has a real message-to-you on its reverse side. You'll read:—"Process Patented July 30th, 1907." That means that the United States Government has granted a patent on the process by which Prince Albert is made. Anti by which tongue bite and throat parch are cut out! Everywhere tobacco is sold you'll find Prince Albert awaiting you in toppy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; handsome pound and half-pound tin humidors and in that clever crystal-glass humidor, with sponge-moistener top, that keeps the tobacco in such fine condition—always!

But it takes Virginia to give a cigarette "character"!

But it takes Virginia to give a cigarette that life and zest called "character"! That's why Virginia is called "the tobacco man's tobacco."

Piedmonts have in them only the highest-grade Virginia—ALL Virginia! Golden, lively, mellow as southern sunshine!

If you want a cigarette that will satisfy you—that will say "character" in every puff then next time, ask for Piedmonts!

NOTE: Virginia tobacco pays for no duty, no ocean freight, no losses from wasteful handling. That is why Piedmonts, for instance, made of highest-grade Virginia, grown right here in the U.S.A. can afford to give you better quality than a cigarette of foreign-grown tobacco which has to carry all those wasteful expenses.

IN MEMORY

On the 13th day of March, 1916, the death angel visited our home and bore away the spirit of our dear little Ettamay. She was six years one month and sevendays old. She lay sick four long weeks, and all was done for her that could be done. It is so hard to give up my dear baby sister, but we must say God's will be done not ours.

She leaves father, mother, one sister, gradfather, grandmother and many relatives to mourn her loss.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dock Wells, then she was laid to rest in New Salem cemetery.

A precious one from us is gone
A voice we loved is stilled
A place is vacant in our home
Whice never can be filled.
Sleep on dear Ettamay
It will not be long
Till I will meet you
In the beautiful home beyond.

We thank our friends and neighbors for their kindness and for the many beautiful flowers in our sad hour, and we thank Dr. N. S. Johnson for his faithful services.

Her loving sister,
ATTICE FARRIS..

Wants Three Beef Breeds At Auburn

Mr. Watt Asks Your Aid in Getting Animals For Boys to Study at Agricultural School

J. T. Watt, U. S. State Farm Demonstration Agent for Alabama, wants to get individuals of the three leading beef breeds to be kept at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, Alabama.

This is quite an undertaking and one worthy the support of the people in Alabama who believe in, and want to help in making more effective, education in agriculture.

Mr. Watt wants to have a bull and two heifers each of the Angus, Shorthorn and Hereford breeds. He wants good bulls and good heifers for the use of the classes in livestock. Having a good really good bull and two really good heifers of each of these three breeds at Auburn will mean a good deal to the boys there. It will mean that they can study good-type individuals, and the breeds as well, at first hand. And the young men who are going to Auburn to study livestock and farming are young men who will play a big part in Alabama's future. They are the men who will find better and more profitable occupations than politics. They are the young men who will bring a new sentiment among us—a sentiment for the work that really counts—better farms through better farming methods, more and better livestock and the establishing of home markets for our farmers.

These young men mean more to Alabama than many Alabamians think. They and the pig club and corn club boys and canning club girls coming after them are the hope of the State. You cannot make a State with politicians and orators. But you can build a prosperous commonwealth with real farmer boys and girls who produce wealth.

Now there are no State funds provided with which to buy these good bulls and heifers for Auburn. The animals are needed there and needed bad. So Mr. Watt is going out to the public spirited farmers and business men of the State and asking them to help raise the funds to buy these animals. Twenty-five, ten or five dollars from this man and that in every county will make up the sum. Only good animals will be bought and so it will require a considerable amount to get them.

+ +

Mr. Watt is asking the county agents, unofficially, to help in this big and worth-while effort. He is asking, unofficially, the farmers and business men, to help. Doubtless there will be responses from all over the State, as there should be. It is an effort that will meet the approval of all who are interested in practical livestock education.

We ask you, as a reader, if you are able to do so, to lend your support to this effort. Help give our livestock students at Auburn cattle to study and to work with. This is practical livestock education and the kind that sticks with a man.

You can learn a good deal from books. But "book learning" gets away from a man mighty quick when he quits studying the book. Knowledge got from practical everyday work and study is worth more than book knonwledge. This sort of education trains hand as well as head, and there is not much use training the mind if the hand is not trained at the same time.

Auburn needs these good cattle the worst way. Maybe you can help. If so, you will be doing a mighty good thing for our agricultural students at Auburn. Give the effort a boost and help it along with your contribution, if you can. Let's make our agricultural college better and better. There is no reason why the South cannot have an agricultural college like Iowa has got at Ames and there is no reason why Alabama's school should not be the most useful of any in the South.

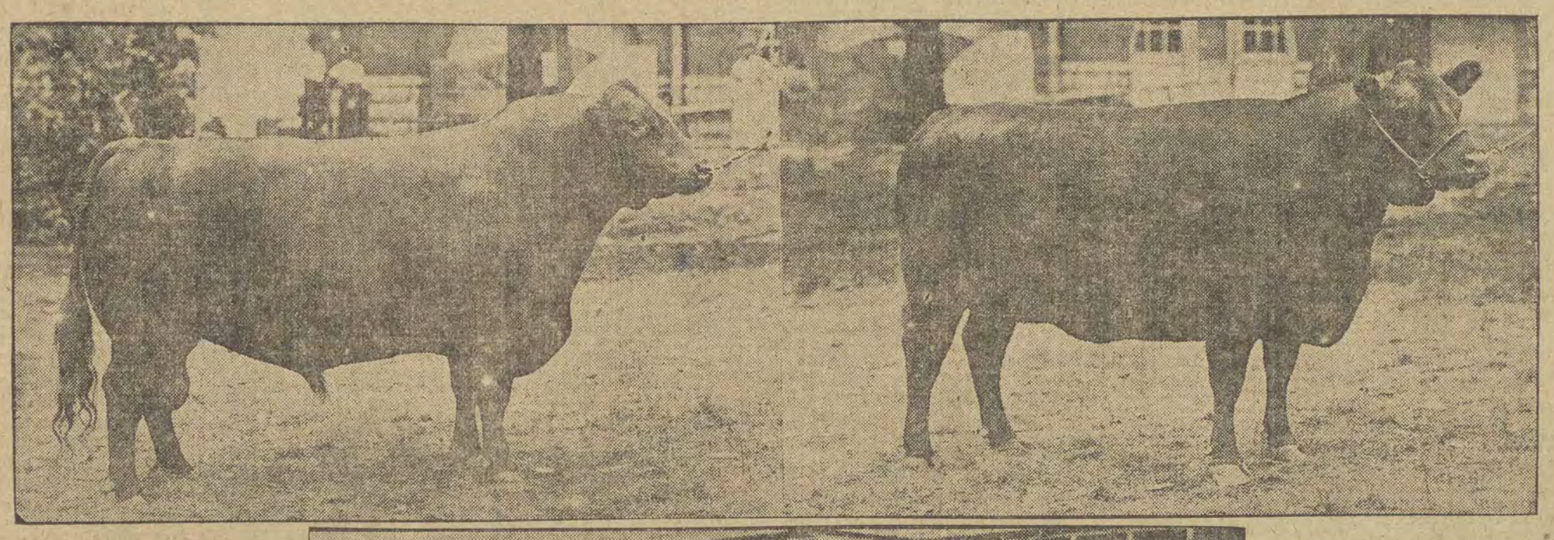
Mr. Watt's effort, undertaken outside his regular duties should have your encouragement and your support.

"SWAT THE ROOSTER"

To increase the hen profits and to improve the quality of eggs, farmers and poultrymen may well "swat the rooster" as soon as the breeding season is over.

Practically all breeding was done before June 10, and after that time the eight or ten cents a pound that the roosters will bring on the market will add to the farm poultry income. If the bird is too valuable from a breeding standpoint to sell or eat, by all means pen him away from the hens. This is the timely statement just issued by E. P. Clayton, head of poultry work at the Mississippi A. and M. College.

Mr. Clayton states further that infertile eggs will keep more than twice as long as fertile eggs, and bring a higher price on the market. A New Orleans firm that has branches in Mississippi pays fifty cents a case more for eggs from territory where the roosters are kept away from the hens in the summer.



"Swatting the rooster" as a precautionary measure is especially important since the recent order of the U. S. government by which all eggs found to be over five per cent bad will be confiscated, resulting in a total loss to the producer. The greater part of this loss will be avoided if only infertile eggs are put on the market this season.

Aberdeen Angus, "The Blacks" and Their Splendid Progress

Above—Perfect type Angus bull and A nugs co[illegible] Below—Prize-winning Ang us cattle in one of pens of Union Stock Yards in Chicago.

Although a good many Angus cattle have been brought into the Central South, we don't believe the majority of our people know them for what they are worth or appreciate them for their full value.

"The Blacks" are truly a great breed of cattle and so we are giving you here the main points of their history and something of their splendid progress and winnings.

Horniess cattle existed in the earliest age to which we can trace the bovine form:

In the day when first humanity itself appeared—when man was a savage and a hunter, but yet an artist—there existed a finely formed polled or horniess race of cattle as depicted on the walls of the caverns of these dark-skinned folk—"the oldest of man." During that period Britain was continuous with the continent and consequently the polled cattle spread into the nooks and corners of what was then the land's end of Europe. Fossil and semi-fossil remains, found, in Scotland, establish the fact of the prehistoric existence of wild hornless cattle in those very districts occupied by the known ancestors of the present Aberdeen-Angus breed. King Kenneth MacAlpine of Scotland when promulgating the laws at Scone in Perthshire, mentions "black polled" cattle—which is the first historical reference to the breed we have.

Oldest Polled Breed

Memorial stones erected by the native Scots in commemoration of their repulses of invading Norsemen, and now found at Aldbar and Meigle in Forfarshire and Burghead in Morayshire certainly depict "the hornless cattle of the country." Kenneth's laws applied to the region that became the early seat of the Aberdeen-Angus breed, and there is documentary evidence to show that in 1523 the black hornless cattle occurred in Aberdeenshire, but the first specific mention of polled animals of the breed is that of the prize-winning "black hornless" exhibited in 1811 from a well-known Aberdeenshire source, the influence of which on the breed is still felt. These concentrated facts prove that the Aberdeen-Angus is the oldest polled breed—in Britain at least—and accounts for its extraordinary prepotency in transmitting its color and hornless character. The value of these characteristics in crossing or grading up—in putting the royal stamp of market-topping supremacy on the progeny of otherwise untrademarked stock—is, in the light of these marshalled facts, as easily explained as it is unchallenged.

The Breed's Birthplace

Scotland's earliest historians describe the region comprising the Northeast counties as a famous grazing ground for cattle and point out that Buchan was so called because it paid its tributte to the Roman legionaries in cattle. Church and state encouraged the improvement of the native stock, the Church being responsible for the establishment of the great Scotch fairs or trysts, which were originally gatherings held on days dedicated to the saints. Hence at a very early date they had the Alkey, Paldy and Tarnty Fairs in Aberdeenshire, Kincardinshire and Angusshire, and these fairs, as the evidence proves, were the first places where the breeders disposed of their surplus stock, which was eagerly snapped up by the English graziers.

With the great increase in the demand for beef, as a result of the Queen Anne wars (1664-1714), cattle breeding in Scotland received a great impetus. Englishmen—always great beefeaters—found that their choicest meats came from the Scottish side of the border and it was while this trade was at its height—in the middle and latter portions of the 18th century—that authentic record was made of the breed's progress in Aberdeenshire and Angusshire, and Morayshire. In Aberdeenshire we find the breed described as having been "improved" by putting the best males to the best females, rules being laid down for breeding both for beef and the dairy, which proves the breed to have been originally what we rerm a dual-purpose one.

The Breed In America

Though perhaps the first Aberdeen-Angus animal that ever trod American soil was the cow Duchess which went from Portle then in 1850, it was not until 1873 that stock was imported for the express purpose of improving the range cattle. In that year the late George Grant, of Victoria, Kansas, imported three bulls, two of which he exhibited at the Kansas City Fair—the first polls that ever appeared in an American showyard. These bulls, which created much interest, were the forerunners of the great influx which occurred a few years later as a result of the world-wide renown the breed had acquired by winning the two champion group prizes at Paris in 1878.

This was the start of the Aberdeen-Angus cattle in America and their steady progress since then is a matter of common knowledge to stockmen.

Prepotency

Aberdeen-Angus cattle are solid black in color and as has been stated have no horns. These characteristics are so strongly developed that a bull, when bred to horned cows of various colors, will usually produce calves of which 85 per cent or more are black in color and hornless. Therefore the Angus are extremely valuable in grading up native cattle.

The milking qualities of the cows are only fair; they give more milk than the Hereford, but not as much as the Shorthorn. A sufficient quantity of milks is produced to raise a good calf.

Repeated Winnings

This breed is very early maturing, and has a tendency to fatten well at any age, hence their popularity for producing baby beef. In general form they are different from the Shorthorn and Hereford. The body is more syindrical in shape, and they are smoother throughout than either of the breeds named. The Angus responds quickly to good treatment, and, because of their readiness to fatten, early maturity, exceptional vigor, high quality, general smoothness and uniformity, and the high per centage of valuable meat produced, it is the most popular of all beef breeds among cattle feeders. They usually dress out a higher per centage of marketable meat than any other breed, and their merit has been shown by the repeated winnings they have made in the show ring and on the block.

Good For South

They stand either heat or cold well and are popular in the South as well as in the corn belt. Because of their reputation for finishing smoothly and killing out well they are very popular in the corn belt and neighboring States where much feeding is done. They are becoming more popular in the South, and rank next to the Hereford and above the Shorthorn in their general adaptability to average southern conditions.

Characteristics

The head of the Angus shows a sharp tapered poll, great breadth between the eyes, a prominent forehead, prominent eyes, a nose of medium length, a large mouth and muzzle, and large nostrils. They are more restless or nervous than the Shorthorn. The neck is short, full, and has a well-developed crest in the bull, but it does not always blend smoothly with the shoulders, which are sometimes a little prominent. The chest shows great depth, width, and length.

The body is cylindrical in shape and does not show the squareness or blockiness of the Shorthorn and the Hereford, but is noted for its compactness and good covering of flesh. The ribs are well sprung, curved, and long, giving the cylindrical form to the body. The loin and rump are well fleshed and deeply covered, but entirely different in shape from the Shorthorn, as the great width and squareness are absent. The deep covering of flesh of the rump, the smallness of bone, and the deep, rounding, bulging hindquarter gives a maximum amount of meat. Note the difference in the hindquarter of the Angus and the Shorthorn. The latter is broad and straight from pin bones to the hock, while the Aberdeen-Angus has less breadth and a very rounded bulging quarter with a deep twist. The Angus is not so low in the flank as the Shorthorn and some individuals are light in the hindquarter.

Our Legumes Best for Our Own Lands

The Black Belt is fundamentally a livestock country.

With the presence of an abundant supply of lime in the soil, comes a corresponding increase in the growth and variety of all the legumes and forage crops so necessary as feed and pasture for livestock.

It is a fact notable in my experience in giving particular note to the farming operations of numbers of good farmers from the Blue Grass region of Kentucky, and the Corn Belt of Illinois and Indiana, who have settled in the Prairie Region, that they begin at once to work on an outstanding need on their recently acquired farms—the improvement of permanent pasture land for their cattle and hogs.

Invariably they will begin with seedings of grasses and forage crops with which they are familiar in their old sections and which were adapted and made excellent growth there — Blue Grass, Timothy, Alsike and Red Clover. Invariably they failed in their seedings for the crops were not so well adapted to their new environment. All this when Bur Clover at this writing is 10 in. to 18 in. high. Black Medic has been furnishing good grazing all winter. Yellow Meliolotus is 16 in. high, and White Melilotus is 4 to 6 in. high and making rapid growth. Alfalfa has had sufficient growth to graze 1 cow per acre or 8 to 10 hogs all winter. Paspalum has been green all winter. White Clover is in full bloom, and Bermuda is beginning its rapid summer growth from under the cover of the early spring Clovers. We have the native grasses and we do not need any further variety. We simply need increased seeding and preparation of pastures.

The time will soon be at hand when every available acre of Bur Clover and Black Medic should be harvested for seed to further increase their acreage. Both these crops are particularly suited to Prairie Land and spread rapidly once they are started.

Bur Clover may be saved by raking through the old vines with a garden rake after the plants die down in May; then sacking the seed in piles and keeping them until planting time in August and resowing. No preparation is required other than a light harrowing of the pasture on which these are to be sown, at the rate of 2 to 5 bushels per acre. Earliness of sowing is very important and it should not be done later than October 1, it possible.

Black Medic has about the same season of growth as Bur Clover but the seed are small black, and borne in a cluster on the terminal ends of the limbs. To save the seed, the seed plot should be cut as hay in the early morning and raked in windrows after it is cured again in the early morning. It may then be threshed out on a terpaulin by shaking only lightly. The seed shatter easily and hence the care in cutting to prevent undue scattering of the seed.

When mother's sick it's not like when
They's chillun sick or only men,
Or relatives or neighbors say,
For its ist like the very bloom

And all our lips is quiverings, too,
An' no one knows just what to do.

You don't know what she is, yuh see,
Until she's sick, an' fings kin be
So diff'unt and so all upset,

$10,000 Show For Stockmen In the Fall

The Statewide Livestock Show to be held at Montgomery, Alabama, this fall will be "a $10,000 show."

This has been decided by the Montgomery Livestock Association which has in charge the arrangements for the most important livestock event ever held in the State of Alabama.

Ten thousand dollars will be given as premiums in two classes—one class open to Alabama breeders and the other open to breeders from other states. Five thousand dollars of this ten thousand dollars will be given by the people of Montgomery and the other five thousand will be given by the breeders of the State and the breed associations.

This will be the largest livestock show ever held in Alabama and the premiums will be the best ever offered in the State. For one breed of hogs alone—the Hampshires—there will be $2,000 in premiums, $1,000 being given by the Hampshire Association and the other $1,000 being given by the Montgomery Livestock Association and the Hampshire breeders of Alabama.

It is probable that all the leading hog and cattle breed associations will give money for premiums in the Statewide Livestock Show in Montgomery.

The directorship of the Montgomery Livestock Association is composed entirely of breeders. W. G. Henderson is president and the other directors are N. J. Bell, Ralph Quisenberry, Churchhill Marks, Harry Houghton, Simon Roswald, W. E. Ellsberry, Jr., and Dr. J. N. McLean. I. T. Quinn is general manager of the show. With such men as these—men of ability and financial standing—their big effort, the greatest ever made for a livestock exhibition in Alabama, has the confidence of all the breeders of the State.

Doubtless the State-wide Livestock Show in Montgomery this fall, in which all breeders of the State are invited to co-operate, will be one of the best livestock shows ever held in the entire South.

SOUL OF SPRING

The soul of spring is in the land,
Its voice along the silver strand
Of moonlit summer twitters sweet;
The little leaves like many a hand
Of tender childhood reach to see
If they can touch yon mother tree
That has the green moss at her feet
And in her arms the dreams of dew.

All up the mornings of the sea
A mystic radiance seems to be,
And old elations born again
Like music in the breast of men
Sing out across the hills and dells
The music of a thousand spells.
Of beautiful Arcadian birth
In the warm breast of blossoming earth.

It is the happy time of life,
The soul of spring; the warring strife
Sinks down beyond the purple west.
The beauteous Love comes with her crest
Of flaming dafodil to fling
Around the sword her velvet wing,
And in the blossom of her field
Deck the unused and useless shield.

The song of spring is here, is here.
The laughing waves, the rolling sphere
Proclaim her in the tuneful word
Of quivering frog and whistling bird;
The air is vibrant with her thrill
Of choric rapture, stream and rill,
With eddies dancing in the light.
Give her the password of the hill
Where all the fairies dance at night.

Farmers Ask Railroads For Service

If They Give Real Service the Railroads Will Win Good Will of Farmers as Well as More Business

BY LITTELL McCLUNG.

Several of the railroads in the South have special demonstration men out working with the farmers and some of them have regular demonstration farms where deep plowing, pastures and livestock set an object lesson to the communities in which these farms are located.

This is excellent work and has done much good and will continue to do good. But at this juncture, we rise to remark that there is even a greater way in which the railroads in the South can help the farmers and that way is service.

We have just seen—and may see again before the summer is over—a most unfortunate failure of the farmers to get the railroad service that they absolutely needed. We refer to the alfalfa growers of western Alabama and their inability to get cars when their new crop of alfalfa hay came on.

A good part of the old crop had been stored in barns, sheds and warehouses. The new crop, when it came on was the heaviest ever known. Orders began to come in for both the old hay and the new hay, and at a good price—orders Florida, Georgia Alabama, Virginia and other states.

The growers had asked the railroad for cars in which to ship the hundreds of bales of alfalfa for which they had orders. But no cars were left them. Again and again, and still again, they begged for cars and still no cars. Finally in the last part of May, after deciding to take up the matter with the Insterstate Commerce Commission in Washington, they got some cars for a part of their new crop.

Such a situation was deplorable, to say the least. Undoubtedly there was a shortage of cars. Undoubtedly the railroad was being asked for cars by various interests. Undoubtedly the railroad could not furnish all the cars wanted at various points.

But the railroad should have foreseen something like this and have made some provision to give the farmers of western Alabama at least some cars when the new crop of alfalfa began to come in. We know that if we had been division manager of the railroad we would have got some ...s to those alfalfa farmers or made life uncomfortable for somebody along the line. If we had been one of the growers we would have taken the matter up directly with the president of the road and continued sending him telegrams until we got some action along this line.

But a farmer is not supposed to know that the best way to get things from a railroad is go to after the highest official and keep after him until some action is had. They had every reason to believe that the minor officials would look after them to the best of their ability. Now, as things have turned out, they will probably make future appeals directly to the president of the road or, if they believe they are being discriminated against, to the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington.

We cite this a fortunate situation as evidence of what great help railroads could really be to the farmers. Service is all the farmers ask of the railroads, nothing more. This fall some of the railroads in this territory will have another chance to show if they can give real service to the farmers. There are going to be a lot of hogs and cattle shipped out of this central South territory, and ossibly a good deal of grain, and the railroads will be put to the service test.

Will the railroads educate their employes along the line to the importance of giving service to the farmers It remains to be seen if they will.

We know of several cases where railroad employes in Alabama could have been of real service to livestock shippers and they fell down on it. Possibly if you are a livestock or hay or grain shipper, you know of similar instances.

Our suggestion to farmers who ship vegetables, grain, hay or livestock, is to report all failure in service to the president of that particular road—either by wire or letter, or both. A president of a railroad, as a rule, does not like to be bothered with such things, and if he is bothered he gives orders to have the complaint attended to at once, and a president's orders generally "Go.

To all railroads who are looking for the farmer's business and his good will, we would cite the Mobile and Ohio as an example to follow here in the South. The M. and O., from all we can learn, has set the pace for service to farmer shippers, and following its example might bring other roads more business and more will, the latter being about as important as the former.

New Day In Arkansas and How It Followed A Dark Night

By Eleanor Evins Stewart

E. J. BODMAN.

A comparison of methods and measures for betterment in any great movement is always interesting and helpful to those who are actively engaged in the work. As prophets are never without honor except in their own countries, even the most skeptical and inert unbelievers are sometimes convinced by viewing the work of Seers and doers in other countries. So, a synopsis or the means to the end of the great diversification and profitable farming campaign now operating in our sister state, Arkansas, will doubtfess be of help and interest and conviction to those who are waging the similar campaign in our own State.

Following the outbreak of the European War, Arkansas, with the same depressed cotton market that paralyzed every other cotton state, began to realize in her extremity the necessity for departure from her one-crop system. Though her rice, fruit, and lumber industries are gigantic, cotton is her staple, and the depression among her farmers who had depended on this for their money crop verged on panic. Cotton was selling for considerably less than it cost to produce it, and the prices of food had become excessive. The farmers were in dire straits and their distress was reflected in every line of business. It was evident that some thing must be done and at once, to relieve the situation.

What The Work Did

Then it was that a body of public-spirited citizens composed of men from all branches of business and farming assembled and decided on the campaign that made Arkansas prosperous within a year. Statistics show that the profitable farming campaign conducted in Arkansas during the winter of 1914-15 added $30,774,150 to the value of the agricultural products of the State, their value in 1914 being $85,181,550, and in 1915 it was $115,955,700. This campaign in this State was the first of its kind in the United States in which all the agricultural forces within the State joined in one great effort.

Why Not "Feed Ourselves!"

Investigation revealed that, in normal years, the annual payment of residents of Arkansas to residents of other states for food and feedstuffs that could be profitably raised at home was approximately $65,000,000, a sum greater than the annual value of the State's cotton crop.

"Why not keep this money at home?" asked the thinking men of the State.

That question was answered with the command: "Let Arkansas Feed Herself!" a command that became the slogan of the profitable farming campaign.

The Idea

Briefly, the idea of the campaign was that the busines men of the State should arrange to bring together at one time the farmers and the state and government agricultural experts, that the latter might show the wisdom of raising food for his family and feed for his livestock on his own farm first, then plant cotton for a money crop. Since the farmers could not be brought to meet the agricultural workers it was necessary that the workers go out into the State to meet the farmers. It was a stupendous undertaking, but the business men gave generously of their time and their money, and the great work was accomplished. The campaign continued six weeks and the campaign workers met and talked with 2,000 to 3,000 persons each day. Forty-three counties were visited, including all that are large producers of cotton, and more than 150,000 people were reached.

A Prosperous 1915

The result was that, although cotton was bringing only a fair price Arkansas in 1915 enjoyed one of the most prosperous years in her history, and the success of this first campaign was so pronounced that it has started a movement for better farming in Arkansas the importance of which it is impossible to overestimate. The Little Rock Board of Commerce has established a Profitable Farming Bureau, and will have an agriculturalist at its head. He will keep alive this interest of the business men all over Arkansas. He will confine most of his efforts to the business men and will work hand in hand with the other agencies.

The Man Bodman

In seekiug an interview with hte man best qualified to give out authoritative information concerning the plan and carrying on of this campaign. the writer was referred to Mr. E. J. Bodman, secretary of the Union Trust Company, and chairman of this Profitable Farming Bureau of Little Rock, and an appeal was made to him for an outline of the work and the operation of the campaign. Busy man though he is, this request was granted for the help and encouragement it may be to those engaged in a similar campaign in our own state. In this connection acknowledgement must be made to Mr. Clyde A. Dew, night editor of the Arkansas Gazette, himself familiar with the worsing of the campaign, for his assistance in obtaining this interview, and in reviewing is that no misquotations inadvertently appeared.

This entire article might be devoted to a description of Mr. Bodman's pleasing personality, his great activity, and his able assistance in this gigantic, State-saving work, but, like all truly useful men he is modest, has no proclivity for self-glorification. and does not like to be extolled. Since he would not talk about himself, two of his acquaintances, not given to blandishments, have talked about him.

"With regard to Mr. Bodman," said one of them, "the word 'hustler" only mildly describes him, and the word efficiency seems to have been coined to fit his case."

The other declared that: "Mr. Bodman is doing a wonderful lot for diversification throughout Arkansas. He is a most intelligent young man, and is of great service to his state."

These, and similar expressions from those who know him and have watched his work will serve to introduce him to those who have not the privilege of his acquaintance.

Skepticism At First

All men who undertake reforms meet with skepticism and antagonism. So it was with Mr. Bodman. When he first took charge of the profitable farming campaign some Little Rock business men of the ultra-conservative type regarded him as a fanatic. The change in their opinions, with the successful progress of his work, may be illustrated by the following story told by the managing editor of a Little Rock newspaper, who himself was active in the campaign.

"There was an old fellow appointed on this Profitable Farming Committee whom I thied to induce to get out and help us," said the editor, "but he balked. 'Why, you and Bodman are crazy,' he informed me. What you are going to do is to get the farmers to quit raising cotton and go to raising watermelons and cantaloupes and garden truck. Then may be the price of cotton will go up and this stuff will spoil on the farmers' hands and they'll run you and Bodman out of the State. I'm not going with you. Not me!' For some reason the man's name was allowed to remain on the committee. and when I met him last summer the first thing he said was: 'Well, well you and I and Bodman didn't know what a great thing we were doing when we started this profitable farming campaign, did we?"

The Secret Of Success

"What is the secret of this remarkable success?" was asked Mr. Bodman. In reply he have gave out the following.

"The two all-important reasons why the profitable farming campaign was a success were that, the newspapers of Arkansas went the limit to help us, and that the agricultural men advocated a safe and conservative program. No enterprise of this nature can succeed without the newspapers. They are the only medium through which you can be sure of reaching the people, and without their help we would have failed.

"To no one is due more credit for the success of the campaign than to Fred Heiskell, managing editor of the Arkansas Gazette, who was in charge of the publicity end of the campaign. He left nothing undone to place the subject of diversified farming before the people. They couldn't get away from it. Every time they picked up a paper—daily, weekly, monthly, religious or sporting—there was the doctrine of diversified farming staring them in the face. Public sentiment was moulded to such an extent that it was impossible to find anyone who was not an advocate of the safe farming policy.

Gazette's Big Work

"His own paper, the Gazette, which has the largest circulation of any in Arkansas, gave column after column. As a newspaper man, he knew that he was giving the campaign more space than it deserved, viewed purely from its newspaper value, but he was convinced that he was rendering the State a great service and he kept hammering away.

"It was recognized that, to be successful, the campaign must be worked out along lines that would not carry too radical changes. There was danger that the people might raise things for which there was no established market, and thus they would be disappointed and turn back to the one-crop system never to break away from it again. 'Let's confine ourselves to non-perishable crops.' 'Let's grow into live stock raising.' 'Let's see that the fertility of our soil is maintained, use better farming methods, produce more cotton and other crops on fewer acres.'

Everybody Cooperated

Co-operating in the campaign were agents of the United States Department of Agriculture, the University of Arkansas and the four State agricultural schools, officers and leading members of the Arkansas Farmers Union, agricultural commissioners of the railroads in Arkansas, the International Harvester Company, express company officials and employees, the Arkansas Federation of Women's Clubs, members of the Arkansas Jobbers' Association, bankers, editors. ministers, and many others. The combined forces were put under the direction of Dean Martin Nelson of the College of Agriculture of the University.

"The agricultural workers canvassed each county in one or two days. They were divided into parties of four or five, each of whom was a specialist in some branch of agriculture, and starting from some town, usually the county seat, these parties traveled in automobiles over routes mapped out in advance. Meetings were held in churches schoolhouses, stores, and homes, wherever it was convenient for the farmers to meet. Local business men accompanied the speakers, and gave the experts valuable information concerning local conditions, and their endorsements of the speakers gave the farmers confidence in them. The communities visited were put to no expense save the unaboidable ones of hotel bills and the furnishing of automobiles. The organization expenses and the hotel bills of members of the central organization at Little Rock were paid by Little Rock business men, the amount being about $3,000.

The Results

"As a result of this campaign, many of the farmers of Arkansas are enjoying a better living than ever before. Many are independent and happy in the realization that they are dependent upon no one except themselves for their daily bread. Silos have been erected all over the state, a great impetus has been given the live-stock industry and more attention is being paid to marketing requirements. A spirit of cordial co-operation has grown up between the farmer and the business man. The business man has come to realize that his success depends upon that of the former and he is taking advantage of every opportunity to aid him.

"At the recent convention of the Arkansas Bankers Association in his address as president, B. C. Powell said: 'If I might be allowed to write the epitaph of my administration, I would place on the headboard the single word: Agriculture. I say this for the reason that I have, as your president, devoted pratically eight weeks of my time to this one subject and say, with some degree of modesty that my time has been well spent.'

"And in conclusion, President Powell said: 'The government forces in Arkansas report Arkansas farmers to be worth $30,000,000 more than they were on the same date in 1914 and of this amount there was, according to the recent report of the State banking commissioner, $10,000,000 of this increase in actual cash in the banks of Arkansas. I merely ask this question—is it worth while to aid the farmer?'

"This work is still going on. The Little Rock Board of Commerce has established a Profitable Farming Bureau with an expert at its head who will vitalize the interests of the business men of the State. His activities will be confined largely to the business men but he will co-onerate closely with the other agricultural agencies.

New Extension Department

"The public has come to appreciate the work of the agriculturist and this made it possible to secure from the last Legislature an appropriation which in turn secured an appropriation from the Federal Government and thus made it possible to maintain an efficient agricultural extension division of the University of Arkansas.

"An important feature of the follow-up work has been the formation of pig clubs among the farmers' boys and girls. The banks have loaned to the children of responsible farmers money to buy a pure-bred pig. The boy's or girl's note is the only security taken. A low rate of interest is charged and the borrower is allowed to pay from the proceeds of the increase of his pig. In this way, more than 2,000 have been distrubuted already this year.

Safe Farming

"The benefits to the farmer have been permanant. This spring there seemed danger that the fair price for cotton and the high price of cotton seed last year would cause many farmers to plunge on cotton. A campaign was started to prevent this. Business men all over the State were interested. They were made to see that it was to their own interest to warn their farmer customers of the folly of abandoning the 'living at home' plan which had proven so successful. The wholesalers instructed their traveling salesmen to preach safe farming as they made the rounds of their customers. The Little Rock Board of Commerce and the Arkansas Bankers Association sent out nearly one million copies of pamphlets touching on the subject and every mail of jobbers and bankers for more than 60 days carried circulars urging a continuation of safe farming. The St. Louis wholesalers who have a large trade in the Southwest were induced to join in the campaign.

Increase In Livestock

"We have every reason to believe that this latest campaign has been successful. While the cotton acreage doubtless has been increased, there will be vastly greater acreages of food and feed stuffs planted than was the case before last year. The live-stock industry has received a wonderful impetus. All over the state, the bankers are assisting the farmers in buying pure-bred stock. This movement will go steadily forward. I do not believe Arkansas ever again will revert to the one-crop system and diversificaton of crops wil grow in popularity as the people realize the immense and far-reaching benefits.

"I believe that the business men of Arkansas and of every other Southern state will find it to their own advantage to aid the farmer in every way possible, not only this year and next year but for many years to come."

The movement has been planned and worked out with such care and operated along such sane lines that two vital results have been accomplished The first is that the farmers have not plunged into the growing of perishable crops for which there was no established market, but are developing gradually and safely into the raising of fruit and truck and livestock; and second that the Committee has succeeded in getting the endorsement and co-operation of all agricultural and business agencies in the State.

LITTLE RAGGED BABY

There's a little ragged baby
In most every woman's heart,
Like the kind you see so often
Toddling at some big child's side;
And the love that makes them holy,
And that sets them so apart,
What a wonder and a magic in its tide!

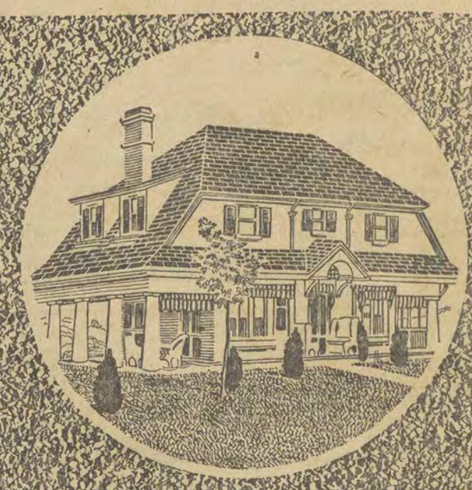
Just a little ragged baby—
But it's her child, Heaven knows,
And it's not a point of beauty
Nor a question of its clothes;
It's the baby, just the baby,
With its spiritual hold on love
That sets it in its tarnished gown
All heavenly gifts above.

At the doorstep in an alley,
At some garden gate way down
Where the fringes of green country
Keep on creeping into town—
Every little ragged baby
In its own sweet world apart
Reigns with unabated glory
In some woman's tender heart.

TWELVE HUNDRED BABIES DIED.

ENORMOUS LOSS OF LIFE IN LARGE CITIES.

Twelve hundred and ten babies died in the city of St. Louis in 1915 and half of the deaths were caused by ignorance on the part of those who had the care of them.



This is the startling statement made in an editorial of The St. Louis Post-Dispatch in issue of March 2, 1916, and continuing, the paper said that much of that ignorance can be removed.

Mothers can learn without cost how to care for their children by writing for a copy of a booklet that has just been published and called "Healthy Babies," says the National Druggist, published in St. Louis, in the March, 1916 issue, and this journal says this booklet can not fail to remove much of that ignorance and hence will tend to save many human lives.

It gives suggestions to prevent underfeeding and overfeeding, when and how to wean the baby, the care of the bottle, how to avoid the petty troubles like chafing, prickly heat and numerous other subjects are treated in such manner as to be easily understood by every mother.

Any mother can secure a copy of this valuable booklet free by writing the C. J. Moffett Medicine Co., 1315 1st Avenue, Columbus, Ga. The Moffett Company are the manufacturers of "Teethina," a preparation for children that has had a most successful sale since 1877. Write for a copy today, a postal card will do.

To Farmers of Boll Weevil Sections:-

THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG will do effective and rapid work in brushing to the ground boll weevils and punctured squares.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is a strong, practical and economical device for getting rid of the most weevils in the QUICKEST TIME and the CHEAPEST WAY. It is used and highly recommended by some of the most successful farmers in Mississippi and Alabama.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is the best device known for the use of tenant farmers in fighting the weevil.

THE DRAG DESCRIBED

The Drag is a steel rod that holds a light durable chain, the rod and chain being attached to the beam of the plow stock with a casting arranged so as to be adjustable to the size of plants at the time for plowing. The rod is placed at an angle to the beam and as the plow proceeds down the row the rod bends down the plant over towards the middle between the rows and the chain agitates the plant sufficiently to cause the Weevil and infested squares to fall off into the middle of the row. The attachment is reversible as well as adjustable, up and down, and can be used on either right or left side of the plow below or above the beam.

We do not desire to create the impression among farmers that any device will prevent all the damage the weevil usually causes, unless the approved measures for control be carefully followed.

Feeding Turkeys For The Market This Fall

A thorough investigation of the methods of feeding young turkeys shows to what extent general rules already cited are followed. While all who succeed seem to adopt nearly the same methods, there are a few differences worthy of consideration. Some feed bread and milk in a saucer as soon as the poults will eat, while others soak bread and milk and squeeze it dry before feeding; some adhere closely to an absolute grain diet, while others feed every thing they imagine the poults will eat.

Copying Nature.

It should never be forgotten that in the wild state their food was the bugs worms, seeds, etc., which they could find themselves, and which were hunted for and scrambled after constantly. There was then no overfeeding upon rich unnatural foods that impaired health and produced bowel troubles or other ailments that naturally follow unwholesome food. They subsisted by their own efforts in the wild state while now they are quite too often forced to eat unnatural foods that are furnished in hope of forcing them to an unnatural growth. If the grower wishes to copy nature as nearly as possible the young poults may be given for their first meal very fine oatmeal or finely cracked wheat or corn with a little fine grit of some kind and a very little granulated meat scrap. Some of the commercial brands of "poultry food" are also good. They should have clean water convenient where they can help themselves at will.

Bread and Milk.

As a general rule do not feed them wet food or slops. Poults are seed-eating chicks, not slop eaters. Bread and milk, however contains elements most valuable in the growing of all kinds of fowls. This food should be considered when properly given, as one of the best kinds of feed for the first day or two. Soak stale bread in sweet milk, press out the milk as completely as possible, and feed the bread to the young poults. Be careful never to use sour milk, nor should the bread thus prepared ever be fed after it has become sour. Feed this a little at a time every hour or two for two days or more; then add a little hard boiled egg shell and all broken fine, to the soaked bread.

Meat In Ration.

After a day or two on this ration follow with the ration of finely broken grain already described and include a little finely cut meat. Make sure that the meat scrap is pure and sweet Nothing is more injurious to the poults than tainted or infected meat of any kind, as it will disturb their bowels in a very few hours and cause great trouble. Lean beef well cooked and cut into very small fragments is good. Be very cautious about feeding green meat or bone. If any of this is fed have it cut quite fine, giving but little at first and be absolutely certain that it is fresh and sweet. Cooked meat is better for them while young.

Supply of Grit.

Coarse sand is excellent for grit, and if sufficient of this is at hand no other grit will be needed but plenty of some kind is a necessity, for without it the poults can not grind their food.

Danger of Overfeeding.

Food should be given them quite early in the morning and at frequent intervals during the day. Never overfeed them, but use discretion in providing plentifully for their necessities. Give them all they will eat willingly and no more. Avoid the use of rich foods grains in hulls, and millet seed, which is not good for them while they are young, a little of this seed, however, may be fed as they grow older. Too much hard boiled egg is bad for them, while a reasonable amount with bread is beneficial. An excess has a tendency to clog and congest the bowels and the writer has seen poults die from the effects of a diet exclusively of egg and millet seed. The same injurious effect may be produced by feeding entirely with milk curds.

Bowel Trouble.

Bowel trouble must be considered as an assured result of improper feeding and may be aggravated by exposure to cold and dampness. Indigestion is a prime factor in the development of this ailment that kills so many turkeys while young. This should be prevented so far as possible by the feeding of finely broken charcoal, which is a safeguard against fermentation in the crop or gizzard thus aiding digestion. This looseness of the bowels should not be mistaken for cholera. It may usually be relieved by feeding rice that has been boiled almost dry in milk.

Early Fall Feeding.

As soon as the weather begins to turn cool and insect food becomes scarce, an increased grain diet must be provided for the growing turkeys. A ration of wheat and corn is the best. Do not feed them too much at first, but gradually increase the supply until they are having all they will eat.

Those who succeed best in having the turkeys ready and in fine condition for the early market are those who allow them their freedom and feed them all they will eat of wholesome fattening grain. Even while finishing them it is not well to confine them. If they are fed each day at regular hours and at the same place, it will be in easy matter to have them come three times a day to this place to be fed. Their longing for food being fully supplied, less violent exercise will be taken and the energy that would be expended in their wandering in search of food will be directed in the more profitable channel of growing and developing for market. Turkeys that are poorly fed during the fall expend in seeking food that is no longer attainable considerable of the flesh they may have gained.

When feeding turkeys for markets it must be remembered that they will sell for considerably more per pound than can be obtained for hogs or cattle while the actual food cost per pound of turkey meat is but little if any more than for hogs or cattle. It will always pay well to give to growing turkeys all the grain they can eat.

Says Diet Helps Cure Pellagra

No Longer Any Uncertainty About Conquering Dreaded Malady.

Pellagra investigations conducted by the U. S. government of Health show that diet is an important factor in curing Pellagra. However, Dr. Hendon advocates not only a nutritious diet to help the patient gain strength but the use of Baughn's Pellagra Treatment, which really effects a cure by getting at the cause. The Baughn treatment has been so successful that it is now sold with a positive guarantee to cure pellagra or the money will be refunded. The best way to find out all about pellagra and its cure is to write to Dr. Hendon, care American Compounding Company, box 3091, Jasper, Ala., asking for their big book on pellagra, which is sent free in plain wrapper.

Vaccination Prevents Black Leg in Calves

For the highest profits in stock raising it is necessary to keep the herds and flocks free from disease. In this connection some cattlemen just at this time are protecting their yearling calves from black leg which is also known as black quarter or quarter evil. This disease seldom attacks animals over two and one half years old, and may be easily recognized by the following symptoms.

There is usually a large swelling in either the front or hind leg, involving the entire quarter. This swelling will crackle under pressure, due to the presence of gas generated by the bacteria which causes the disease As a rule the swelling does not extend below the knee or hock. If the calf dies very suddenly of this disease without this swelling, a post-mortem examination will show the blood and muscles to be black and frothy, and a foul odor will be given off, due to the accumulation of gases in the tissues.

"This disease," states Dr. Ranck, "cannot be cured, and when a pasture becomes infected preventive measures must be taken at once. All young animals running on such pastures should be vaccinated against black leg each spring by the injection of a small pellet of virus under the skin on the side of the neck. These pellets may be bought from the local druggist, and may be used by any farmer. Directions for making the injection are printed on the package.

"Burn all calves dying with black leg, by digging a ditch, filling it with wood, placing the carcass on top covering all with oil and setting on fire. All young calves are susceptible.

"Laying By" Late Fills the Corn Cribs

Make sure of a full corn crib this year, by keeping up the corn cultivation a few weeks longer. Experiments show that two additional cultivations will add materially to the yield in some cases as much as twelve bushels to the acre. There can be no doubt that some farmers loose a large per cent of the possible corn crop by "laying by" too early.

When corn is bunching to tassel it requires a good suply of moisture, and the best way in which this can be supplied, according to J. R. Hicks of the Mississippi A. and M. College Experiment Station, who gives the above timely information, is by cultivation to a depth of about two inches at regular intervals of ten days to two weeks until the tassel begins to show. Cultivation to a greater depth than two inches is likely to do more harm than good, because it cuts off the feed roots and results in partial starvation of the plant.

"The best results in most cases are obtained when the "laying by" leaves the corn rows flat." Mr. Ricks said, 'and the most satisfactory tool for this work is a small cultivator or 'buzzard wing' sweep." To those farmers who habitually "lay by" their corn with a turning plow, leaving it on high ridges, he suggests that an experiment be tried by cultivating a field of corn shallow and flat by the side of a field worked in the old way. In this way every man may determine for himself the value of the experiment station methods

JO'S DIAGNOSIS.

A colored man entered the general store of a small Ohio town and complained to the storekeeper that a ham he had purchased there a few days before had proved not to be good.

"The ham is all right, Joe" insisted the storekeper.

"No it ain't boss," insisted the other "Dat ham's sure bad."

"How can that be,' continued the storekeeper, 'when was cured only last week?"

Joe reflected solemnly a moment and then suggested:

"Maybe it's done had a relapse."

These Are the Women Who Are Showing Us How to Live at Home

Yes, but it is really more attractive than it looks even.

But first see who these ladies are before reading about what they are doing for Alabama. From right to left they are:

Middle Row—Miss Madge J. Reese, State Agent; Miss Genie Martin, Tallapoosa; Miss Leo Zeigler, Elmore; Miss Anne Elizabeth Duncan, Franklin.

Bottom Row—Miss Annie Kemp, Macon; Miss Zelma Gaines, Autauga; Miss Mary Frank Sturdevant, Conecuh, Miss Louise Thomas, Madison; next two not agents; Miss Stella Harris, Marengo; Miss Mary Paxton Assistant State Agent; Mrs. Jessica E. McGuire Mobile; Miss Dora Etta Davis, Walker Mrs. Selma Ash, St. Clair; Miss Lucile Carter, Escambia; Mrs. Bessie C. Collins Moore, Lee.

Now these ladies, as you know by this time, are the canning club and home economics leaders in the various counties in Alabama. These are the women who are helping mightily to bring a new spirit of industry and efficiency among our people.

This canning club and home economics work is of great importance for it goes right to the foundation of our success as a producing people.

Table Keeps Folks Poor

What keeps many families poor are the constant expenditures for the table—butter, eggs, meats, vegetables grains and preserves. Is it not so There are thousands upon thousands of people in every State in the Union who could get ahead fast and have something for investment if it were not for the everlasting cost of keeping up the table.

Now these women are showing us how we can set a good table both summer and winter with small cost—and have something to sell besides. They are showing our girls and our women how to make the most of a garden—how to can all the surplus vegetables and fruits by the cold pack method; how to make the best preserves; how to save money every day in the year and make something to spend besides. What a big, fine work this is—and how much it is needed in every community. What efficient, progressive and successful homes we would have if all our girls and women had a real love for gardening and canning and took genuine pride in their preserves and canned vegetables and fruits.

Home Making.

What a big part these canning club girls and women have in home building. Every country community, every town, every city needs more girls and women in the canning club work that is made so interesting and efficient by Miss Madge Reese, the State agent and her earnest and capable co-workers.

Already there are hundreds, yes thousands, of intelligent, earnest women in Alabama who are in line with the work and who are making it count in dollars and cents as well as in home-making. This work is at the very bottom of home-building and what greater subject is there for any people, ours especially, than home-building?

What It Leads To.

The canning club work is the start What does it lead to? It leads to larger and better gardens, home sanitation, home conveniences and home charm Go into the home where the mother and the girls help look after the garden can the fruits and vegetables and do a good deal of preserving and you will find that home neat and attractive. You will find it with some home conveniences and comforts and with a home like, industrious atmosphere—a home in which the boys and girls grow up to be industrious and capable men and women.

anning Demonstrations.

But let us get back to the ladies of the picture. Several days ago they met at Auburn to outline the work for the season in Alabama. There they canned beans, tomatoes, berries and peaches in glass and tin and practiced sealing the cans to become more expert in the work. The new agents showed exceptional skill and fitness for the work they have taken up. These demonstrations were in charge of Miss Reese, the State Agent, and Miss Mary Paxton, assistant State Agent.

Among the interesting reports were those from the eight new counties which have been organized since the first of the year. The new counties are: Lauderdale, Madison, Escambia, Coosa, Elmore, Lee, Talladega, and Tallapoosa. Although some of these new agents have only been in their counties a few weeks they have a large enrollment of Canning club members. There are about 2,500 Canning Club girls in Alabama this year. Conveniences for the farm home were discussed and each agent reported how many fireless cookers, iceless refrigerators and fly traps her club members had made.

The pleasant surprise of the week was the visit of Mr. O. B. Smith of the U. S. Department of Agriculture of Washington D. C.

How About It.

Now isn't this fine and interesting work? Isn't it work that counts? Isn't it a whole lot better than the old-time methods of cooking everything to death in a roasting hot kitchen before putting it into the Mason jar? Doesn't it make you want to get in with a canning club and save money and have better things to eat Isn't it something for your daughter to learn if she ever expects to get married—which she surely does—and have a home of her own?

NEW RECORD FOR ALFALFA

That the Delta Branch Experiment Station at Stoneville, Miss., is setting a new record for alfalfa growing, in some very efficient experiments now under way is the report given out by Director E. R. Lloyd of the Mississippi Stations, who has recently returned from an inspection trip to the Stoneville Station.

Director Lloyd reports that a five acre field of alfalfa started four years ago, on which a bunch of hogs have constantly grazed since the first year and on which 142 head of sheep were pastured in addition, to the brood sows during last winter through January, was cut for hay in April and averaged a ton and a half to the acre the first cutting. Since then this field has carried 85 hogs averaging over 100 pounds in weight, and would easily yield from 1000 to 1,500 pounds of hay if cut now.

In the plot work with alfalfa at this station farm the first cutting in April from the plot on which one-half ton of basic slag was used, yielded 4,950 pounds, nearly two and a half tons, and the alfalfa is ready to cut again. This hay was sold for $15 a ton and Director Lloyd estimates that the season's crop on this plot will bring in over $80 an acre.

New Inventions That Are Useful to Farmers And Others

This spring seat rests on four rods each of which passes through a coile spring and a sleeve, and is fastened b a nut beneath the sleeve.

The seat can be placed anywhere o the box.

Mulching Hoe.

The blade of this hoe is long, thin and narrow and is sharpened on both edges. Its angle is adjusted by means of a winged nut.

It is claimed that it is a very efficien weeder and mulcher.

The new feature here is the method used to move the shovels in and out. The handles are so hinged to a cross bar that when they are moved together the shovels are moved apart and when they are moved apart the shovels are brought together.

Trap Nest.

The spring bolt, which supports the door of this nest, is drawn back when the hen enters the nest compartment and the door falls to the closed position. The nests may be arranged in steps as shown.

The shank of this fork is pivoted at the upper end and bears against a strong spring. This, it is claimed, enables the operator to throw bundles farther than he could with an ordinary fork. It is used in pitching bundles of grain, and the like, from a wagon to a stack or loft.

Picking Harness.

The shoulder straps of this harness are made of canvas and of leather. The hooks, which support the pail, have each a roller at the upper end which hold the pail in any position by friction.

Delicious Things That Can Be Made With Figs---How to Make Them

By W. J. Warrington, Alexander, La.

Care should be taken to prevent fruits from falling and they should be handled very carefully to prevent bruising. Bruised or broken figs decay quickly.

A very handy arrangement for gathering figs is a tomato can fastened on a light lath or pole—the pole may be of any length desired. A portion of the rim of the can should be filed away and the edge of the can thus exposed to a cutting edge. Gather your figs every day or not less than every two days. They should be gathered within about 12 hours of ripe. Thoroughly ripe figs begin to sour quickly and over-ripe figs disintegrate and loose their shape when cooked.

Saving the Waste.

The fig grower, if he pursues the right methods, may, strange to say, often turn the refuse fruits, the over-ripe, broken and unmarketable fruits into more dollars actual net profit than the choice, selected fruits which are marketed fresh.

The over-ripe, broken and rejected figs which are left from the daily marketing, together with such other fruits as are not taken to market, should be peeled and preserved or canned in accordance with instructions given in the recipes. The canned and preserved products, when in excess of the needs of the home, should be divided as follows: The large, whole figs should be lifted with a ladle and placed in glass bottles or jars, the broken (not whole) unshapely fruits should be placed in quart and half-gallon tins. The remaining thoroughly disintegrated fruits should be stirred and crushed to a jam, well cooked and placed in half or gallon tins. All should be finished and sealed as per canning instructions.

Neat Package Needed.

Some neat, attractive labels, indicating the quality and contents of each can will assist you in establishing a market, a known standard of quality and a good demand at fancy prices for your products. There's money made in saving and utilizing the waste.

By an investment of a few dollars you can own and install a small canning and sterilizing boiler and furnace together with complete equipment necessary in operating it. A small canning outfit will not only assist you in saving and marketing the fig crop but will be of inestimable value in saving and marketing other fruits, snap beans, pickles, corn, sweet potatoes and many other vegetables.

Have Stem On.

Figs that are to be preserved or canned for the market should have about half an inch or a little less of the stem on them as this stem is necessary in holding the fig together in the process of preserving.

How to Prepare Fruit.

Soak figs in a strong solution of soda and water for a few minutes, the length of time depending upon toughness of skin and variety of fig. When tender, remove and wash well in clear water; soak a few minutes in weak limewater to firm them; rinse and prepare as follows:

A few tender fig leaves boiled in the syrup increases the flavor. Remove leaves before figs are put in. Another popular addition, in place of fig leaves is to place a few slices of lemon in the boiling syrup.

Fig Preserves.

Fresh gathered figs, any variety, about two-thirds ripe; prepare as above To 7 pounds of figs, take 5 pounds of sugar. Make a thick syrup dip in figs and boil slowly for fifteen minutes. Let stand in syrup until next day and finish in steam pressure retort.

Canned Fruits.

Put up in tin cans. Prepare as above: make a light syrup of 2 to 4 pounds of sugar to 10 pounds of figs. Fill cans or jars with figs and turn cool syrup over them; seal and cook. If using open kettle, leave vent hole open and exhaust ten minutes. Close vent hole and boil 2 pound cans 30 minutes. If steam pressure canner is used, pack cold, seal tight and cook thirty minutes at 220 degrees of heat. This turns out a firm crisp product that is unsurpassed.

Canned Figs in Glass.

Prepare figs after formulas given for canning in tin; use the standard 4, 11 and 16 ounce bottles to be had of any glass manufacturing house. Fill bottles with hot preserves—fasten down top with clamp and place in retort; raise the temperature to 180 degrees and hold that temperature from 15 to 30 minutes, according to size of bottles or jars. This cannot be done with steam gage, as gagues do not register temperature below 212 degrees. Should temperature be below 170 degrees, one takes the chance of preserve spoiling. If above 190 degrees the flavor and color of fruit is injured. After the bottles have been submitted to the above temperature for the required time, take out of retort and when cold, remove clamp. Tops should be on so firmly that one can lift bottles with them. Put up and tested this way, there is absolutely no chance of fig preserves spoiling. Should top be loose, the seal is imperfect and bottles will require another processing. This, though does not often occur.

Glass is preferable, not only for home use, but for marketing. Bar far the best bottles or jars we are acquainted with, are the Hazel-Atlas Fig Jars in the following sizes:

No. 1762, 4 ounces, $3.80 per gross.
No. 5004, 11 ounces, $4.85 per gross.
No. 5152, 16 ounce, $8.50 per gross.

Fig Pickles.

One of the most delightful pickles made. Prepare as above. Soak figs six hours in rather weak salt water and rinse. To each quart of good cider or cane vinegar, add 2 pounds of sugar cinnamon, cloves and allspice to taste Simmer over a slow fire for an hou and strain. Place figs in a kettle, turn pickle over and simmer till figs are clear. Use glass or stone jar and seal. Will keep without sealing.

Dried Figs.

Any variety. The large white and yellow figs are preferable. Prepare as above. Boil in thick syrup till clear lip out and drain. Spread on plates or wooden platters and place in sun, or in a dryer, to dry. This takes several days. Turn figs every day and press them flat. When well dried, dust them with powdered sugar and pack in boxes or jars. Or can be layered in granulated sugar. The above produces a dried fig very much superior to the best commercial fig.

Crystalized Figs.

Prepare as for drying. Roll in granulated sugar. Boil the syrup very thick, dip in figs, drain, roll in sugar and dry. Repeat two or three times until thoroughly coated with crystalized sugar.

Fig Pudding.

Two cups dried figs, chopped fine, dredge in flour; three eggs well beaten; 1-2 cup chopped beef suet or cottolene; 1 teaspoonful baking powder; 2 cups dried breadcrumbs; 2 scant cups milk 1-2 cup sugar; a little salt. Soak breadcrumbs in milk and add eggs beaten light. Add other ingredients, including enough flour to make a stiff batter (add flour last). Beat three minutes. Pour into buttered mold and bake; or tie up loosely in cloth and boil for one hour. If you are fortunate enough to possess a steam canner, place the pudding in a covered pan on the raised crate and cook 1-2 hour at ten pounds pressure. Serve with hard sauce made with butter, sugar and nutmeg or with cream and sugar.

Fig Fruit Cake.

One cup butter or cottolene; 4 cups flour; pinch of salt; 1-2 cup wine or milk; 2 teaspoons ground cinnamon; 1-2 teaspoon nutmeg; 2 cups sugar; 1 teaspoon baking powder; 2 pounds chopped dried figs; 2 tablespoons lemon juice; 1-2 teaspoon cloves; 1-2 teaspoon allspice; 6 eggs. Sift flour and baking powder together; add salt and spice to taste. Dredge fruit with flour. Cream butter, lemon juice, sugar and yolks of six eggs. Stir in sifted flour and the whites of eggs beaten to a stiff froth, then the chopper figs and last, if necessary, add a little more flour. Line cake pans with several thicknesses of greased paper. Bake in slow oven.

Fig Layer Cake.

One and one-half cups sugar; 1-2 cup of butter or cottolene; 1-2 sweet milk a little salt; 1 teaspoonful baking powder sifted into two cups of flour; whites of six eggs well beaten (or three whole eggs). Mix and beat. Bake in shallow long pans.

Filling for Layer Cake.

One pound dried figs chopped fine; 6 tablespoons sugar; a little boiling water. If desired add a little lemon. Cook slowly until it becomes a paste and spread between cakes.

Dainty Dinner Sweet.

A delicious little sweet is made by running crystallized figs through a food chopper, preparing pecan meats, or a mixture of nuts, the same way, and then mixing the ground nuts and figs together, form into small spheres like marbles and roll lightly in powdered sugar.

Fig Bread.

Fig bread is made by adding chopped preserved figs, (drained from syrup), to yeast bread when mixing the dough to rise the first time and baking in small oblong loaves. This is especially fine with whole wheat bread and chopped pecan meats can be added. Buttered slices of this bread make splendid sandwiches for the school child's lunch, for the home lunch, or for the daintiest tea.

Big Questions to Come Up At Meeting of Cotton Seed Crushers This Week

Some mighty timely and important problems will be discussed at the eleventh annual meeting of the Alabama Cotton Seed Crushers Association to be held at Pensacola, Florida on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, June 14, 15 and 16.

This meeting is being looked forward to as the most important in the entire history of the association because of the new phases of the cottonseed crushing industry that will come up. For instance, everybody knows that there has been and probably will be a shortage in cottonseed with corresponding high prices. Many of the mills are looking to the crushing of peanuts for peanut oil and soy beans for soy bean oil and velvet beans as well. This crushing for oil on a large scale by the Alabama mills of peanuts and soey betan particularly is something new and something that may mean many thousands of dollars into the pockets of the producers of peanuts and soy beans as well as profit to the mills.

There are other new phases of the industry that will also come up and the facts brought out in the discussion of these will doubtless have great bearing on future operations of the oil mills.

The First Day.

As the industry, in its enlarged scope, will affect the entire people of the state, the public is more than deeply interested in the coming meeting and every member on the program.

The meeting will be called to order at the San Carlos hotel in Pensacola on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock by the president of the Association, J. W. Radney, of Roanoke The invocation will be delivered by Rev Dr. A. S. Moffatt, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Pensacola, and the address of welcome will be delivered by E. R. Malone president of the American National Bank. C. W. Ashcraft, of Florence, will make the response.

Following Mr. Ashcraft's talk, the report of the secretary-treasurer, C. E. McCord, of Prattville, will be made Then will come President Radney's address to the Association.

After the president's address, C. N. Lanier, of Lineville, will speak on "The Object of our Association, What it Stands for and its Benefits."

A general discussion will follow, led by E. Lamar of Selma.

C. P. Collins of Dallas, Texas, will speak on "Mutual Liability Insurance as handled by the Texas mills."

Boll Weevil Problem.

A vital subject will be that of "Producing Cotton Under Boll Weevil Infestation," and this subject will be handled by J. A. Evans, of the U. S. department of Agriculture, who has had a leading part in fighting the boll weevil since the weevil began to move east from Texas.

Following Mr. Evans the same subjects will be discussed by J. T. Watt U. S. State Farm Demonstration Agent of Alabama, and W. C. (Boll Weevil)' Burley of Louisiana, who is now traveling in the weevil districts of Alabama helping the people in their fight against the cotton destroyer.

After the first day's program there will be an enjoyable boat trip, arranged especially for those attending.

On Thursday.

Thursday's program will open with a talk on "Velvet Beans, Soy Beans and peanuts as an adjunct to cottonseed" given by Dr. H. B. Battle, of Montgomery.

Following this there will be a general discussion of this important subject, led by R. C. Conner, of Enterprise.

Another interesting question will be "The Cotton Plant as a Forage Crop After Boll weevil Destroys Bolls," and this topic will be presented by Dr. D. C. Picard, of Birmingham.

T. J. Kidd, of Birmingham, will speak on "Delinted Hulls and the Fiber Therefrom as an Adjunct to Modern Oil Milling."

The general discussion on this phase will be led by S. J. Cassels, of Montgomery.

The discussion on "Is Our Association Worth the Price?" will be led by H. Del Southerland of Jasper.

At night there will be a banquet at the San Carlos hotel.

Friday's program will be taken up with the report of the committees, resolutions and the election of officers.

PEANUTS

Plant an acre of Spanish peanuts for each brood sow. Her pigs will gather the crop next fall and become fat. At the Alabama Station one acre of Spanish peanuts put the same amount of gain on hogs as 62 bushels of corn. At the Arkansas Station one acre of Spanish peanuts put 1,252 pounds of gain on hogs. At both stations the hogs gathered the crops themselves.

Plant sweet potatoes beside the peanut patch and let the hogs become fat by gathering both crops at the same time. Then feed for four weeks.

Two parts corn, 1 part cottonseed meal to harden the fat.

Spanish peanuts, tops and nuts cured together, will make cows give more milk than any other feed you can raise. It is one of the best feed for horses and mules doing heavy work. It makes brood sows give a heavy supply of milk for their suckling pigs Plant an acre for each horse or mule an acre for each sow, an acre for each cow.

Prize Pigs Got Fo ks to Do Things

How one teacher of sixty pupils in a one-room schoolhouse, situated in the forests of North Carolina, succeeded in getting her pupils interested in practical agriculture with a pig and less than an acre of uncultivated land, is told in a report of one of the field workers of the United States Department of Agriculture.

When the pig arrived the pen was already built by the school children on the school grounds for its reception. The parents were invited and talks on pig raising were made. The rest of the day was spent in driving around to some of the best pig farms in the county where various kinds of live stock were scored and discussed.

The pupils learned that a pig could not thrive entirely on scraps from lunches and occasional ears of corn. An interested member of the school committee offered the use of his team and implements and the pupils started to work clearing the forest land to use as a forage pasture. They then planted crops of rye, wheat, rape, and grass to afford the pig grazing plots of green forage. A cold frame was also put in and cabbage plants were grown for sale, the money thus realized being turned over to buy whatever additional feed was needed to keep the pig.

As a result of the interest aroused, taxpayers and members of the school board have given their support to the establishment of a small demonstration farm. More land is to be purchased and the county agent is to visit the school each week. Since the pig was brought into the school less than a year ago, the membership of the county pig club has more than trebled.

Sterling in Name and Quality

THERE is profit in doing your own threshing when you use a Sterling thresher. The outfit is so efficient you never think of its size. In fact, the small size and light weight are advantages, because the Sterling thresher can be taken over roads and bridges and up hills where the big outfits could not go. It is strong enough to thresh all kinds and conditions of grain, peas, beans and peanuts. It requires no more power than is furnished by a 4, 6, or 8-H. P. IHC kerosene engine. It does clean, thorough work, at low cost. We have sold thousands of these outfits to farmers in the peanut country and today the Sterling thresher is the most popular machine in the South for peanut threshing.

We offer four sizes—21 x 28, 21 x 33, 26 x 33, and 30 x 37. You can buy your outfit either unmounted, for barn floor threshing; mounted on an individual truck, or mounted on a truck with a Titan 4, 6 or 8-H. P. kerosene engine. By the purchase of attachments you can have a Sterling thresher equipped for any kind of threshing ever done by a Southern farmer.

It's no trouble to send catalogues and complete information. Here is an outfit you ought to know about because it's a money maker. Drop us a line at the nearest general agency.

"Cows and Cash"
That's what the author of this book says is the crying need of the South

MR. SAMUEL E. BARNES of Knoxville, Tenn., the author of the book, through long study of the problems of the Southern farmer and planter, has been able to point the way to a steady cash income and greater profits.

He doesn't theorize: he talks facts.

He says that what the South needs is more dairy cows.

He points out the advantages of a cream crop that brings in cash every week or month, along with a cotton or tobacco crop that brings income only once a year—or sometimes not at all.

He tells what kind of cows to get, how to feed and care for them, and how to market their product.

Just fill out the coupon or send the information requested on a post card, mentioning this paper, and the book will be mailed, postage paid.

May Manton's New Patterns For Mother, Big Sister and Boys and Girls

All of the patterns shown here are by May Manton, the noted authority of womens' misses and children's garments. The patterns for the designs, besides allowing for all seams, give the true basting lines and show diagrams for cutting and making. When necessary, each piece of pattern is lettered for identification. Patterns for any one of the designs shown below will be sent you upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps. Send stamps to Pattern Department, Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala. Send now, while these designs are before you.

SMART FROCK

No. 9060.—Here is one of the prettiest frocks that could be offered for the young girls and for the small women. The simple three-piece skirt is gathered at the upper edge and joined to the under-bodice or lining while the sleeveless over-bodice is finished separately. In the picture, a plaid taffeta is combined with plain and is worn over a blouse of Georgette crepe, but there are numberless materials adapted to summer wear that could be utilized. Plain taffeta would be pretty with bands of velvet ribbon. For the simpler frock, cotton voile or cotton crepe or some similar material could be used.

For the 16-year size will be needed 5 1-2 yards of material 36 or 5 yards 44 inches wide for the over-bodice and skirt, 2 1-4 yards 36 for the under-bodice.

The pattern No. 9060 is cut in sizes for 16 and 18 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Pattern Department of Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala., upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

9060 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Dress with Over-Bodice for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years.

9055 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Bungalow Dress or Apron, Small 34 or 36, Medium 38 or 40, Large 42 or 44 bust.

LITTLE FROCK

No. 9069.—All the guimpe frocks are fashionable this season. This one can be given two entirely different effects, for the skirt can be treated as it is on the figure or entirely covered with ruffles. The plainer dress made, as it is here, of the dotted challis with velvet ribbon for the trimming and worn over a guimpe of fine muslin makes a very attractive little afternoon dress. The frock shown in the back view made of net over a taffeta skirt and with a taffeta over-bodice is adapted to dances and occasions of such sort. The skirt is circular and can be sewed to the guimpe or the guimpe and skirt may each be finished with a belt and attached with snap fasteners. The ruffle that forms the peplum is sewed to the over-bodice. If a more dressy effect is wanted, sash-like draperies of silk or of ribbon can be arranged over the shoulders and passed through slashes.

For the 12-year size will be needed 7 1-4 yards of material 27 inches wide, 4 7-8 yards 36 or 4 1-2 yards 44, which 1 1-8 yards 36 inches wide for the guimpe; to make as shown on the figure; 3 3-4 yards 27, 2 1-8 yards 36 or 2 yards 44, for the over-bodice and skirt, and 4 3-4 yards 44 inches wide for the ruggles and guimpe to make as shown in the back view.

The pattern No. 9069 is cut in sizes for girls from 10 to 14 years of age. It will be mailed to any address by the Pattern Department of Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala., upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

9064 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Child's Rompers, 1, 2 and 4 years.

9069 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Girl's Dress, 10 to 14 years.

ROMPERS

No. 9064.—Here are rompers that are warranted to make the small child happy. They are loose and full and he may roll or romp or dig in the sand or enjoy himself in whatever way he pleases with perfect comfort. They are designed for the very little folk, consequently the lower edges are buttoned together while the closing can be made for the full length at the back or above the belt only. On the figure the material is rose colored chambray and the scalloped edges and cross-stitched design are worked in white thread. The needlework is exceedingly simple and easy to do but it makes a very smart and attractive effect. White is pretty embroidered with color. All materials are used for rompers from gingham to silk for many mothers keep the little boys so dressed at all hours of the day and they make rompers of Habutai silk and of crepe de chine for afternoon occasions. These are made in the kimono style that allows perfect freedom for the arms.

For the 2 year size will be needed, 2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 1 5-8 yards 36 or 44.

The pattern No. 9064 is cut in sizes for boys of 1, 2 and 4 years of age. The embroidery design is No. 964 can be used for any size. They will be mailed to any address by the Pattern Department of Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala., upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

HOUSE DRESS

No. 9055.—What we know as bungalow frocks and bungalow aprons are the simple ones that mean little labor for the making and little labor for the laundering. This one is made in the pretty kimono style that is generally becoming. If it is made full length it becomes a gown, if it is cut off shorter it can be utilized as an apron, and in either case, it is drawn on over the head and the closing is effected by a little lacing in the front, in middy style. Consequently it can be adjusted in a jiffy. In the illustration, striped linen is trimmed with the same material in a plain color.

For the medium size will be needed 6 3-8 yards of material 27 inches wide, 5 1-4 yards 36 or 4 1-4 yards 44, with 1-2 yard 36 inches wide for the trimming.

The pattern No. 9055 is cut in three sizes, small 34 or 36, medium 38 or 40, large 42 or 44. It will be mailed to any address by the Pattern Department of Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala., upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

Success Marks Co-operative Shipping of Stock

Farmers' live-stock shipping associations have proved so successful that, although the first was not formed until 1908, the Department of Agriculture now has a list of approximately 500 that are shipping stock in a co-operative way.

No Capital Required.

The main purpose of these associations is to enable their members to ship in carload lots to the central markets instead of being more or less at the mercy of local buyers in disposing of a few animals from time to time. The fact that no capital is required for the organization of such an association, says a new publication of the department, Farmers' Bulletin 718, which deals with this subject, makes these associations possible in communities in which more complicated forms of co-operation would not succeed.

Can Incorporate.

To organize such an association it is necessary only for the farmers of the community to meet together, adopt a simple constitution and bylaws, a sample of which is given in the bulletin already mentioned, to elect officers, and, in turn, for them to appoint a manager. It is recommended, although it is not absolutely necessary, that the organization incorporate. This can be done at a nominal cost—usually not more than $10. For this small expenditure of trouble and money the association usually enables the farmer to market his stock when it is ready instead of compelling him to wait until the local shipper is ready to buy it. He obtains for himself the benefits of the cheaper car-load transportation, and the shipments of the association realize for the owner the market price of his stock less the actual cost of marketing. In particular, it has been found that when thin stock, calves, or lambs are sold in small numbers, the local price is usually very low. It is on this class of stock that the association have been able to save their members the most money.

Methods of Marketing.

In order to avoid misunderstanding, it is important that all stock be marked at the shipping point. This precaution prevents disputes in regard to shrinkage and dockage and assists in making adjustments in case of loss or damage in transit. There are three common methods of marking. Numbers or other characters may be clipped in some conspicuous part of the animal, paint may be employed, or numbered ear tags used. The last method is the least frequent because it is somewhat difficult at the stockyards to get close enough to the animal to see the number on the tag. If the second method is adopted ordinary paint is undesirable, especially for hogs as it does not dry readily enough to prevent smearing. This difficulty may be overcome by using one-fourth varnish. In the case of sheep, however, painting is objectionable because the marks will not scour out and wool manufacturers object to them, and branding fluid therefore is preferable. Whatever system of marking is adopted, the important features are that it should be uniform for all shipments and that the marks should be plain and conspicuous. In many cases hogs are not marked, but are graded by the manager at the shipping point. A record of those subject to dockage is kept in such cases. Marking is advised, however, as a precaution against mistakes.

Since no payments are made for stock shipped until returns from the central market are obtained, these co-operative associations may be formed without capital. All that is necessary is for the farmers to comply with their engagement to furnish the stock to the manager when, where and in such quantities as they say they will. In some associations a fixed sum of money is exacted from a shipper for failure to deliver stock to the manager as agreed. In every case the amount to be exacted should be reasonable and should fairly represent the actual loss which it is estimated the association will suffer as the result of non-delivery. The provision for liquidated damage is proper, because the manager must arrange for a certain amount of car space and if all of it is not used the expense to those who do ship is proportionately greater.

Fuller details in regard to the organization and management of such associations are contained in Farmers' Bulletin 718.

Watermelon Wilt and How To Prevent It

Watermelon wilt is caused by a fungus which lives in the soil and enters the roots, plugging up the water-carrying vessels and preventing the rise of moisture, thus causing the wilting and death of the plant. The leaves of effected plants first droop then rapidly wilt and soon die, the runner dying with them. Upon cutting the main tap root across near the surface of the ground it will be found to present a yellow color in the wood making a distainct contrast with the white color of the healty plant. This yellowing together with the wilted appearance of the vine, makes the identification of the disease easily possible, and the further fact that a field once infected shows the same trouble in succeeding years in the same or an extended area is an additional recognition mark. All commercial varieties of melons appear to be very susceptible to the disease.

Means of Spreading.

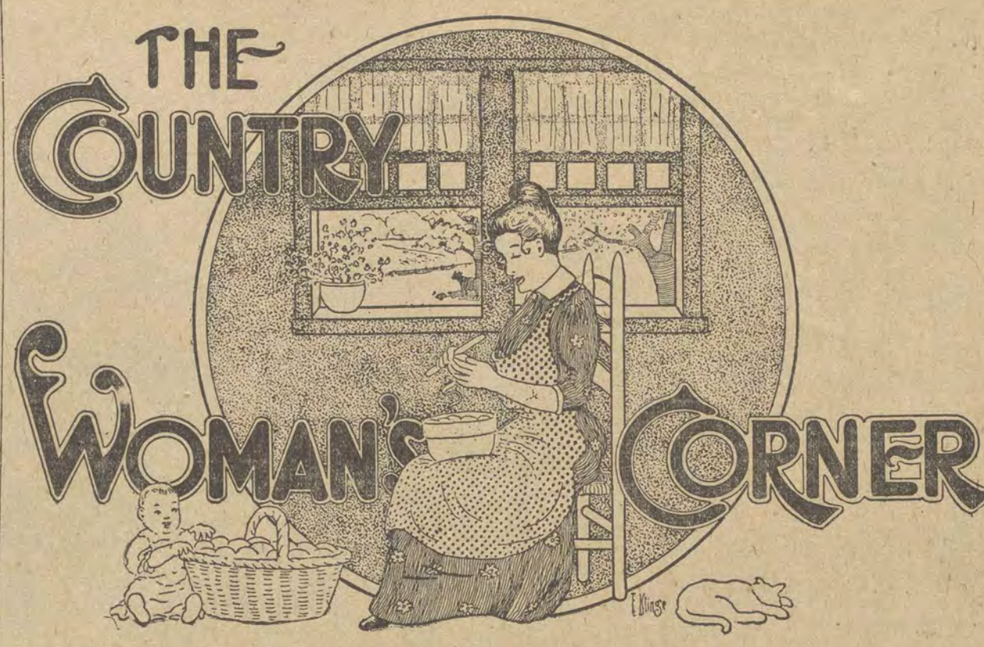
The disease is spread in a number of different ways (1) By particles of earth carrying spores of the fungus, which are easily scattered by the wind by implement used in cultivating and by the feet of men and work animals or stray stock passing from one field to another. (2) By infected stable manure. The fungus lives in the dead vines and the practice of cutting hay from watermelon fields results in some watermelon vines being harvested with the hay and this leads to the presence of the causal fungus in the stable. When the fungus once gains entrance to the arnyard or compost heap, it remains there for years and all the manure taken from such a yard is likely to be infected. (3) By drainage water, flowing from infected to uninfected fields.

Means of Control.

There is nothing that can be done to save a field of melons when once attacked by the wilt, but the disease may be avoided by the following precautions:

1. In infected districts, watermelons should never be planted on land where watermelons have been grown within ten or twelve years, more or less, depending on soil conditions, as experiments have shown that the fungus causing the disease is able to live a long period in the ground. As a matter of practical experience, it is usually possible to secure enough fresh land, so that an adequate supply of watermelons can be grown in any large district without need of recourse to old fields.

2. Stable manure which has become infected by the use of melon hay or refuse containing melon vines should never be applied to the watermelon crop, or to land where it is desired to plant watermelons later.



3. Fields which have received the drainage water from infected fields must be considered and treated as if infected. This means that the farmer having two fields, one of which is on higher ground than the other, should plant the lower field first.

4. As far as possible live stock should be prevented form passing from infected to uninfected fields.

5. Breeding resistent varieties. It has been demonstrated by the Department of Agriculture that varieties of watermelons resistant to wilt can be bred. The strains thus far produced are not recommended for general planting, but it will be worth while for interested localities to have wilt-resistant varieties adapted to their conditions bred.

THE RIGHT ROAD.

Young man, you are a locomotive; you are a thing that goes by a power inside of you; you are made to go. In fact, considered as a machine, you are very far superior to a locomotive. The maker of a locomotive is a man; your maker is man's Maker. You are as different from a horse or an ox or a camel as a locomotive is different from a wheelbarrow or a cart or a coach. Now, do you suppose that the Being who made you manufactured your machine, and put into it the motive power—did not make a special road for you to run upon? My idea of religion is that it is a railroad for a human locomotive; and that just so sure as it undertakes to run upon a road adapted only to animal power it will bury its wheels in the sand, dash itself among rocks, and come to inevitable wreck.—J. G. Holland.

All Ready For Canninng Season

Now that berries and plums are plentiful, and this season's supply is an unusually large one, the question of preparing them for winter use comes up and tho many will stick to their old formulas some will try a new recipe for a change.

To me, blackberries are an unenviable form of preserve owing to the hardened seed in cooking, but canned they are splendid for pies. If canned with a syrup are nice to eat just so. tho their jelly is my preference of all their products.

Homemade Conner

Canning is the fad and every farmwife possesses a desire to own a canning machine and it is a great thing. But if you cannot possess one this year use your galvanized washtub on your cook stove with a cover and quite a good deal can be accomplished in this way. Strips of wood should be placed in the bottom of the tub to set the jars on tho a folded blanket will answer the purpose as well, as the jars will break if set flat upon the bottom of the boiler. If a piece of heavy wire net can be secured it is really better being more sanitary than either of the above mentioned.

Kind Of Jars

A good jar is nescessary for successful canning. Glass is always safest as there is no danger of acids forming a poison as with cans and for home use glass is least expensive as with care they last a lifetime, or at least for years. The glass top jars are most up to date and cheaper in the long run as they do not corrode and crack inside as with tin tops. Select jars having a wide mouth and your fruit and vegetables can be canned whole which adds to their appearance when serving or selling. One of the largest producers of canned goods is now putting his preserves, jams, pickles ect., on the market in glass jars and tho higher in price he says the sales have increased wonderfully since making the change from tin to glass for two reasons customers can see what they are buying and there is no danger from acid poisoning.

Selection And Preparation

Always select firm, yet never under ripe or softly overripe, fruits as they will not keep. Wash all fruits and vegetables thoroughly, pick, cut, stem on pare them and pack in the jars which have previously been well scalded and placed in boiler of hot water up to their necks (outside).

The Syrup

Pour over them a syrup made as follows. One pound of sugar to a gallon of water by measure and boiled until sugar is dissolved; skim and pour over fruit in jars to overflowing. Thick syrup is made of, 3 parts sugar to 2 parts water.

Brine

For vegetables use a brine made of two and a half ounces of salt to a gallon of water.

Canning

Scald all vegetables to peel tomatoes and shrink other vegetables to make them pack closer, by placing them in a wire basket or cloth sack and lowering in boiling water for a few seconds and if placed into a cold dip after scalding they will be firmer pack in jars not close enough to touch and pour the syrup or brine over, put on the cover and screw down until it just catches, no more, as too tight will not allow steam to escape and jars are liable to break. If using the E. Z. Seal jars the spring should be partly pressed on. Place jars in boiler and cover the boiler with a tight cover (board will do if you have nothing else) and when the water starts boiling begin counting your time and not until then. Boil one hour each day for three days and while it seems a tedious process you will not lose a single jar as this intermittent boiling thoroughly sterilizes the contents, destroys all bacteria and will keep for years if air tight.

Air-Tight Test.

After the sterilization set the jars aside for a few days, having securely screwed or clamped down the tops after each boiling, (loosening them of course before each boiling), now release the spring holding down the glass top and if the top does not easily come off by lifting, your jars are ready for year's keeping. Let all jars of goods cool thoroughly before packing away and when stored on your shelves for winter use, keep the jars from touching. Of course these instructions are for family use.

Preserves.

I am only going to give you a few recipes this time for fruits and berries that are ripe now, but later when fruit and melon season is in full swing, I have some fine and unusual recipes in wait for your experiment.

Blackberries.

8 quarts berries, 2 quarts sugar, no water.

Put berries and sugar in kettle and heat slowly. Simmer for a half hour after it begins to boil, put in jars and seal while hot.

Strawberries.

Use berries and sugar poured for pound heating slowly until sugar is melted then boil rapidly twenty minutes and seal up hot.

Cold Canned Strawberries.

Use one pound sugar to each pound af fresh firm berries; scatter sugar between layers of berries and stand in ice box eight or ten hours. Now stir from the bottom with your hand thoroughly. Let stand five or six hours; stir again and put into pint jars; run a knife around the sides to let out air and fill jar to overflowing with juice from berries and sugar and seal.

This recipe will spoil you for hot work.

Jellies.

If housekeepers can be convinced of the advantage of making their jellies by this recipe, all the anxieties attendant upon this season's fruits will be done away with annd the old fashioned long telious method of boiling jelly to a preserve be cast forever aside. Try it and be convinced.

Currants, Blackberries, Strawberries.

Place the fruit into a stone jar which is set in a kettle of warm water over the fire closely covered and let boil until the fruit breaks to pieces. Strain through a cloth bag, pressing hard, a little at a time, turning the bag inside out to scald off pulp and seed after each squeezing. To each pint of juice allow a pound of sugar, setting the juice on the stove alone to boil while you place the sugar in the shallow pie dishes in the oven stirring now and then to prevent burning. Count your time when the juice commences boiling annd when it has boiled twenty minutes by which time the sugar should be thoroughly hot (not melted.. Now throw in the hot sugar, stirring rapidly as it hisses and when dissolved withdraw your spoon, let come to a boil. While you roll your glasses in hot water, then remove kettle from stove and fill glasses with the scalding liquid and in many cases your first glass will begin to set in form before you have filled the last. Both strawberry and blackberry jelly will be better with the juice of a lemon as the acid from a more firm jelly. Put waxed paper or parafine over the jelly before putting on the tin tops.

Jams.

Jams are made of any small fruit or large fruits chopped: Cook with an equal weight of sugar until rich and thick, then sealed in jars or glasses.

Sweet Pickled Plums.

For 4 pounds of fruit allow 1 pint of vinegar, 2 pounds of brown sugar one half mixed spices (cloves, allspice, cinnamon) Tie spices in thin bag and boil ten minutes with the vinegar and sugar. Skim; add fruit; cook till tender; boil down the syrup and pour over fruit in jars and seal. Any fruit or berries may be also pickled this way and are often called "spiced" fruits.

Keep your eyes on this column as it is going to be one of fine recipes during the fruit season. Have you any special way of preparing your fruit and pickles. If so, pass it on through us. I have a request for blackberry wine and one for fruit vinegar. Won't some successfull hand at these things write us the recipe as of course we want none containing anything but the pure fruits and sugar; no alcohol of any kind. Nothing Better Than Sheep on Our Central South Farm

By A. D. Summers, Marion Junction, Ala.

I am becoming quite a "fan" on sheep.

Just learning how to handle them. I have had a few sheep for a number of years, but only recently paid any attention to them. By keeping my ewes my flock has grown to nearly one hundred, counting the lambs, and now I expect to begin culling out the poor ones and build up a better flock.

I have had good rams, but several different breeds, South-Downs, Shropshires, but mostly Oxford Downs. I have a shed which they can run in during the bad weather in the winter, but they seldom take advantage of the opportunity. I get them up in a lot near the house where I can see them every night during the winter.

I occasionally give them a small feed of shell corn or cotton-seed, or in very bad weather, a little hay, but they get melilotus in the fields all winter and that, with a few of the hardier species of weeds, keep them in fairly good order all winter.

My ewes will shear from five to eight pounds of wool with the exception of a few, which while bringing good lambs, are not much wool sheep, and I expect to begin culling them out.

Last year my wool was heavy burry and I sold it for fifteen cents right at home. This year it was only slightly burry and brought thirty-one cents at home.

I have not sold any old sheep for mutton, but I have been selling my lambs at fifteen cents dressed, when they weighed from thirty pounds to forty pounds net sometime in June. The December and January lambs do considerable better than this, for the late lambs grow up very slowly. These are sold right at home.

Dogs have troubled me very little. When they begin coming about, I get down the old gun and we have a shooting match and when one gets a sheep, I don't rest until I get him.

The greatest drawbacks I have found in the sheep business are the stomach worms, but by changing pastures frequently, this trouble can be overcome to a great extent. In fact, the December and January lambs suffer very little from this cause.

The sheep business, like all other business, needs "the eye of the master." A little looking after or personal supervision is as necessary in this as in any other business, and I have yet to find any business which will run itself, although I am constantly running across people who seem to have an idea that they purchase a few cattle hogs or sheep, put them off by themselves in a pasture and draw a regular income from them. They are very much disgusted when the investment does not turn out profitably, and they will go around for the rest of their days with a grouch regarding the particular branch of the industry they invested in, and complaining that there is nothing to it, as they have tried it and can speak from experience."

In my opinion there is about the greatest net profit in a small flock of sheep, well looked after, of any farm product and as far as my personal experience goes, with as little risk.

There is probably not a Southern farmer living on his own farm who could not profitably keep a few sheep. If he only had a half dozen about his house lot, his grove, or his orchard, it would only be a short time until his wife or some of the other members of the family would become attached to them, and those few would be the means of putting someone into the sheep industry.

A few sheep are much less trouble than chickens, much easier to handle than swine and require less time and pasture than cattle and I believe will prove more profitable than any other branch of the live stock industry, as well as being a source of much pleasure.

SWEET PEAS

Sweet peas gave me health and wealth," writes a woman who loves flowers. "Smoetimes they are planted in the autumn and left in the ground all winter, to sprout and grow very early in the spring. In this way one can gather the blooms very early in the summer.

"Usually, I wait until the frost is out of the ground in the spring, then dig a trench and after it is well fertilized with barnyard manure the seeds are planted. One should watch carefully and do it the very first time the frost is out of the ground and it is dry enough.

"I have a 50-foot row along the driveway. This gives them a wire fense to cling to. Getting the peas sprouted and up is not the only trouble. Pigeons and sparrows will pull them up and eat them if not protected with brush for a time.

"They commence to bloom when less than a foot high, and continue to bloom profusely until full grown or nearly as high as my head. They continue to bloom indefinitely as long as they are kept cut. Neglect to cut the blooms and you will soon be out of a job when you want one.

"Early in the season the cutting of the 'sweet peas' is a charming occupation, but later there are times when it is tiring. Nevertheless, they must be cut promptly or they will go to seed. I sell them to a florist for 50 cents per hundred. It is best to engage them early as well as plant them early. White ones are in the greatest demand. If the florists learn to depend on you they are ready to take all you have to sell.

"From my one row I cut four or five hundred beatiful blooms every other morning. It is a long season of cut, cut, cut, but it is a pleasure to get out early in the morning and enjoy the sun when it first comes up.

"I think I do it as much for the health as for the wealth. Sometimes I do it after tea, if there is no engagement for early evening. I enjoy the work with the sweet peas as much as others do a game of tennis, and it is less strenuous.

"If the pea blooms are cut in the evening I put them in water and leave them on the lawn to get all the dew and dampness of the night.

"If I am ill the work that keeps me going is the cutting of the flowers. The fresh air and sunshine that accompanies the light exercise is more than medicine to me."

"I expect to raise my voice for our friend at the convention," remarked the willing worker.

"Don't bother," rejoined Senator Sorghum: "raise funds."—Washington

BRABHAM PEAS

A cross between Iron and Whippoorwill, and it is without doubt the most prolific pea now in cultivation, as well as the greatest hay producer. The habit of growth is upright. They do not put out runners until 18 to 24 inches high. Pods are extra long, and are set at end of vine, making it an easy variety to pick. More leaves remain on the vines than any other sort, and the peas do not shatter out like many others after ripening. They are what is generally known as "Two Crop" peas. They are small in size, one bushel will plant same amount of ground as one and a quarter bushels of other varieties.

My Experience With Hog Cholera On My Farm

By W. A. Wadsworth

Cholera having just gone through my herd and since I have been fairly successful, and while memory is fresh I thought my experience might be of help and encouragement to some others.

Twenty-six days ago I noticed a sick hog in my bunch. W. D. Barton and B. C. Wilson, county and State experts on hog cholera, at once came to my assistance.

Hogs had a fuzzy look, labored breathing, and appeared weak in walking. We took temperature and found it over 102. The sickest one was killed and Splenn (melt) was twice the the normal size. The heart, lungs, intestines, were full of red spots the size of a pin-point or larger. The doctors said these were effects of cholera. Two more looked too sick to save and advised me to kill these at once. We burned these.

We have 176 to begin with. We have 176 now. We lost 15. We have had 15 pigs to come since we had cholera right in the cholera and saved these.

We had one bunch of twenty-one pig three weeks old. We took these from their mothers to save the mothers. We saved all of these with the serum although they run in the nursery that we had to use for a temporary hospital. We have a sow that had pigs one week old. We gave the mother serum and virus, and the pigs serum. The mother never showed signs of being sick, but all the pigs died. This sow was on good rape pasture and had good nurishing feed.

We had a fine young boar three months old separate and feeding in a dry lot on milk tankage and peas in kitchen slops. This pig had no fever so he was given serum and virus. Since he had been isolated and kept isolated and fed properly we were surprised to see him sicken and die.

We had twenty-one pigs running in the horse lot "Knocks" and left overs from a bunch that had had meal, corn chops, half and half, as half feed, running after mules and on bermuda grass. We got these too hot while inoculating and two died a few minutes later But not another one died. We expected to loose this bunch

We have nine sows heavy in pig with forty-five shoats weighing from 35 lbs to fifty pounds. They were on vetch pasture. We expected heavy losses here but saved every one except the one Dr. Wilson advised us to kill Their temperatures ran uniformly high.

We had a good pasture away from home where bur clover and lespedeza had been making good grazing for hogs all the spring. This was perhaps our sickest lot to start with. Then days after being inoculated they began getting very weak. Investigation showed bowels entirely constipated in all and apetites lost in over half. Here we had our gilts and young sows to grow before being bred. Here is where our loss came in. On this bunch we worked hard to save. We lost two fifth of these Neglect brought on constipation, and constipation brought on death.

It had been awful dry, Lespedeza was too small to graze and burclover was dying prematurely; at least it was tough and constipating. These were fed corn.

I know of another farm where hogs had cholera and running on mature crimson-clover and fed only corn 25 per cent of the old hogs died and 90 per cent of the young.

What We Learned.

If hogs are constipated and too sick to eat, we can save a few by giving them a laxative in drinking water. Have the troughs very low and filled with pure water and after bowel are regulated they may eat a little. Have individual pens for those too sick to eat.

A sick hog is very chilly and must be kept out of rain. They drink water until the last and should have water very accessible.

If bowels are allowed to get constipated losses will be heavy.

Corn and cholera do not mix to the advantage of the owner.

If immune before cholera gets in sows will not slink their pigs.

It pays handsomely to have broodsows and herd boar immune.

Have good green feed for hogs to graze. A sick hog does best on good grazing. It seems his appetite comes and goes.

Clean fresh water is an absolute necessity for a sick hog.

My water system, supplying cool fresh water pure had lots to do with my success.

Collective Marketing Means More Hog Money

If co-operation is the key to successful marketing the Mississippi farmers are well on the way to unlock the door of prosperity.

The following story of how the farmers of one county increased their hog profits by co-operative shipping is told by T. M. Patterson of the Mississippi A. and M. College, who assisted in the work.

"On Saturday, April 22, 103 wagons belonging to 70 farmers came into Yazoo City with 425 hogs to be shipped co-operatively. This day had been announced by W. R. Ritch, the county demonstration agent, who successfully inaugurated this co operative work last November, as hog shipping day and farmers desiring to top the market began feeding cottonseed meal and corn most of them using the self feeders, to put their pork in shape for the packer.

"Hogs were moving all Friday night, some of them a distance of 25 miles. They were weighed Friday morning classed according to quality and size and each farmer given a receipt for the number of pounds of hogs, live weight, he brought. A record was kept showing the number of pounds of hogs in each class that the individual farmer marketed. Four cars were shipped to Natchez and sold to the packing house at approximately the following prices, f. o. b. Yazoo City:

"Good heavy corn finished hogs, 200 pounds and up, $8.60 a hundred weight. Medium corn finished hogs, 150 to 200 pounds, $8.35. Light weights, corn finished, 125 to 150 pounds, $7.85. A car of feeders were sold to a Mississippi stockman at the following prices: Heavy pigs, 100 to 125 pounds, $7.50. Medium pigs, 80 to 100 pounds, $7.00. Light weight pigs, 50 to 80 pounds, $6.60.

"All of the above are the prices received by the farmers after all expenses were deducted. Four days after the shipment was made the farmer shippers received returns for their hogs and were well satisfied that the co-operative shipment was a thorough success. They could have sold to local buyers and carried the money home with them but they chose to ship to Natchez and get a better price. The Yazoo hog shippers expect to make their next shipment in late August or early September during which the hog market is usually at the highest point of the year.

"Through the efforts of county Agent Ritch a total of 12 cars of hogs have been shipped co-operatively from Yazoo City in the last three months and the industry promises to grow rapidly. The farmers of Yazoo county have found that soy beans, peas, sweet potatoes, peanuts, oats, clovers, alfalfa, lespedeza, as well as several other grazing crops, produce hogs most profitably. Growing grazing crops for the hogs to harvest and finishing them on hard feed, preferably corn and cottonseed meal or corn and tankage from 3 to 7 weeks according to the crop they grazed upon, has proven the most profitable course in Mississippi. However, the hog must be finished hard or a price ranging from one to one and one half cents per pound under the corn prices will be obtained."

Great Acreage In Bur Clover and Velvet Beans In Walker

The work of eradicating the cattle tick in Walker county is going steadily on and by October first we expect to see the county placed in the column of counties clear of ticks. This forward movement for the betterment of the cattle industry of the county met with considerable opposition at the start, but our people are a loyal folk and consequently they fell into line for the cause and now sentiment is rapidly changing from the opposition to that of favoring the movement.

An other item of much interest is the large plaiting of velvet and soy beans in the county. Heretofore but few farmers planted these splendid crops. This year we will have perhaps 4,000 acres planted to these crops.

We have the largest crop of bur clover ever grown in the county which will give us the largest crop of seed ever gathered. Our farmers were rather slow to take hold of growing of bur clover, but since seeing it demonstrated nearly all are wanting some bur clover for soil building and pasture

Jones and Forbes Say Squab Raising Will Pay You

The breeding of squabs (young pigeons) for market is rapidly becoming a lucrative business in the south where this industry is comparatively new. The costs for a beginner is so small that most any one with moderate means can in a short time with a good stock birds build up a paying business.

Squabs are marketable at the age of four weeks, and at this time the parent birds will have either youngsters or eggs in an adjoining nest. This breeding continues throughout the year except during the molt which takes place about September.

It is necessary to buy only first class birds from a reliable breeder who will sell birds thoroughly mated and tested for producing fat plump squabs.

A pen built of rough lumber ten feet long and six feet wide, and about six feet high in rear and eight feet in front with a wire fly pen about the same size will accommodate twenty-five pairs of working birds. The nests are built on the back and sides of the house. One foot square is about the best size for nests preferably with sliding bottoms to them so they can be cleaned with out any trouble. It is not necessary to go to the expense to build nests of this kind, for orange boxes with a strip tacked on the bottom to keep the young birds from falling out, make as good nests as anybody needs.

As to the feed, it can be obtained from any seed house already mixed in the proper proportion for use. Feed your birds twice a day, morning and evening, as best suits your convenience but seven o'clock in the morning and four in the afternoon is most desirable. Keep your nests clean whitewash occasionally, keep fresh water for them and you will have very little trouble with your birds.

We will write in the future about the different breeds of squab raisers, as there are many good breeds to select from. The beginner should select the breed that suits his fancy and buy the best as poor stock, is expensive at any price.

Start in the squab business new and with a few spare minutes each day you will soon be able to build up a good private trade, or if your plant produces well enough to warrant shipping to the large cities you can sell your squabs for from $4 to $6 per dozen.

HIGHHER THINGS

Most men long for the better things,
Most men crave for a life that will count;
Most of them know what the true world sings,
Most of them hunger to really mount;
None of them, really, are half as bad
As you and the world may often think—
Only important, and free and glad
When they cheat and chuckle and lie and drink.

Often the chap in the seat next yours
Has a mean old look, and you size him up
As something made only to wipe up floors,
As a churl, or a snide, or a low-down pup.
Often his heart, on the other hand,
Is a true man's heart, in whose chamber rings
The music of hope and of faith and trust,
And the hunger of soul for the higher things.

State-wide Tick Eradication In "Old Miss." Is Great Step Forward For State

Hats off to Mississippi.

She is the first state to pass a state-wide tick eradication law.

This state-wide tick-eradication act will go into effect January 1 next and at that time veterinarians will be busy in every quarantined county in the State building dipping vats and suvervising the dipping of cattle.

This means that before next year is out Mississippi will be free, or virtually free, of the cattle tick and in her opportunity for the production of cattle with profit she will be ahead of every Southern state.

We often thing of Mississippi as a land handicapped by bitter and fruitless political fights. But here is a State--with the blight of politics--that goes ahead and passes one of the most progressive and beneficial pieces of legislation ever enacted in a Southern State.

Does this not show, beside the vast good that it will do, that Mississippi is beginning to put her agricultural interests above politics and that some of her legislators realize that they should do some real good for the people?

Mississippi has been carrying on, county by county, hard work for tick eradication. But the people finally said to themselves: "Why fool with this thing any longer with one county voting for eradication and another voting against it? Let's do the whole thing at once and make eradication State-wide and be the first Southern state, Tennessee excepted, to clean the tick from our farms. Let us carry on the work all over the State at one time and clean up Mississippi this coming year."

This was the sentiment of the thinking people of Mississippi and this sentiment was so strongly reflected in the Legislature that the Legislature has passed a State-wide tick eradication act.

For the benefit of our readers we produce herewith the full text of Mississippi's State-wide tick eradication act. Read this act and show it to your neighbor. What Mississippi has done Alabama can do and Georgia too. Public sentiment is aroused to the great tick fight Alabama is carrying on. It may be that Alabama will be free of ticks before the next Legislature of Alabama meets. If not, there is but little doubt that sentiment for tick eradication will be so strong by that time that Alabama will pass a State-wide eradication act.

But while Mississippi has the advantage of Alabama with her State-wide act, why can't Alabama prosecute the work so vigorously county by county that she will not be far behind Mississippi in cleaning up? Already there is a tier of counties in northern Alabama and in central Alabama free of ticks. Other counties are being cleaned up under proper supervision. Now let every reader in counties that have not voted for tick eradication help to create sentiment for tick eradication.

In this country we cannot force people to do things for their own good--we must create a sentiment among them for doing these things. When it comes to such things as getting rid of cattle ticks our "free democracy" is sometimgs not an ideal thing. But let every one of us talk the value of tick eradication and persuade our neighbor to see it in the right light. This educational work carried on steadily may result in taking all Alabama out of quarantine before the next Legislature meets again and passes a State-wide tick eradication law.

An Act

To provide for State wide tick eradication, and to provide for the expense of conducting the work in several counties, and for penalties for violation of this act.

Section. 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, that the State Live Stock Sanitary Board be and are hereby directed and required to appoint some suitable person in each County infested with the cattle tick and where tick eradication has not heretofore been done in such manner as to destroy the cattle tick in such County, to superintend and inspect the work of tick eradication of such County, and who shall see that the tick eradication is carried on in accordance with the rules and regulations of the State Live Stock Sanitary Board. The person so appointed by the State Live Stock Sanitary Board shall have, upon the recommendation of the Board of Supervisors, the power to select such assistants as may be necessary for the proper and successful conduct of such work of tick eradication, the selection of said assistants to be approved by the Board of Supervisors and the salaries to be fixed by the Board of Supervisors of the County.

Section 2. The Board of Supervisors of each County where the work of tick eradication has not been completed in the whole County shall, at the next meeting after the passage of this Act, or as soon thereafter as possible, let contracts for the construction of proper dipping vats in said County and for the proper material and chemicals to be used in the work of tick eradication as may be necessary for the successful and speedy carrying out of the purposes of this Act and shall fix the salaries of the assistants and helpers of the County Inspector appointed by the State Live Stock Sanitary Board as herein provided, but shall not fix said salary so low as to prevent the carrying out of this work. The salaries of such assistants shall be paid monthly by order of the Board of Supervisors on the County Treasury. The County Inspector shall be appointed by the State Live Stock Sanitary Board and his salary shall be fixed by them and paid out of the State Treasury monthly.

Section 3. All persons having cattle, horses or mules in any County or part of County, infested with the cattle tick shall, on being notified by any County Inspector or Deputy or assistant to do so, have his cattle, horses, mules and other live stock required to be dipped by the said inspectors to be dipped at such times and in such manner as the regulations of the State Live Stock Sanitary Board may require and such dipping shall be done and conducted under the Supervision of the County Inspector of one of his deputies or assistants and shall continue for such period of time as may be required by the rules of the State Live Stock Sanitary Board which shall be sufficient in duration of time to completely destroy and eradicate all cattletick in such County or part of County. The County Inspector or Assistant Inspector shall supervise the preparation of the vats and the fluids to be used therein for the purpose of tick eradication and shall conduct and supervise the dipping of cattle in such manner as to insure the eradication of cattle tick during the present year but if for any reason the cattle tick in such Counties should not be eradicated and destroyed and such territory declared to be immune during the present year, then the work shall be continued until the cattle tick be permanently eradicated and destroyed.

Section 4. That failure of any person, officer, inspector or assistant, to comply with the provisions of this Act shall constitute a misdemesnor and any person convicted for a violation of any of the provisions of this Chapter, on conviction thereof, in a Court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $500, or imprisoned in the County Jail not less than ten days nor more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

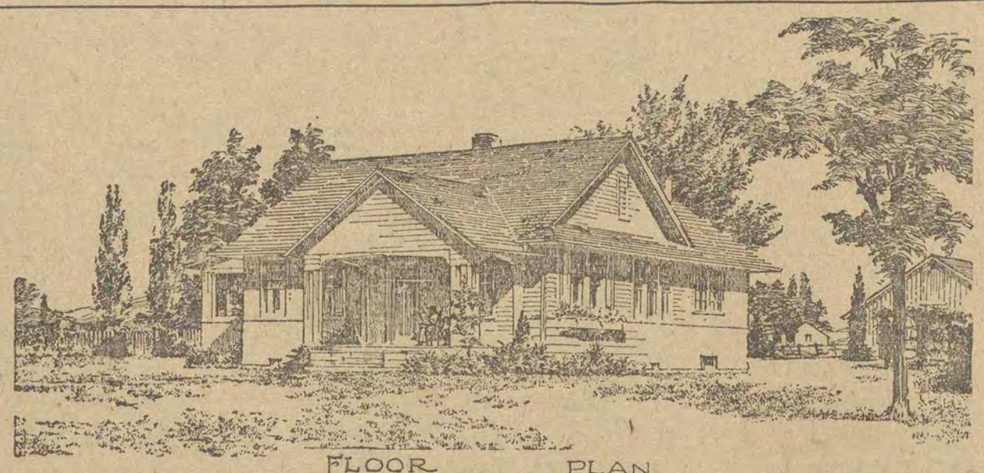
Section 5. The State Live Stock Sanitary Board shall, as far as practicable, co-operate with the Federal authorities conducting the work of tick eradication and may accept aid from the Federal Government or any of its officers and agents in carrying out the work of tick eradication in this State, and it shall be the duty of the said State Live Stock Sanitary Board to see that the County Inspector discharge the duties imposed hereunder and carry out the provisions of this Chapter and said Board may require the County Prosecuting Attorney or District Attorney in this State to institute suits, civil or criminal, for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this Act and any person or officer charged with any duty, under this Act, may be compelled to perform the same by mandamus injunction, or any other appropriate remedy.

Section 6. That this Act take effect and be in force from and after January 1st 1917.

Passed by the House of Representatives, March 13, 1916.

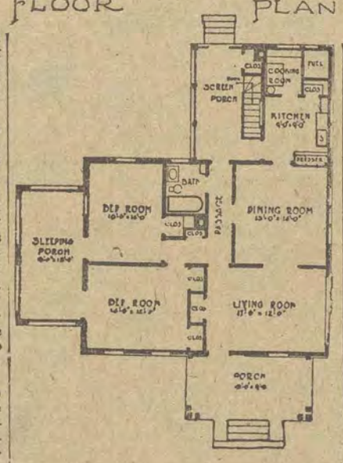
Break up the breeding places of flies and save the lives of the children.

EXCEPT.



"Yes" said the voluble crank, "I used to be as bad as you, but I made up my mind to quit smoking and drinking, and I did it.'

"Indeed," remarked Manley. "I guess a man who can quit smoking and drinking could quit almost anything—"



"Oh yes.'

"Except talking about it."

Southern Farmhouse For a Small Family; Plans Can Be Sent

FLOOR PLAN

A Southern farmhouse for a small family is shown on the accompanying plan, prepared in the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the United State Department of Agriculture.

The plan was developed after extensive surveys in the South to determine the household needs of families with reference to local agriculture, climate, and domestic help. The aim primarily is to provide: (a) A cool and convenient kitchen and dining room for the housewife; (b) bedrooms and living room with the best exposure; (c) facilities for outdoor sleeping; (d) an easily heated house, cool in summer and yet with sunny rooms in winter. The materials selected are those commonly used in the South. Local builders should have no difficulty in carrying out the plans.

Description Of Plan

With the house facing south, the living room and bedrooms will have the advantage of the prevailing summer winds, which generally throughout the South, are from the south or southwest. Where the prevailing winds vary from the usual direction the plan can be reversed if desired, or the house so placed that it will have the proper relation to the summer breezes.

The arrangement of dining room and kitchen constitutes the chief feature of the plan. The china closet, opening into both rooms, saves a great many steps between the kitchen and the dining room. The clearing up after meals can be accomplished with a very few steps, dishes being passed through on the wide counter shelf, washed at the sink, drained, and returned to the china closet, where they are available from either side.

The Kitchen

The kitchen is small, well lighted, conveniently arranged, and cool, by reason of the facts that the range is in a separate room and the windows on opposite sides permit a cross draft. The distance from the range to the other fixtures is no greater than in most farm kitchens; and, if it were, the extra step or two would not offset the marked advantage of coolness of the workroom where the greater part of the kitchen work is done. This is a matter of considerable moment, since so many farm wives in the South are now doing their own housework.

The cookroom ceiling has a large opening which permits the heat and cooking odors to escape through a ventilator in the gable. Near the stove, to give light and air, is a double-casement window. A grated opening near the floor, in the wall between the cookroom and the kitchen closet, draws air from below the floor and promotes circulation from the floor upward and helps to keep the lower part of the room cool. In winter, if it is desired to keep the heat in the house, the door between the cookroom and kitchen can be kept open and the ventilator and grating closed when not needed to carry off odors. The separate and well-ventilated cookroom will insure a dining room which is cool and free from odors.

The fuel room, filled from outside, is right at hand, obviating the necessity of carrying in fuel every day.

The bathroom is readily accessible from all parts of the house, and can be used for washing up by the men of the family coming from barn or fields without going through other rooms. The closet on the rear gallery is intended for boots, rubber coats, etc. As this house was designed to meet conditions prevailing in the South, no provision was made for the washing up of the farm hands, who, as a rule have their own quarters.

Heating System

Instead of open fireplaces for heating purposes, the drawings for this house provide for a hot-air furnace installed in a pit beneath the bathroom. The cost of installation would not greatly exceed that of the two chimneys, with two open fireplaces each, which would be necessary to heat all the rooms. The upkeep would be less and the efficiency and comfort far in excess of that afforded by open fireplaces. If the situatian is low, with water near the surface, the house can be raised higher from the ground and the pit carried down but 3 feet or so. It should be built of concrete and made water proof. Space for fuel storage is provided under the rear gallery, and there is a vegetable cellar under the kitchen.

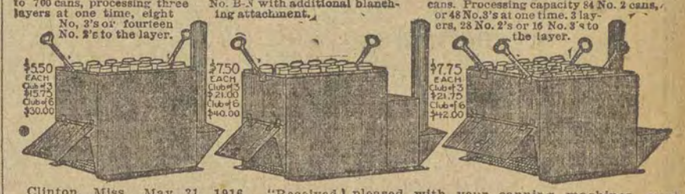
Gallery And Sleeping Porch

There is less front gallery to this house than in most southern farmhouses. The reason for this is that, while galleries add to the coolness of a house in summer, they keep the winter sun out, making the house damp, cold, and cheerless. Extensive galleries add to the housekeeper's work. If a house has wide eaves and good roof ventilation and is placed so that it is partly shaded by trees, the same beneficial effect afforded by galleries is had in the summertime, while in winter the sun will penetrate each room at some time of the day. The summer temperature within a house is largely influenced by the presence of near-by trees, which, even if they do not shade the building, prevent or lessen radiation from the ground. The plan, however, does provide a comfortable front gallery, and the sleeping porch can also be used as an outside sitting room. Two sleeping compartments can be provided on this porch by using a movable partition or screen.

Complete working drawings for this house may be obtained by those contemplating building, on application to the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Better write for them today if you need them.

Way off somewhere life holds its own
Amid the restful spell of truth;
Way off somewhere the spring has blown
Its trumpets of immortal youth.
Way off somewhere a barefoot boy
Is whittling on a whistle now;
Way off somewhere the light of joy
Is kindling on his lips and brow.

"My husband is a regular rainbow chaser," said one woman.



"Mine isn't," replied the other. "Even if he knew there was a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, he'd sit still and expect the rainbow to come to him."

THE ANDALUSIA PACKING PLANT

Is Ready For Your Livestock

It is our pleasure to announce that we are now actively operating our Packing Plant, having killed our first hogs on Tuesday, June 6th.

We are now, and will be continuously in the market every day in the year, both winter and summer, for the purchase of hogs, and we invite correspondence on what you may have for present or future shipment.

We will require and be actively in the market for just as many hogs through the summer months as we are in the fall and winter months, and in this connection we wish to urge the farmers to have more of their hogs ready for the market in the summer time than they have heretofore. This is profitable to both farmers and ourselves, for several reasons. The profit that we derive through this method is in being able to run regularly through the summer as well as the winter. Our overhead expenses are as great running half of the time in the summer as they are running full time. The farmer's profits are derived from the fact that summer hogs practically always bring a higher price per pound than winter hogs. The reason for this is that the general custom is to prepare all hogs for winter markets, and when everybody is disposing of their holdings at about the same time the supply exceeds the demand and the price naturally declines, and too, it is said that you can fatten a hog cheaper in the summer than you can in the winter. Another benefit that the farmer derives is that the selling of their farm products through their hogs, in both summer and winter, gives them an income the year round, and will obviate the necessity for your having to borrow money and pay interest thereon to tide you over the summer months,

We extend a cordial invitation to all who may desire to pay us a visit and inspect our plant, and methods of doing business. We assure you in advance that it will be a pleasure to have you visit us.

We are in the market for your present and future shipments. and shall be pleased to have you advise us what you have for sale

Chicago.—As exclusively predicted by 497,365 persons, the Republican party in convention assembled in Chicago selected Associate Justice Charles E. Hughes as its standard bearer in the campaign of 1916.

Contrary to the expectation of al most everybody and to his own de sires, Charles Warren Fairbanks of Indiana was chosen for the second place.

If that is not a safe and sane ticket for presentation to the sovereign voters of the nation, the Republican leaders who devised it don't know how to make one. They put it forth in the full confidence that it will command the suffrages of a majority of the electors next November and that it would receive the indorsement of Colonel Roosevelt and most of his Progressive followers. At least, they asserted that they had the aforesaid full confidence.

The nomination of Mr. Justice Hughes, which was accomplished on the third ballot, was received by the throng in the Coliseum with a demonstration that was as safe and sane as the candidate. Everybody stood up and cheered.

Saturday afternoon Mr. Hughes sent a telegram to Chairman Harding accepting the nomination, and at the same time he resigned from the Supreme court of the United States.

Justice Hughes' letter of resignation, sent to the White House by messenger, contained one brief sentence. It said:

"I hereby resign the office of associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States. I am, sir, respectfully yours,

"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

The selection of Mr. Fairbanks for the position which he once before filled with distinction required only one ballot, and soon thereafter the convention adjourned sine die, leaving the Indiana delegation glued to the long distance telephone endeavoring to persuade the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash to accept the honor thus summarily thrust upon him.

Final Session Was Interesting.

The story of the final session of the convention, on Saturday, is rather interesting because of the way in which its developments were concerned with the course pursued by Theodore Roosevelt and with the doings of the Progressive convention in the Auditorium. All night long the conference committees of the two conventions had been closeted in a room of the Chicago club, and the first thing Chairman Harding did was to call for a final report from the Republican committee. Mr. Smoot of Utah informed the convention that his committee had submitted to the Progressives the name of Justice Hughes, even as the Bull Moosers the day before had submitted that of T. R.; that the Progressives had then received from the colonel a long telegram, which he read, earnestly pleading for harmony and united action, and suggesting that they offer to unite with the Republicans on Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, whose character and record he warmly eulogized. This recommendation, Senator Smoot said, had been received by the Progressive convention and laid on the table.

Of course that put an end at once to the hopes of picking a nominee on whom both conventions could unite, and Chairman Harding directed the call of the roll of states for the third ballot. Friday evening two trial ballots had been taken for the purpose of giving the favorite sons their chance, and no one of them had shown the strength necessary to win. Hughes advanced from 253½ votes on the first ballot to 328½ on the second, and if the managers of the favorite sons had not forced an adjournment, the justice could have been nominated that evening.

Ballot That Nominated Hughes.

So, when the third ballot was begun Saturday morning, there was no doubt of the result. Alabama, first on the list, started the flop with its 16 votes, and the others followed suit with an almost unbroken regularity. Now and then there was an interruption as someone rose to withdraw the name of a candidate. Sherman, Fairbanks, Cummins, Root and the rest followed one another into the discard. Weeks of Massachusetts withdrew himself, and a Roosevelt delegate from the Southwest pulled down the name of the colonel, speaking for all the Roosevelt men in the convention.

Before half the states had been called Mr. Hughes had the necessary 494 votes, New Jersey giving him 27 that carried him past the mark. Here and there a recalcitrant was found, but they were few and far between. As announced by the chairman, the ballot stood: Hughes, 949½; La Follette, 3; Lodge, 7; Roosevelt, 18½.

Alexander P. Moore of Pittsburgh moved that the nomination be made unanimous, and Senator Lodge, who had voted for Roosevelt, seconded the motion. The question being put, there was a roaring chorus of "ayes," and Chairman Harding smilingly announced that there were no "noes."

Former Senator Burkett of Nebraska was Mr. Fairbanks' only rival for second place. Unlike the Indiana statesman, he had been making an earnest campaign for the honor, but the result did not justify his hopes, for Mr. Fairbanks was given an overwhelmingly large vote.

Moose Nominate Roosevelt.

At the time all this was taking place in the Coliseum, the Progressives in the Auditorium were joyfully nominating Theodore Roosevelt. At the very moment when the news of Hughes' nomination by the Republicans was flashed to the Bull Moose convention, Chairman Robins was announcing that the colonel had been unanimously nominated, by acclamation, as the standard bearer of the Progressive party.

The convention went wild, and it was some time before it could be calmed down enough to be told what had been done in the Coliseum.

The ardent admirers of the Man of Sagamore Hill did not take kindly to his suggestion that they combine with the Republicans to nominate Lodge. "Name Roosevelt today," had been their shout from the early morning hours, and when the colonel's appeal to them to back Lodge was laid before the convention it was met by a storm of hisses and cries of "No, no." The Moosers were determined to nominate Roosevelt, and nominate him they proceeded to do, with a mighty shout.

After a recess, the Progressives nominated John M. Parker of Louisiana for the vice presidency, by acclamation. Governor Johnson of California and Raymond Robins were presented for the nomination, but both withdrew in favor of Parker.

First Day Deadly Dull.

"I'm representing a paper in Tombstone, Arizona," said a man at the entrance to the press section of the Coliseum.

"Come right in; you will be right at home," said another man on the inside.

And there is the first day of the Republican national convention in a nutshell. It had all the aspects of a well-conducted funeral, except that instead of flowers there was the profuse decoration of the great building with flags and bunting. No marked enthusiasm, no lively processions of delegations seeking their seats, no spontaneous demonstrations when the notabilities of the party entered.

Senator Warren G. Harding, selected as the temporary chairman, evoked applause when he stepped forth to accept the gavel.

Mr. Harding had been chosen to sound the keynotes, and of course he did sound several for the party at large, notably on adequate national preparedness, protective tariff and straight Americanism. But first and foremost he sounded what was meant to be the keynote for the party in convention assembled and for the Bull Moosers several blocks north in the Auditorium. That keynote was harmony.

Harmony fairly radiated from Mr. Harding's countenance; it oozed from his outstretched hands; it flowed in a stream down among the delegates—but there it seemed to stop. He spoke no harsh words of the "erring brothers" of 1912, but exuded enough harmony to make it perfectly easy for them to slip back into the party without a bit of friction. He didn't swat the Bull Moose with a club, or scold it, but stroked its ears and sought to remove painlessly its horns and massage its snout into the semblance of an elephant's trunk. How well he succeeded the closing events of the two conventions demonstrated. Truth to tell, there was every evidence that Senator Harding had no desire to stir up anything much with his address, for the old-line leaders had not yet discovered just how they could save the party by accomplishing the defeat of the Democrats next November.

An Undercurrent of Fear.

Beneath the smooth surface of events in the Coliseum was apparent to the close observer a distinct undercurrent of fear—fear of what the Progressives would and would not do. The latter had gone into convention with the frankly and loudly expressed intention of nominating Colonel Roosevelt and no one else. Moreover, they intended to force his nomination on the Republicans. The Republicans were split into two great camps. One, the "allies," was made up of the forces supporting the dozen or more "favorite sons." The other included the seasoned men whose purpose, seemingly, was the prevention of Roosevelt's nomination. To bring this about, they were willing to support Charles E. Hughes.

The "allies" were ready to give each of their candidates a fair chance, and then proposed to combine on one—but which one they couldn't determine.

Meanwhile, in the Auditorium, the radical Progressives were clamoring to nominate the colonel at once and let the Republicans indorse him or go through the experience of four years ago, and only the strenuous efforts of George W. Perkins and a few other wise ones held them in check to await the peace negotiations that were to come later, and come in vain.

No wonder that fear ruled. It looked as though the man down at Oyster Bay held in the hollow of his hand the fate of both parties, and he sat there nearly as silent as the associate justice. To be sure he did send word that he would be pleased to come and address the Republican convention if it desired to hear him, but no such desire was manifested.

So the first session moved quietly to its conclusion, and the only really spontaneous burst of enthusiasm was that which greeted the announcement by Sergeant at Arms Stone that a thousand automobiles, provided by Mayor Thompson's committee, were waiting outside to convey the delegates to their hotels.

What the Women Won.

On Thursday, though the rain continued unabated, the convention added a touch of color to its mourning garb state of mind, in recognition of the progressive platform that was presented by the scholarly Senator Lodge in behalf of the committee on resolutions. To be sure there was nothing startling in that platform, nor anything very unexpected, if you except the plank on woman suffrage. And there was where Senator Lodge developed an unexpected vein of sardonic humor. "The Republican party," he read, with some flourishes inserted, "favors woman suffrage"—he paused, and many of his hearers, especially the women, cheered loudly for a minute—"but recognizes the right of each state to settle this question for itself," concluded the senator. Louder than ever was the shouting that greeted this, but it was derisive, and all cluttered up with laughter.

And yet the women had won a genuine victory in obtaining even this qualified indorsement of their cause, and felt well rewarded for their effort of the day before. That effort, their parade down Michigan boulevard, was an exhibition of nerve unequaled during the week, unless one except the candidacy of certain of the presidential aspirants. The rain and wind swept across the boulevard until the marchers could scarcely keep their feet, to say nothing of carrying their numerous banners, and yet they marched undaunted, over five thousand strong, leaving a trail of wrecked umbrellas and banners all the way to the Coliseum. It was a much more impressive exhibition of their faith than if ten times as many had made the march on a fair day.

Strong Platform Adopted.

Returning to the convention and its platform, it should be noted that the plank devoted to preparedness called for nearly all the most ardent advocate of national protection could ask—a navy strong and ready, an adequate army and a system of military training for reserves—and this plank was received with manifest approval. So, too, was the reference to the Democratic plan to relinquish the Philippines. Altogether, it seemed the platform should enlist the support of almost any Republican, however progressive he may be.

Senator Lodge concluding, forth came a brave young man from Wisconsin, of the name of Gross, and presented a minority report. It contained the well-known views of Senator La Follette on economic and social questions, and especially did it contain a plank calling for an embargo on the shipment of munitions to the warring nations of Europe. Mr. Gross was plucky, but didn't get very far, for his report received only a few scattering votes from his own Wisconsin delegation.

Close under the lee of the speaker's rostrum all this time sat one William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska, and at each strong point made by the senator from Massachusetts he would crane his neck around for a good look at that gentleman, and sink back in his chair with a grim grin. Just what he thought he refused to say out loud.

During a pause in the proceedings "Uncle Joe" Cannon and Chauncey Depew were brought forward, one at a time, to entertain the audience, and they did it with a characteristic mixture of story, joke and old-time patriotism. Then Senator Borah was introduced, and some real fireworks were expected, but while he spoke well and inspiringly, he held himself well in command.

"What are the Progressives doing and going to do?" was the question heard continually, and now it was answered in part by the reading of the invitation from the convention in the Auditorium for the appointment of a conference committee to meet one to be appointed by the Progressives. The invitation was accepted gladly by the Republicans, for they earnestly desired peace and unity. Some wiseacres shook their heads when the chair appointed four gentlemen who had been classed as ultra conservatives, but the name of Borah was looked on as a saving grace, and the committee went to its delicate task, the convention adjourning until Friday.

Hopefully assembling again next morning, the delegates were told that the Progressive committee had been able to suggest little more than the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt by both conventions, because the leaders could not deliver anything like their full strength if any other man were named. To this the Republican committee made no response, only asking that it be continued.

Candidates Are Named.

Time was growing short, and the leaders now proceeded to the presentation of candidates. Mr. Hughes was first on the list, because Arizona yielded to New York, and Root followed. The demonstration for neither was up to expectations, and Weeks received no more applause. Illinois and Ohio and Indiana woke things up a lot for Sherman, Burton and Fairbanks, respectively, but the audience was waiting, because the word had gone around that Senator Fall of New Mexico was to place Roosevelt in nomination, and everyone was eager to see what would happen then. Fall made a stirring speech, and the galleries rose to the occasion, though most of the delegates merely looked on curiously. It really was the big noise of the convention to date.

Back in 1912 when the handsome Mrs. Davis acted as cheermaster for the Roosevelt demonstration she set a fashion which every candidate seemed to think it necessary to follow this year. Each of them had a lady yell leader in one of the galleries. Some of them were pretty and some of them were only energetic. Mr. Root's cheermaster just opened her mouth at frequent intervals—in fact, when she got the signal from Job Hedges—and let out a series of piercing shrieks. Later she "changed her vote on the second ballot," for then she was found to be emitting similar screams in behalf of Colonel Roosevelt.

Mr. Fairbanks had, perhaps, the handsomest of these lady shouters in the person of Mrs. English of Indianapolis, daughter-in-law of W. H. English, who was Hancock's running mate long years ago. Wrapped in one American flag, and waving another, she made a striking figure, and her early stage training stood her in good stead.

Among the Boosters.

To one who had frequented the Michigan boulevard hotels during the evenings of the convention week it was not surprising that there was not an enthusiastic demonstration at the Coliseum when Hughes was placed in nomination. Never before was there so little boosting of a leading candidate on the surface. "There comes the man with the Hughes badge," said one onlooker, and there was little exaggeration in the remark. Everyone else had headquarters, bands, glee clubs, badge distributors, and all the rest of the machinery of boosting, but not so Hughes. The work for him was being done quietly behind closed doors.

All sorts of devices were resorted to by supporters of favorite sons. In the Fairbanks region at the Congress hotel women sold carnations for that tall sycamore. "Can't I sell you a flower for a dime?" one of them asked a husky negro. "What for?" "Why, for Fairbanks." "I should say not; he ain't worth a dime to me," was the reply.

Mrs. Charles E. Hughes.

Those negroes were among the amusing features of the hotel lobbies, for they were forever getting into acrimonious dispute with one another.

"Don't you try to tell me nothin'," said a big colored Indianian to one from a Southern state. "You darkies from down there are on the market as soon as you get here, every time."

"Is that so?" was the sharp response. "Well, you tell me when did Indiana ever send a colored delegate?"

"Lots of times."

"But when, I asts you?"

"Lots of times, I tells you."

"But, I asts you, when?"

And so it would go on interminably.

Wednesday night was the liveliest in the hotels, for the boosters were out in all their glory and as yet uncurbed. In the Congress a swarm of cowboy-hatted Sherman shouters took possession of the lobby and at intervals the T. R. paraders would undertake to march through them, carrying large "Teddy" signs. Every such attempt was the signal for a near riot, and those signs were soon smashed by umbrella-handle blows.

Then the Sherman boys produced a baby elephant and a goat labeled "Teddy's." The little pachyderm was as once banished to the baggage room where its trunk was checked and its manager ordered half a ton of hay from the Pompeiian room. As for the goat, it was run out in a hurry, and the hotel management issued an edict that no more live stock should be brought into the place. So thereafter the crowds were content to go "milling" about the various rooms, here watching movies of Roosevelt parades, there listening to speakers tell of the virtues of Burton or Fairbanks, and elsewhere collecting badges and buttons. "For the Lord's sake take them," the boosters would urge. "They won't be worth a darn next week." Which was necessarily true of all but one variety, then unknown.

Black Mark for Chicago.

Mention has been made above of Mayor Thompson's committee, and credit must be given it for doing much to entertain the delegates and other convention visitors. In addition to big flocks of free automobiles, there were many and varied forms of entertainment, parades of firemen, fireworks and the like, so far as the wretched weather permitted, and on Thursday night there were dances in a dozen of the leading hotels to which all were invited. So far, so good. But a big black mark must be placed against the mayor and his political friends for the outrage of Friday afternoon. At that time, just as things were getting interesting, an immense swarm of ward heelers and political henchmen swept down on the Coliseum, armed with green tickets or sergeant at arms badges, and so thronged the building that the police and firemen finally closed all the doors. The doorkeepers were given orders to honor no tickets whatever, and hundreds of newspaper correspondents and men and women who had paid as high as $250 for admission tickets were rudely thrust aside. The order came when a great many were outside the hall for lunch and they were unable to get back to their seats.

To make a bad matter worse, while holders of proper credentials argued and battled with the police in vain shouting their indignation and trying futilely to send word to Sergeant at Arms Stone, the ward workers were slipping in by the hundred, entering through the emergency hospital door where Doctor Robertson, the city health commissioner, and his aids were stationed.

Mayor Thompson appeared at the Coliseum shortly after the doors were closed.

"Who ordered the doors barred?" he was asked.

"Sergeant at Arms Stone," he replied.

"How does the fire department figure in this outrage?" the inquirer asked.

"Mr. Stone asked for protection. He said there were 3,000 too many people in the building already."

"What do you know about the green tickets?"

The mayor walked away.

From a casual inspection of the crowds in the building Friday it seemed that there must be thousands of men wearing the badges of sergeants at arms, and at noon one alderman was standing in the alley handing them out to his constituents by the score. When the doors were closed some 5,000 wearers of these badges still on the outside set up a mighty roar. That let many of them in while ticket holders still were wailing in the rain.

Even "Jim" Preston Locked Out.

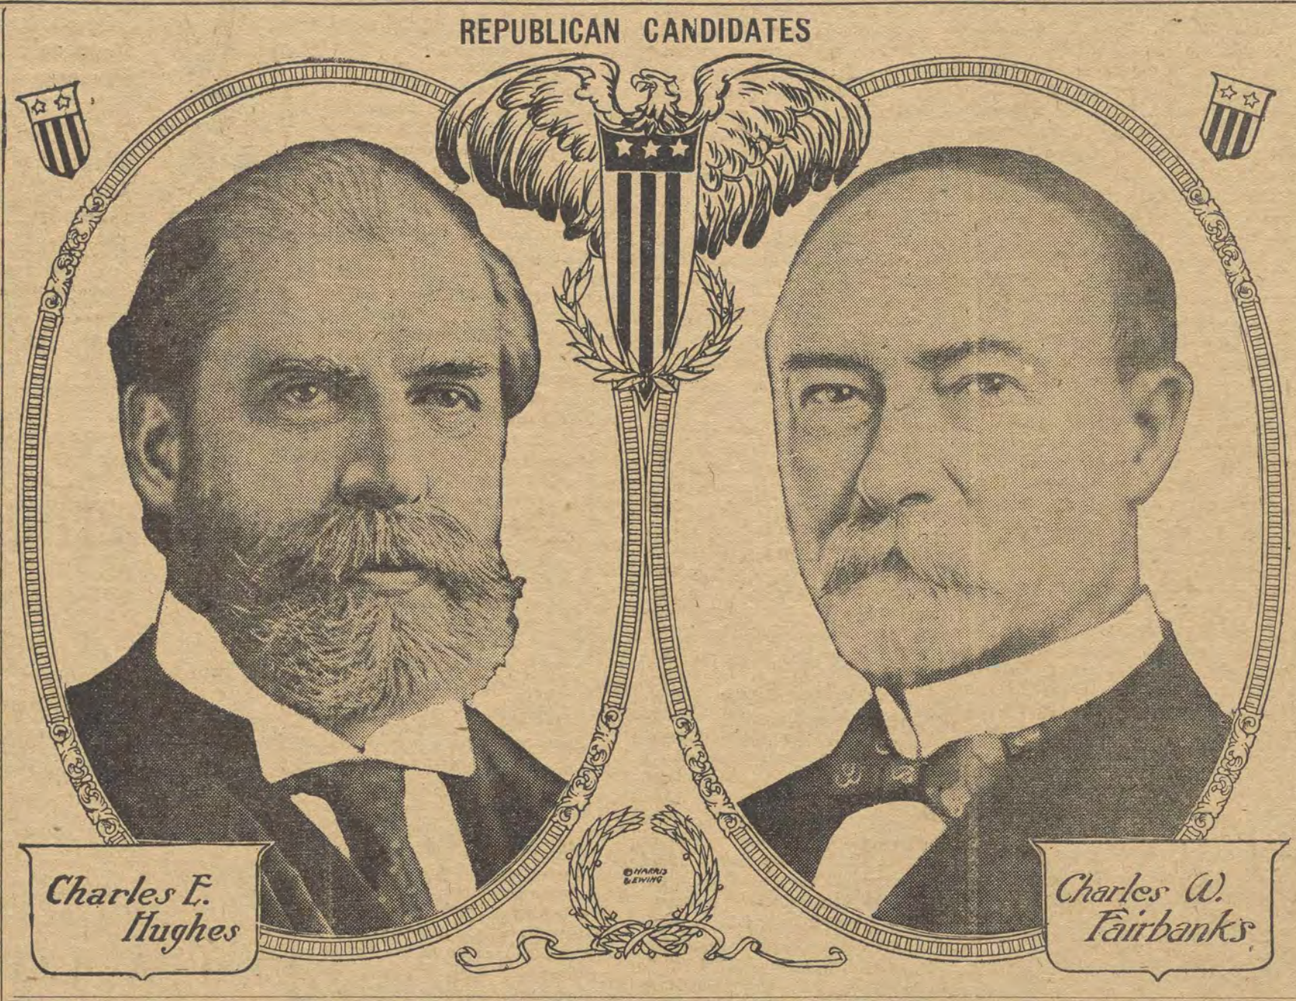
The newspaper men had a good laugh at "Jim" Preston, superintendent of the press gallery of the senate and in charge of the correspondents' quarters at the convention, for he was one of those caught on the outside and howled for half an hour before the police would recognize his right to enter. Jim is a favorite with the correspondents, but his plight made lighter that in which many of them found themselves.

By the way, some of the aforesaid correspondents were national figures and attracted almost as much attention as did the notable men on the platform and among the delegations. One of them, of course, was William J. Bryan, representing the Commoner for himself; Sam Blythe was there, too, and so was Arthur Brisbane, and William Allen White, and Angus McSween, and many another whose names are perhaps more familiar to the general public than their faces, but who are usually to be seen when anything big like a national convention is going on. They do not wax especially enthusiastic over the usually factitious demonstrations in conventions, but nothing gets away from them, and it is noticeable that the statesmen are always glad of a chat with them.

These correspondents are not especially patient when important matters are brewing. Often they are importunate, and it fell to the lot of Jim Preston to placate them and look after their needs. This he did as no other known individual could do it. Always ready to give assistance and information, he permeated the press section and earned the blessings of the newspaper boys as he has done before on like occasions.

Downtown in the hotels music played a large part in the efforts of the various clans of boosters. Nearly every headquarters had its band or orchestra and the Hartonites brought a big glee club from Columbus, Ohio. Sherman also had a large band of singers, and "Marching Through Georgia" became his official song. The Fairbanks men, naturally, adopted "On the Banks of the Wabash," and its strains could be heard far into the night.

One individual appeared carrying on his chest a small organ on which another played popular airs, and as they proceeded through the crowds they soon collected a string of snake dancers.



Citizens Were Hospitable.

The citizens of Chicago tried hard to uphold the reputation of the city as the convention city of the country and to make up for the rough deal handed out by the weather man. There were numerous fetes of one kind or another planned for the pleasure of both man and woman visitors, and though the continuous rain caused the abandonment of some of these, most of them were highly successful. Notable among the entertainers was the Hamilton club, which kept virtual open house throughout the week, with free refreshments and the services of famous singers and vaudeville artists. On Wednesday night the Hamiltonians invited all visiting newspaper men to partake of their hospitality, and the same night the Press club gave a midnight dinner and entertainment for the correspondents.

The Progressives even more than the Republicans indulged in social pleasures, partly because there were a good many women among their delegates. And the women's party convention and gatherings of suffragists all contributed to the society aspect of the week.

Before the convention opened there was the greatest demand for tickets ever known on a like occasion. The prices soared until $300 for a set looked cheap and often was refused. The opening day was so lacking in popular interest that the price began rapidly to drop and tickets for the Thursday session could be had for $1.50 each. Then things livened up, and on the expectation that a candidate would be nominated Friday the price of the pasteboards jumped up again. The shameful flooding of the hall with green tickets by the local politicians rather discouraged those who had paid out considerable sums for genuine admission cards, but on Saturday morning the trade was brisk and the prices good.

It did not take long for the people to find out that there were livelier scenes in the Auditorium than in the Coliseum, the early days of the convention, and the demand for Moose tickets was large.

BOLL WEEVIL BURLEY COMING TO CHILTON.

Through the help of Mr. J. T. Watt, State Agent, I have arranged to get Mr. Burley, better known as "Boll Weevil Burley," to give a series of lectures in Chilton county as follows:

On June 21 Verbena 10:00 a.m., Clanton 1:00p.m., Jemison 4:00 p.m., Collins Chapel 7:30 p.m.

On June 22 Macedonia 10:00 a.m., Maplesville 1:00 p.m. Benson 4:00 p. m.

Mr. Burley is a cotton planter from Louisiana, who has made cotton with a profit under heavy boll weevil infestation and under as unfavorable conditions as we will have in our county. He is in Alabama to help us in this fight, and all cotton growers and business men are requested to help advertise these meetings and to attend as many of the meetings as possible and get the benefit of a real farmers experience in fighting the greatest known cotton enemy, "the boll weevil."

All merchants and banks are requested to write and see their customers and insist that all attend.

Yours truly,

"What does it matter if there were 37 or 10,000 if they were right?"

Well if they had been right we venture there would have been more than 37. That is just what is the matter with your crowd, Mr. Press, you nor any of the rest of the bunch are ever right.

J. Bice the coal dealer of Lomax was here one day last week. He says he found that Democratic prosperity he was hunting the other day, but it happened to be of that brand that always leaves a fellow in a worse fix than it finds him.

No don't reduce poll taxes to 15 cents for the Republicans. Better do it for the Democrats who had so much trouble in voting that ticket a yard long. For when they come up in November and see how useless it was they will soon get tired of paying $1.50 for all that worry and bumfazzleation to get nothing in return.

Don't the Democrats admire that rousing speech of an hour and a half that was poured out to them on the day of their committee meeting a while back. Some of them are gagging yet, trying to throw it up and get all of it out of their systems. But maybe it won't hurt the party very bad since only 37 of them heard it, and they won't tell the rest about it.

There Were No Negroes

There were no negroes seated as delegates from Alabama to the Republican convention at Chicago, despite the false statements and vain hopes of the Clanton Press that there would be.

The Republican party in Alabama is as white as the Democratic in respect to its affiliations with the negro. And a whole lot whiter when it comes to the inward principles of the organization and its conception of government. The Democratic party is corrupt and rotten to the core, and we al know it, next thing you know the core itself will be rotten.

Was It Fair?

Why didn't The Clanton Press last week tell the whole truth of the matter in regard to the seating of Major Allison in the Republican Convention at Chicago over the negro Sanders?

They only published the first half of the story, which gave the negro preference.

If they had wanted to be fair and square to the Republicans why didn't they go on and give the whole story of the contest and say that the negro was not recognized, and Major Allison the white delegate was seated?

We say they didn't want to be fair. It was purposely their intention to try to create the wrong impression by publshing just half the truth.

The Democrats of this country see the clouds closing in about them. They feel the clutches of a reunited Americanism sinking into the shrivled and flabby form of their degenerate idealisms of the past four years. They see in the future an avalanche of disapproval at the hands of the American people, for the hoodo they have been working in the present administration.

Already they have begun to dodge here and yonder, seeking evidences that the above facts can be disproved ed by. Every day from now till Woodrow Wilson is defeated by Chas. Hughes, the Democratic papers will tell you in some way how it is impossible for such thing to happen. We will here refer them to Bill Vines in his Sunday essay, "Figgers don't lie," in which he proves that figures do lie.

Unless the present Free-Trade tariff is knocked galleywest before the great war closes, the Cleveland soup period will again be upon us in all its horrors. Let sensible men avert this calamity by putting on our national statute books a tariff law that will save us.—American Economist.

"NEGRO FOR WILSON"

All right, send for the nurse. We are fixing to give the Clanton Press a dose of medicine. Get a wet rag to hold to its throat, a glass of butter milk for a chaser, and somebody to hold its nose. Let's be sure we take all precautions, against having the dose thrown up after it is swallowed. Now, then here it is. Take it now, dear patient. We know you are already sick, but we hope for your improvement if you can keep this on your stomach.

"All the negroes of the South are not supporters of the progressive or Republican parties. Will Johnson, colored porter of the Chamber of Commerce, and known to most of the business and professional men of Birmingham, leaves tonight for St. Louis, to be present when president Wilson is renominated as the standard-bearer of the Democratic party.

"Of course, unlike some of the members of his race, who went to the two conventions at Chicago last week, he is not a delegate or even an alternate to the Democratic gathering, but he "points with pride" to the achievements of the Democratic party, and does not seem to have dulled his enthusiasm for the president. He even "views with alarm" the proposed plan of the republicans and some of the progressives in their attempt to encompass the defeat of the president."
—Birmingham Age-Herald.

The Democratic papers have made us sick and mad, wholly and tetotally by their deliberate debauchery and misrepresentation of the facts as they were enacted at Chicago last week. So anxious were they to have two tickets nominated, that they just could not help but paint up their news dispatches so they would carry a tendency toward the desired end.

The Montgomery Advertiser reached the climax though on Monday, when it said that now Teddy had refused to run, the Bull Moose adherents would flock to the Democratic party to vote for Woodrow Wilson.

That is the most preposterous assertion we have seen emerge from the whole mess.

Who will be the standard-bearer for the Democrats of Chilton county inNovember. This is a question which was thought to be settled in the recent primary, when Judge S. M. Adams was nominated over C. Reese Mullins and John Patton. Recent developments, precipitating the withdrawal of Judge Adams, leave the question now a greater mystery than ever. All right, boys, who will be it? Reynolds is waiting for him with a loaded gun.

Through all the haps and mishaps that have been observed in the national political situation recently, there is one great fact which we are proud to note, viz: All over the country both Republicans and Progressives realize the need of their coming together and uniting on one man, and wage a vigorous battle for one common cause. The need of this one thing is universally realized, and it will be done. This country is not going to be gagged and strangled and starved by another term of Wilsonism, and there's no use talking about it. The docks will soon be cleared and ready for action. Then watch how the music will start.

A Birmingham negro went to St. Louis this week to be present at the Democratic convention, when it nominates Woodrow Wilson. Look for the big head lines in the Clanton Press telling all about this. They make a specialty of giving their readers all information regarding the activities of negroes in conventions.

We would like to have a good number of our delinquent subscribers realize the necessity of paying up their back subscriptions. It is just a matter of fact that we have got to have the money. If some of those whom we have been patiently waiting on for such a long time don't begin to get busy and come across, we are going to find some means of impressing the importance of the matter on them. You know patience sometimes ceases to be a virtue.

They just wonder how we knew there were just 37 or 39 at the Democratic meeting; but before they had time to deny it, they had gottne on to that old Democratic cud which they chew about the negro and reconstruction days.

REPLY FROM MR. A. A. JACKSON

Editor Union-Banner,

Please give me space in your paper for a few words in regard to the "dose" (as Mr. Bice called it) that he gave me last week.

Now Bro. Bice, you said the subject of your letter was "All day Sunday Singings" and that you do not consider them a sincere mode of worship in the way and manner they are carried on in Chilton county, and that the all day singings are robbing God of that which justly belongs to Him.

Bro. Bice, you say anyone can lead in singings if he be saint or sinner. I expect they do. But then next you say, that sinners do not lead in Sunday School work nor in church.

Now, Bro. Bice, don't you know they do? Just refresh your memory a little and see if you cannot remember of some who were Sunday School and church workers, who were leaders in your sacred church stands, and have been convicted in your Chilton County Courts for crime and have served a sentence in the penitentiary.

And to your personal knowledge, do you not know that there are leaders in church work who are not Christians. Bro. Bice, you examine the situation closely and see if you are not mistaken in the all day Sunday singings being responsible for your empty benches at Sunday School and Church. Don't you think the people have become somewhat disgusted with the ungodly lives of some who are leaders in church work. And that is just what is robbing God, and not the all day singings.

Bro. Bice, you asked me to answer through the paper, how often I went to Sunday School. I want to say that I do not go as often as I would like to go, as my time is taken up in Sunday Singings. The churches up here in Birmingham have a different idea of all day Sunday singings to what you and your church have. They say it is helping the churches and Sunday school cause, and we all day singers can't begin to fill the calls we have to sing at the different churches. Just a few days ago we had an all day singing here. The Sunday School met early and got through and the preacher gave the rest of the time to singing. There were three or four preachers who stayed with us all day and enjoyed a great feast of sacred singing.

Now, Bro. Bice, you say you do not know how the all day singings are carried on in Birmingham and Jefferson county, but the way they are carried on in Chilton county, you do not consider them a sincere mode of worship. Bro. Bice, I will ask you to answer through the paper, how often you go to an all day singing, and what you really know about them in Chilton county.

I want to tell you that on the first Sunday in May I attended an all day singing in Chilton county, and did not see you there, but saw a lot of good people there, who did not look like robbers of God, but who were delivering to Him the things that belong to Him in the way of praise to his great and holy name.

I'll sing my Savior's grace
And His sweet name I'll praise.
I'll sing unto my Savior all day,
Because it is the bible way.

EVERGREEN

Please give me space in theUnion-Banner for a few words regarding this section of Chilton county.

We are needing rain somewhat badly in this section. I found my first cotton bloom the seventh day of June. Yes, and by the way, I have some boll weevils also in my cotton. I haven't seen any squares hurt by them yet, but I am keeping my cotton looked over as well as I can.

J. M. Williams and wife spent Saturday night at W. S. Baird's.

Arthur Baird and sister and Jim Williams and wife, went out to Corinth last Sunday to an all day singing.

I think Mr. Bice is pretty hard on all day singings. We can't just keep our young folks tied to one place at Sunday School every Sunday.. I am a great lover of good singing. The singing now is done in the church and Sunday School by the young folks. It used to be that the old folks took the front seats in singing, but now it is just the reverse,—our young take the front in church, Sunday school and in all day singings. We can praise God in singing just as we can in church or Sunday school. I have nothing against Sunday schools and we all ought to be more interested in them, but we can't afford to bind our young folks right in the same kind of things over and over again, else it won't be long till everything will be just a drag.

At preaching services singing comes first, at Sunday school singing comes first, at all day singings singing comes first and then prayer is offered.

We can praise God in the stand, in talking, as a teacher, as a leader. We can praise God in songs, and in prayer, and it for this reason that I stand for good music in the form of all day singings.

We are going to have an all day singing at this place before long. Just watch the Union-Banner and you will know about it in plenty of time.

W. S. BEAIRD.

The laws of our state are said by some persons to deal very liberally with womem.

In respect of property, the laws of our state put married women nearly on an equal with men. Women are permitted to enter our universities, to practice the professions, to hold a few public offices and to engage in any industry. For these reasoins some persons declare themselves at a loss to understand why the women of Alabama should want to be enfranchised.

Such person have not only missed the significance of the woman suffrage movement, but they have failed to appreciate the genius of our government.

We are not asking for the ballot merely for self-protection. If men had proved the best governors in the world,if they had in fact dealt most liberally with women, we would still demand a voice in our government. We oppose and the genius of our government is opposed to the parternalistic form of government, under which women are living. To speak of the liberality of men in passing laws to govern women is in itself offensive. We are glad whenever a law is passed which raises the status of women, but we feel that we should be very poor spirited indeed to accept such legislation in humility,, with gratitude. We believe ourselves, tried by every standard of justice, and reason, to be the equals of men. We think that women are only coming into their own, when men confer upon them the rights and privileges which they enjoy.

I think that the significance of the woman suffrage movement is to be found in this: While there a great many women who find our laws, our social and economic conditions oppressive, they as yet take a small part in this movement. One has to enjoy a certain amount of liberty to appreciate liberty. The majority of suffragists are women, with whom life has been comparatively easy. They have had time for thought. They have developed and progressed, and the demand for the vote is the natural result of that development and progress. This makes the ultimate success of the woman suffrage movement inevitable. Persons, who are opposed seldom, if ever, revolt until their oppression has become unbearable, and as a usual thing, they can be quelled by a sop in the way of remedial legislation; but when persons have advanced sufficiently to realize their own worth, to appreciate the dignity and value of self-government, nothing short of self-government will satisfy them.

For the sake of our own further development and progress, for the sake of the progress of democracy we ask that the ballot be given to women.

MARY WINSLOW PARTRIDGE.

FIRST COTTON BLOOM

On Wednesday morning the first cotton bloom of this season was given to us by Mr. G. S. Eiland, an old Chilton farmer, age 73, who lives in the Bethel community in Beat 10.

Mr. Eiland saye he fears the bale weevil more than he does the boll weevil.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Regulator Co., 713 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers. It is a delight to read it.

PLANTATION OWNER SPENT OVER $5,000

Mrs. Scruggs Suffered for 20 Years, and Nothing She Tried did her Good.

It may sound unreasonable, and you may believe me or not, but during the past twenty years I have paid out in the neighborhood of five thousand dollars for medicines and treatment for my wife, who has been in poor health all these years," said Mr. George W. Scruggs, a prosperous farmer, who lives on his 350-acre cotton plantation at Germantown, Tenn.

"Yes sir, my wife has been a sufferer from serious indigestion for at least twenty years," continued Mr. Scroggs. "She has been in a wretched run-down condition and was always complaining of feeling badly. She couldn't eat much, but the little she did eat caused pains in her stomach. She had headaches and it just looked like every bit of her stomach was getting away from her. She was dreadfully nervous and did not know what it was to get a good night sleep, and she would get up of mornings feeling worse than she did when she went to bed the night before. She lost about all the energy she had and could not take any interest in anything. She tried doctors and about every kind of medicine that was made I reckon, but instead of improving, she seemed to be geting worse all the time.

But I thank goodness that we have found the right medicine at last! She began taking Tanlac a short time ago, she is like a different woman now. After taking just one bottle of this medicine she began gaining shrength and improving in every way. Her sleep began to get restful, her appetite picked up, and what she ate gave her strength instead of having a bad after effect, as in the past. For the first time in fifteen years she can eat anything she wants—such things as cabbage, onions, corn, tomatoes and the like don't hurt her a particle. Her nerves are quiet and her whole system is improved. She looks and says she feels like a new woman. She is full of life and energy, andI never hear her complain any more of feeling bad. She thinks Tanlac is the greatest thing in the world, but she don't think more of it than I do, for no one is more happy over her marvelous recovery than I am."

WHAT CAN YOU DO FOR CATARRH?

Ask Yourself the question. How often has the doctor failed, as have ointments, salves, vapours? What you should do.

The easy, common-sense method—that costs so little—that is so quickly and vigorously effective—is often the last resort of many Catarrh sufferers. Why, it is hard to say. One of the specialists of the Swift Specific Company in Atlanta—a physician of standing and national reputation because of his knowledge of blood disorders, made the assertion that if the majority of Catarrh sufferers would buy and faithfully take S. S. S., they could effectually get rid of Catarrh.

S. S. S. goes straight to the seat of trouble, the blood. It spreads its influence over every organ in the body, comes through the veins and arteries, enables the mucous surfaces to exchange acids and irritating substances for red blood corpuscles that effectually cleanse the system and thus put an end to all Catarrhal poison. S. S. S. cleans out the stomach of mucous accumulations, enables only pure, blood-making materials to enter the intestines, combines with these food elements to enter the circulation, and in less than an hour is at work throughout the body in process of purification.

S. S. S. is made from barks, roots and herbs that are food and tonic for the blood. It stimulates—gives the blood power to throw off poisons. You will soon realize its wonderful influence by the absence of headache, a clearing of the air passages, a steadily improved nasal condition, and a sense of bodily relief that proves how completely Catarrh often infests the entire system.

You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. It is a remarkable remedy for all blood affections, such as Eczema, Rash, Lupus, Tetter, Psoriasis, Boils, and all other diseased conditions of the blood. For special advice on any blood disease write The Swift Specific Company, Medical Department, Room 11, Atlanta, Ga. Avoid substitutes.

JEMISON

Health of this place is fairly good at present, except Mr. Elijah Thomas who was painfully injured Sunday.

Some of our people are smiling because Roosevelt refused to accept the nomination of the Progressives at Chicago, others are happy on acsount of the fine rain that fell Monday afternoon.

Nearly everybody here attended the Children's day exercises at Oak Hill Sunday. One of the best programs was rendered that has ever been had at that place.

The way that the children spoke showed that no effort had been sparred by the committee, which was composed of Misses Gertrude Durbin, Golda Williams and Ola Rodgers.

The services were called together at 10 o'clock by the superintendent J. B. Northcutt. The children then marched in and were seated after a song by the choir. and prayer by the pastor, Rev. T. U. Crumpton.

Several quartets were sung, including a song on temperance.

A splendid educational speech was was made by Prof. F. B. Williams, after which dinner was spread, and everybody seemed to forget all their troubles for a while, except a few mutterings could be heard from some of the ladies because of the stampede of the "rounders" who go to such places only for the pies and cakes.

The exercises began again at 1:30 after several songs were directed by Prof. A. H. Glasscock. A recitation and song were given by Master Whit Millsap, followed by a temperance quartet. Then another beautiful song was sung by Whit Millsap and little Nell Wells, with Mrs. Mattie Henson at the organ. The remainder of the evening was spent in singing.

The directors were, G. W. Scott, Tane Cobber, Freeman Scott, and A. H. Glasscock, with Misses Madge Cooper and Freeman Scott as organists.

So far as we know, everybody was in a good humor and had a good time.

E. L. GLASSCOCK.

JUSTICE CHAS. HUGHES ACCEPTS NOMINATION

Believes in Thorough System of Preparedness, and Does not fear danger of Militarism.

CALLS MEXICAN COURSE OF WILSON LAMENTABLY WRONG

Republican Nominee Declares it is His "Paramount Duty" to Respond in "Critical Period."

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Justice Hughes today sent a telegram to Chairman Harding of the Republican national committee, formally accepting the nomination for the presidency.

At the same time it was announced that Justice Hughes had resigned as associate Justice of the supreme court of the United States.

The justice's resignation was accepted by the president within a few minutes after it was delivered at the White House by messenger.

Wilson Quickly Accepts Resignation

The letter of resignation contained one brief sentence. It said:

"June 10, 1916.

"To the president:

"I hereby resign the office as associate justice of the supreme court of the United States.

"I am sir,

"Respectfully yours,

"Charles E. Hughes,"

The president sent this reply:

"Dear Mr. Justice Hughes:

"I am in receipt of your letter of resignation and feel constrained to yield to your desire. I, therefore accept your resignation as justice of the supreme court of the United States to take effect at at once.

"Sincerely yours,

"Woodrow Wilson."

Did not Desire Nomination

The following is the telegram sent to Chairman Harding by Justice Hughes:

"Mr. Chairman and delegates:

"I have not desired the nomination; I have wished to remain on the bench. But in this critical period in our national history, I recognize your right to summon and my paramount duty to respond. You speak at a time of national exigency, transcending merely partisan considerations. You voice the demand for a dominant, thoroughgoing Americanism with firm protective upbuilding policies essential to our peace and security, and to that call in the crisis, I cannot fail to answer with the pledge of all that is in one for the service of our country. Therefore, I accept the nomination.

I stand for the firm and unflinching maintainance of all the rights of American citizens on land and sea. I neither impugn motives nor underestimate difficulties. But it is most regretibly true that in our foreign relations we have suffered uncalculably from the weak and vacillating course, which has been taken with regard to Mexico—a course lamentably wrong with regard to both our rights and our duties. We interfered without consistency, and while seeking to dictate when we were not concerned, we uterly failed to appreciate and discharge our plain duty to our own citizens.

Brave Words Stripped of Force

At the outset of the administration the high responsibilities of our diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations were subordinated to a conception of partisan requirements, and we presented to the world a humiliating spectacle of inaptitude, belated efforts having not to recover the influence and prestage so unfortunately sacrificed; and brave words have been stripped of their force by indecision.

"Our desire to see our diplomacy restored to its best standards and to have these advanced: to have the first ability of the country always at its command here and abroad, in diplomatic intercourse: to maintain firmly our rights under international law: insisting steadfastly upon all our rights as mutual and fully performing our international obligations: and by the clear correctness and justness of our position and our manifest disposition and ability to sustain them to dignify our place among the nations.

"I stand for an americanism that knows no ulterior purpose, for a patriotism that is single and complete. Whether native or naturalized, or whatever race or creed, we have but one country, and we do not for an instant tolerate any division of allegiance.

"I believe in making prompt provision to assure absolutely our national security. I believe in preparedness, not onlyy entirely adequate for our defense, in respect to numbers and equipment in both army and navy, but with all thoroughness to the end that in branch of the service there may be the utmost efficiency under the most competent administrative heads. We are devoted to the ideals of honorable peace.

Sees no Danger of Militarism

We wish to promote all wise and practicable measures for the just settlement of internatinonal disputes. In view of our abiding ideals, there is no danger of militarism in this country. We have no policy of aggression, no lust for territory, no zeal for strife. It is in this spirit that we demand adequate provision for nation- ense and we condemn the inexcusable neglect that has been shown in this matter of first national importance. We must have the strength which self respect demands—the power of an efficient nation ready for every emergency.

"Our preparation must be industrial and economic as well as military. Our severest tests will come after the war is over. We must make a fair and wise readjustment of the taiff, in accordance with sound proteciive principles, to insure our economic independence and to maintain American standards of living. We must conserve the just interests of labor, realizing that in democracy patriotism and national strength must be rooted in over-handed justice. In preventing as we must, unjust discriminations and monopolistic practices, we must still be zealous to assure the foundations of honest business. Particularly should we seek the expansion of foreign trade. We must not throttle American enterprise, here or abroad, but try to promote it and take pride in honorable achievements. We must take up the serious problems of transportation, of interstate and foreign commerce, in a sensible and candid manner, and provide an enduring basis for prosperity by the intelligent use of the constitutional powers of congress, so as adequately to protect the public on the one hand and on the other, to conserve the essential instrumentalities of progress.

Ready for Campaign Work.

"I stand for the principles of our civil service laws. In every department of the government the highest efficiency must be insisted upon. For all laws and programs are vain without eficient and impartial administration.

"I cannot, within the limits of this statement speak upon all the subjects that will require attention. I can only say that I fully endorse the platform you have adopted.

"I deeply appreciate the responsibility you impose. I should have been glad to have that responsibility placed upon another. But I shall undertake to meet it, grateful for the confidence you express. I sincerely trust that all former differences may be forgotten and that we may have united effort in a patriotic realization of our national need and opportunity.

"I have resigned my judicial office and I am ready to devote myself unreservedly to the campaign.

"Charles E. Hughes."

UNION GROVE

Dear Editor:

Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words.

Health here is good at present, except Miss Lessie Robinson has been on the sick list for a few days, but we hope for her a speedy recovery.

The farmers are all busy now with their crops, trying to keep the grass out, but the dreadful old boll weevil is bothering them some. Some of the farmers have found a good many in their crops already.

A crowd of the young folks of this place went kodaking last Tuesday afternoon.

Dewey Williams returned to his home in Texas last Wednesday.

Some of the girls and boys went to Mineral Springs Wednesday evening.

Mrs. G. W. Murrah spent the week end with her parents.

Mr. A. L. Robinson spent Saturday night with home folks.

Misses Bessie Chandler and Mae Dorminey spent Sunday with Misses Bessie and Lessie Robinson.

Mr. L. F. Littlefield and wife spent Sunday with Mr. J. M. Robinson and family.

Mr. C. I. Willis and family spent Sunday with Mr. A. P. Robinson and family.

Mr. Jim Dorminey went to Collins Chapel Saturday night.

Mr. Joshua Sorrell and Miss Jewel Bratton went to Oak Hill Sunday afternoon.

Messrs Herbert Lowery, Herlie Mims, Bernie Martin, Sidney Littleton and Dalton Martin were visitors at this place Sunday last.

I will close wishing much success to the Union-Banner and its many readers.

MAPLESVILLE DEFEATS SIMS BY SCORE OF 6 TO 0

In one of the shortest and best played games on the local diamond this season, the fast aggregation of Sims' All Stars went down in defeat to the tune of 6 to 0 before the Maplesville team. The game was marked by several marks of good fielding, and the general features were the pitching and Holdritch and Burkhalter for the home boys. This was the third and deciding game between the two teams, and each went into the game determined to win at any cost. The umpiring was also about the best had during the season as their work was generally fair. The attendance was large and very enthusiastic. The box score follows:

"BUGS" RAYMOND

FAMOUS PLAYS AND PLAYERS

By RANDOLPH ROSE

RANDOLPH ROSE

BUGS RAYMOND was one of the few baseball players who ever enjoyed the distinction of having a keeper. The said keeper traveled pretty generally with him on the road trips and held Raymond down to one or two beers after a game. But at home, the keeper couldn't be as constant, as Raymond was married and had more chances to elude the keeper by climbing down the fire escape and other such devices.

One day after the game in New York Raymond started down town from the Polo Grounds at 155th Street. At the first corner he stopped and had a beer. A big Pinkerton detective, paid to make a report on Raymond, noted the beer and kept out of sight.

At the next corner Raymond stopped and had another beer. As saloons are about one to a corner in this part of New York it's not hard to figure that Raymond had about thirty beers, allowing only one to the stand, by the time he reached 105th Street.

The next day John T. Brush, owner of the Giants, called Raymond on the carpet.

"Raymond," he said, "I've got the dope on you this time. You were drinking a lot of beer yesterday."

"Oh, I may have had one or two."

"No, we had you watched—you had more than that."

"Ah, Mr. Brush, I guess I had five or six maybe but no more."

"No, Raymond, our man watched you," said Mr. Brush. "Here's his full report. He watched you go in every saloon from 155th to 105th Street—he saw you drink no less than thirty beers. Why, the report even shows you ate an onion in that last saloon."

"Say, that detective is a —— liar. I never ate an onion in any one of them places, all the way to 105th Street."

THE UNION-BANNER

VOLUME V. CLANTON, ALABAMA, JUNE 22, 1916. NUMBER 12.

Platform of Republicans As Adopted at Chicago

In 1861 the Republican party stood for the Union. As it stood for the union of states, it now stands for a united people, true to American ideals loyal to American traditions, knowing no alligiance except to the Constitution, to the government, and to the flag of the United States. We believe in American policies at home and abroad.

We declare that we believe in and will enfore the protection of every American citizen in all the rights secured to him by the Constitution, treaties, and the laws of nations, at home and abroad, by land and sea. These rights, which in violation of the specific promise of their party made at Baltimore in 1912, the Democratic president and the Democratic congress have failed to defend, we will unflinchingly maintain.

We desire peace, the peace of justice and right, and believe in maintaining a straight and honest neutrality between the belligerent in the great war in Europe. We must perform all our duties an insist upon all our rights as neutrals without fear and without favor. We believe that peace and neutrality as well as the dignity and influence of the United States cannot be preserved by shifty expedients, by phrase making, by performances in language, or by attitudes ever changing in an effort to secure groupes of voters.

The present administration has destroyed our influence abroad and humiliated us in our own eyes. The Republican party believes that a firm consistent and corageous foreign policy always maintained by Republican presidents in accordance with American traditions, is the best as it is the only true way to preserve our peace and restore us to our rightful place among the nations. We believe in the pacific settlement of international disputes and favor the establishment of a world court for that purpose.

Mexican Policy Denounced

We deeply sympathize with the fifteen million people of Mexico, who for three years have seen their country devastated, their homes destroyed, their fellow citizens murdered, and their women outraged by armed bands of desperadoes led by self-seeking, conscinenceless agitators, who, when temporarily successful in any locality, have neither sought nor been able to restore order or establish and maintain peace.

We express our sorrow and indignation at the outrages which have been and are being perpetrated by these bandits upon American men and women who were or are in Mexico by invitation of the laws of the government of that country, and whose rights to security of person and property are guaranteed by solemn treaty obligations. We denounce the indefensible methods of interference employed by this administration in the international affairs of Mexico, and refer with shame to its failure to discharge the duty of this country as next friend to Mexico, its duty to other powers who have relied upon us as such friend, and its duty to our citizens in Mexico, in permitting the continuance of such conditions, first by failure to act promptly and firmly, and, second, by lending its influence to the continuation of such conditions through recognition of one of the factions responsible for these outrages.

We pledge our aid in restoring order and maintaining peace in Mexico. We promise to our citizens on and near our border, and those in Mexico, wherever they may be found, adequate and absolute protection in their lives, liberty and property.

Monroe Doctrine Affirmed

We reaffirm our approval of the Monroe doctrine and declare its maintenance to be a policy of this country essential to its present and future peace and safety and to the achievement of its manifest destiny.

We favor the continuance of Republican policies which will result in drawing more and more closely the commercial, financial and social relations between this country and the countries of Latin America.

We renew our alligence to the Philippine policy inaugurated by McKinley, approved by congress, and consistently carried out by Roosevelt and Taft. Even in this short time it has enormously improved the material and social conditions of the islands, given the Philippine people a constantly increasing participation in their govrenment, and persisted in will bring still greater benefits in the future.

We accepted the responsibility of the islands as a duty of civilization and the Filipino people. To leave with our task half done would break our pledges, injure our prestige among nations, and imperil what has already been accomplished.

We condemn the Democratic administration for its attempt to abandon the Philippines, which was prevented only by the vigorous opposition of Republican members of congress, aided by a few patriotic Democrats.

We reiterate our unqualified approval of the action taken in December, 1911, by the president and congress to secure with Russia, as with other countries, a treaty that will recognize the absolute right of expatriation and prevent all discrimination of whatever kind between American citizens, whether native born or alien and regardless of race, religion, or previous political allegiance. We renew the pledge to obsrve this principle and maintain the right of asylum which is neither to be surrendered nor restricted, and we unite in the cherished hope that the war which is now desolating the world may speedily end, with a complete and lasting restoration of brotherhood among the nations of the earth and the assurance of full equal rights, civil and religious, to all men in every land.

Adequate Army And Navy

In order to maintain our peace and make certain the security of our people within our own borders the country must have not only adequate but thorough and complete national defense, ready for any emergency. We must have a sufficient and effective regular army, and a provision for ample reserves, already drilled and disciplined, who can be called at once to the colors when the hour of danger comes.

We must have a navy so strong and so well proportioned and equipped, so thoroughly ready and prepared, that no enemy can gain command of the sea and effect a landing in force on either our western or our eastern coast. To secure these results we must have a coherent and continuous even in these perilous days the Demo cratic party has utterly failed to develop, but which we promise to give to the country.

Tariff Aid To American Plants

The Republican party stands now, always has, in the fullest sense, for the policy of tariff protection to American industries and American labor, and does not regard an anti-dumping provision as an adequate substitute. Such protection should be reasonable in amount but sufficient to protect adequately American industry and American labor and be so adjusted as to prevent undue exacations by monopolies of trusts. It should, moreover, give special attention to securing the industrial independence of the United States, as in the case of dyestuffs.

Through wise tariff and industrial legislation our industries can be so organized that they will become not only a commercial bulwark but a powerful aid to national defense.

The Underwood tariff act is a complete failure in every respct. Under its administration imports have normously increased in spite of the fact that the intercourse with foreign countries has been largely cut off by reason of the war, while the revenues of which we stand in such dire need have been greatly reduced. Under the normal conditions which prevailed prior to the war it was clearly demonstrated that this act deprived the American producer and the American wage earner of that protection which entitled them to meet their foreign competitors, and but for the adventious conditions created by the war would long since have paralyzed all forms of American industry and deprived American labor of its just reward.

It has not in the least reduced the cost of living, which has constantly advanced from the date of its enactment. Welfare of our people demands its repeal and the substitution of a measure which in peace as well as in war will produce ample revenue and give reasonable protection to all form of American production in mine, forest, field, and factory.

We favor the creation of a tariff commission with complete power to gather and complete information for the use of congress in all matters relating to the tariff.

Supervision Of Corporations.

The Republican party has long believed in the rigid supervision and strict regulation of the transportation and great corporations of the country. It has put its creed into its deeds, and all really effective laws regulating the railroads and the great industrial corporations are the work of Republican congresses and presidents. For this policy of regulation and supervision the Democrats, in a stumbling and piecemeal way, are undertaking to involve the government in business which should be left within the sphere of private enterprise and direct competition with its own citizens, a policy which is sure to result in waste, great expense to the taxpayer, and in an inferior product.

The Republican party firmly believes that all who violate the laws in regulation of business should be individually punished, but prosecution is very different from persecution, and business success, no matter how honestly attained, is apparently regarded by the Democratic party as in itself a crime. Such doctrines and beliefs choke enterprise and stifle prosperity. The Republican party believes in encouraging American business, as it believes in and will seek to advance all American interests.

We favor an effective system of rural credits as opposed to the ineffective law proposed by the present Democratic administration.

We favor the extension of the rural free delivery system and condemn the Democratic administration for curtailing and crippling it.

In view of the policies adopted by all the maritime nations to encourage their shipping interests, and in order to enable us to compete with them for the ocean carrying trade, we favor the payment to ships engaged in the foreign trade of liberal compensation for services actually rendered in carrying the mails, and such further legislation as will build up an adequate American merchant marine and give us ships which may be requistioned by the government in time of national emergency.

We are utterly opposed to the government ownership of vessels as proposed by the Democratic party, because government ownership, while effectively preventing the development of the American merchant marine by private capital, will be entirely unable to provide for the vast volume of American freights and will leave us more helpless than ever in the hard grip of foreign syndicates.

Interstate and intrastate transportation have become so intrwoven that the attempt to apply two and often several sets of laws to its regulation has produced conflicts of authority, embarrassment in operation, and inconvenience and expense to the public.

The entire transportation system of the country has become essentially national. We, therefore, favor such action by legislation or, if necessary, through an amendment to the constitution of the United States as will result in placing it under exclusive federal control.

"Raids On The Treasury."

The increasing cost of the national government and the need for the greatest economy of its resources in order to meet the growing demands of the people for government service call for the severest condemnation of the wastful appropriations of this Democratic administration, of its shameless raids on the treasury, and of its opposition to and rejection of President Taft's oft repeated proposals and earnest efforts to secure economy and efficiency through the establishment of a simple business-like budget system to which we pledge our support and which we hold to be necessary to effect any real reform in the administration of national finances.

We believe in a careful husbandry of all the natural resources of the nation—a husbandry which means development without waste; use without abuse.

The civil service law has always been sustained by the Republican party, and we renew our repeated declaration that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable. The Democratic party has created since March 4, 1913, 30,000 offices outside of the civil service law at an annual cost of $44,000,-000 to the taxpayers of the country.

We condemn the gross abuse and the misuse of the law by the present Democratic administration and pledge ourselves to a reorganization of this service along lines of efficiency and economy.

Reaffirming the attitude maintained by the Republican party, we hold that officials appointed to administer the government of any territory should be bona fide residents of the territory in which their duties are to be performed.

National Child Labor Law.

We pledge the Republican party to the faithful enforcement of all federal laws passed for the protection of labor. We favor vocational education, the enactment of a generous and comprehensive workmen's compensation law covering all government employees. We favor the collection and collation under the direction of the department of labor of complete data relating to industrial hazards for the information of congress, to the end that such legislation may be adopted as may be calculated to secure the safety, conservation, and protection of labor from the danger incident to industry and transportation.

Extension Of Vote To Women

The Republican party, reaffirming its faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people, as a measure of justice to one-half the adult people of this country, favors the extension of the suffrage to women, but recognizes the right of each state to settle this question for itself.

Such are our principles, such are our purposes and policies. We close as we began. The times are dangerous and the future is frought with peril. The great issues of the day have been confused by words and phrases. The American spirit, which Union, has been forgotten by those charged with the responsibility of power. We appeal to all Americans, whether naturalized or native born, to prove to the world that we are Americans in thought and in deed, with one loyalty, one hope, one aspiratino. We call on all Americans to be true to the spirit of America, to the great traditions of their common country and, above all things to keep the faith.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IS READY

A Sound and Expressive Editorial Opinion from The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The expected has arrived. Charles Evans Hughes is the Republican candidate for the president of the United States. Against his wish, without the slightest effort on his part to obtain the nomination, without an authorized leader working in his behalf, without an organization of any kind, with some of the most influential men in the country laboring against him, Charles Evan Hughes is made the unanimous choice of the representatives of the Republican party for the highest office in the land. It is a fact utterly without precedent since the rise of political parties in this country. Never before has the office sought a man with such persistency. Never before has it had to overcome obstacles set up by the man himself or by the circumstances of his position. Nothing less than an absolutely overwhelming public sentiment in his favor could have accomplished this result.; nothing less than a complete confidence in his ability, his integrity and his courage; nothing less than a profound conviction that Charles Evans Hughes was the one man fitted in every way for the present situation.

The development of this sentiment is not measured by weeks nor even by months. It has been slowly growing in the minds of the people for a long time. Earnest men throughout the country, men, for the most part ,not connected with political activities—business men, professional men, farmers, working men, all classes of citizens who have the interests of the country and of the party at heart, have been giving thought to the question of the candidate to be put forward by the Republicans at this time, and a year ago the trend of opinion toward Hughes was plainly discernible. The Globe-Democrat saw this trend then, and as far back as February bublicly recognized it and approved it.

There should be some good reason for such unanimity of popular opinion, particularly so when it is uninfluenced by personal appeal or partisan passion; and there is good reason. The public becamé aware of the qualities and abilities through his conduct of the gas and insurance investigations in New York in 1905-06. The popular approval at that time forced him into the office of governor of the state after he had declined the office of mayor of New York City. He did not seek the gubernatorial chair. Then, as now, he felt that the call of his services, if his services were desired, should come from the people without solicitation. He was bitterly opposed by certain strongly intrenched political and corporate interests, but the people would have no other. Nor were the people mistaken in their judgment. "No individual or group of individuals and no private interest will be permitted to dictate my policy," he said when notified of his nomination for governor in October, 1906. "I shall decide and act according to my conscience and as I believe the public interets requires." And when he became the governor he did exactly what he said he would do. His administration was notable for its absolute independence of action. It was a continuous battle against hostile interests for the public welfare, and his triumphant re-election, against all the powers that could be brought to bear against him, were one of the most dramatic and striking events in the history of American politics. His removal from the office of the governor of New York to the higher position of Justice of the supreme court of the United States in 1910 took him out of the field of political and executive activity, but he left the record as public administrator for the public good that impressed not merely New York but the entire country. So impressive it was, so remarkable in its quiet but determined aggressiveness, so just in its application of the law to all men with equal exactness, so filled with sympathy expressed in action for the downtrodden, so utterly undismayed by predatory opposition. so free from any indication of sinister influence, that it was not forgotten in the years of judicial retreat that followed; and when the time came to select a candidate for president possessing all the qualities that a Republican candidate for president should have, and who at the same time should be free from the enmities of jealousies of fractional bias, the party turned with an unparalled unanimity to Charles Evans Hughes.

Such is the man whom the Republican party has selected as its standard-bearer. The Republican party is still the Republican party, proud of its record, convinced of the rightness of its cause, facing the future determined and unafraid. With a vigorous and irreproachable leader, with a vice presidental candidate, himself of presidental stature, one who has the confidence and esteem of the entire nation; with a platform that every Republican can support with ardor and sincerity, with a situation in federal administration that demands a change, there can be no doubt of the result. Mr. Roosevelt has shown by his offer to withdraw in favor of Mr. Lodge that the Republican platform is satisfactory to him, and he has shown by his conditional declination of the Progressive nomination that he is prepared to support the nominee of the Republican convention if his attitude on "the vital questions of the day" meet with his approval. This disposition to relinquish the power he unquestionably holds in the interests of unity of the Republican party merits and will certainly receive the approbation of the country. Mr. Roosevelt has shown by these acts the sincerity of his Americanism. Even the most devoted of his adherents, when the tumult of the convention has passed they have arrived at a condition of calm thought, must have condemned a course that would have put personal feelings above every honorable consideration of the country's welfare. The time has come to put aside every thought that is not centered upon the national good. Policies should always be synonymous with patriotism, but never was the synonym more essential than now. No animosities should be permitted to have weight, no personal advantage should be allowed to have influence; the sole question should be, what is my duty to my country? In the answer to that question is to found the guide to the action of everyone who believes in Republican principles, whatever party name he may give to himself.

The Republican party has spoken. It has no regrets and no doubts, and it looks forward to November with a firm faith in the intelligence and patriotism of the people.

REPORT OF GRAND JURY SPECIAL CIRCUIT COURT

To the Hon. A. H. Alston, Presiding Judge:

We, the Grand Jury, duly empanelled and sworn at the Special June Term, 1916, of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, beg leave to make this our final report.

We have investigated 73 alleged violations of the law, and have returned into your Honor's Court 43 true bills.

We have inspected the County Court House and Jail and find both well kept and in good condition. The prisoners confined in the jail are properly cared for.

A Committee of this Grad Jury visited the County Poor House and made an investigation of the County property there and the conduct of the place. The property is in good condition and is well and neatly kept. We recommend that one of the fields be terraced as coon as the growing crop is harvested and that some minor repairs be made to the buildings. We recommend further that a section of the front porch of one of the inmate's houses be screened at once to provide a place for an afflicted and sick child where it can have fresh air and be free from flies and mosquitoes. There are twenty inmates at the Poor House at this time—eight white males and twelve females. The place is under good management.

A Committee of this Grand Jury made such inspection of the books and accounts of the various County officers as they were able to make, and examined the bodns of the County officers. All of the offices, books and records were found to be neatly kept and in so far as this Grand Jury was able to determine, correctly kept. The bond of the County Treasurer is deemed insufficient and attention was called to this fact and additional sureties or a new bond requested. All other bonds including those of the Justices of the Peace as well as County officers are deemed sufficient.

We have made a careful investigation of the Public Roads of Chilton County by inquiring diligently of witnesses from various sections of the County as to the condition of the roads and the manner of working same. We recommend that the Commissioner's Court take such steps as will insure that the good roads built by the County be kept in good condition and that the work on other roads than these trunk-line roads, or cross-county highways, be done when practicable under the direction or general supervision of the County Engineer with a view of making all the public roads of the County permanent good roads at such time as the County will be able to extend the building of permanent roads. We recommend further that those of our citizens who are subject to public road service be required to work the full time required by law, and that the Commissioner's Court, if practicable to do so, keep the County Road Machinery and county convicts at work on the roads and that some additional equipment in the way of mules, scrapers, and some other tools be added to the present outfit.

The Grand Jury is of the opinion that crimes are on the decrease in Chilton County and that this is in large measure due to the rigid enforcement of the prohibition law and the law against carrying of concealed weapons. We recommend that in cases of conviction for these offenses that hard labor sentences be imposed by the court as has been the practice heretofore under the administration of the late lamented Judge Pearson.

The Grand Jury has had under consideration cases of incendiary fires and alleged cases of perjury of witnesses testifying in court. The Grand Jury is of the opinion that more attention should be given to the investigation of these two classes of cases by future Grand Juries to the end that the practice of using perjured testimony in the trial of cases in the court may be stopped, and that people who would burn their property in order to collect insurance may be deterred.

We note that the law requiring butchers and cattle dealers to furnish the Grand Jury with record of purchasees, sale etc. has grown obsolete, as in the entire county only one has complied with the law. Future Grand Juries may be more exacting, and this is to remind all interested to refer to Sec. 6419 Crim. Code of 1907, that they may be informed of the law and comply with the same.

We beg to report that we have, after due investigation, reached the conclusion that certain indictments should not be returned in to your Honor's Court, and therefore beg to suggest that George Smith, William Gordon and J. W. Lockhart be released from our County jail.

We beg to thank your Honor for the able and efficient charge which has made our line of duty clear, and to thank our able and efficient Solicitor for valuable asssistance and advice given to us, also the Sheriff and his Deputies as well as our Baliff for prompt and courteous services rendered. Having now completed our duties for this term of this Court, we respectfully ask to be discharged.

Most respectfully submitted
GUY HIGGINS,
Foreman.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

School Fair in St. Clair County.

The Saint Clair County Fair was held in the county high school building just before the closing exercises. Contests of various kinds were enjoyed by the large crowd in attendance. The exhibits were reported to be much above the average, and a unique feature was a boy from Pell City wearing a waist and trousers made of cotton grown, spun and woven into cloth in Saint Clair County.

Poll Tax Committee

For the last three years a poll tax committee has operated in Chambers county with most successful results. The motto of the committee is, "Every White Man a Voter." A campaign committee of three, composed generally of trustees and teachers, was appointed for every school district. The newspapers cooperated heartily in giving space to the committee. In addition to publicity of this kind, letters were written to poll tax delinquents. Stationary was providede for the purpose and the campaign was conducted in a businesslike way.

For three years previous to the inauguration of this campaign, the poll tax amounted to $5, 956.50. In the three years, during which the campaign has been waged, the poll tax amounted to $9,352.50. This shows an increase of practically $3,400.00 for the three years during which the committee worked. A poll tax committe would be productive of great good in every county in the state.

Progress in the Illiteracy Campaign.

Recently an enthusiastic meeting was held in LaFayette, at which 18 district trustees, 45 teachers, and a number of citizens of Chambers county were present. The work for the summer was organized and seven schools definitely located. The people of the county are determined that illiteracy shall be eliminated from its borders. One school is already in session.

Other counties are manifesting interest in this work and Barbour counhas outlined a plan for a number of schools to be taught for at least six weeks. Autauga cunty has already started to work, one of the schools opening the middle of May. A conference of the parties interested has been held in Clay, and some of the teachers have located districts, in which they will work.

Limestone and Houston Counties have an organization under way for definite work. Other counties anticipate organizing and a large degree of progress is expected to result. The response on the part of the teachers in giving their services in this work during vacation time is worthhy of he highest commendation.

An Observation

One observation should be made by citizens of Alabama in the study of the local tax amendment, namely, the amendment does not levy a tax. It merely gives those counties desiring an increase of school revenues for the purpose of equlizing educational opportunity for their children, the opportunity to do so. Through this means the white children of Marion county, with a total length of school term of 89 days, will have an opportunity to enjoy a school term equal to their white cousins in Montgomery county, who attend school for 174 days.

Counties now have the right t o levy only a meager one-mill local tax, but the limit needs to be larger for the purpose of equilization. Some counties in northern Alabama have shorter school terms for their white children than others in the state have for their negro children and yet these northern counties are doing everything permissible under the present constitutional limitations to raise funds.

GIRL'S CLUB WORK

Through the kind hospitality and cooperation of the ladies, business men and club girls of Clanton, we are enabled to hold a County short course at the high school June 27-29. A splendid program has been arranged and some of the best workers in the state will be here to give lectures and demonstrations in the work.

Two girls from each club will be asked to attend and remain the three days that they may carry the information back to their clubs and help each member bring her work up to standard. There will be some social feature each night for their entertainment. They are assured a hearty welcome and hope each club will be represented.

We don't know what all the voters in Chilton are going to do; but we know that a great majority of them are going to vote for Judge Reynolds in November.

It means political suicide for the man who goes up against Reynolds in this fight. That is the reason it is an "honor" that every body wants bestowed on his neighbor.

We wonder if some people who are taking this paper actually think that we can run it forever without a copper cent being paid for subscription. They act like they believe such a thing.

When the campaign opens and Reynolds gets out on the stump, you will see this Democratic and independent stuff of one kind an another wilt like a hayfield in the path of a forest fire.

Come on out of the crack with your Democratic, Independent, middle of the road, straddle of the fence man for Probate Judge. What it takes to cut his hair Reynolds has got it, and the people of Chilton are anxious to see him pour it in him.

Despite the indications that the Democrats are pointing out, and their hopes to the country, the Republicans and Progressives are going into this fight against Wilson, and the Democrats, strong and vigorously united, sure and determined of ultimate victory.

Is there any better way to determine the fitness of a man for an office than by the record he has made in that office in the past? If the Press is not honorable enough, nor sensible enough to conduct the fight on vital issues, i should not cast the damper on its own party by resorting to such mean personalitics.

The good old Democratic boat in Chilton is completely at sea. First thing you know she is going up against the final doom. Already the band has begun to play "Nearer My God to Thee." Next thing you know the Clanton Press will be heralding the news of a great disaster to Chilton Democrats, like unto the fate of the Titanic. Let 'er go Gallager! The deeper she sinks the greater the glory.

The Democrats have got into an awful hole in this county. Such a hole that they can't get anybody to come in and pull them out. Their man whom they nominated for the task has thrown up the white flag and handed them back his toga.

Now the Clanton Press is trying to pull the Republicans into the hole with them by saying that we have no candidate.

What should be the motive behind the vote of every man who casts a ballot in Chilton County next November?

Our answer is this:

It should be the securing of men for our offices who will guarantee the very best interests of our county and its citizenship in the transaction of all public affairs.

We want the Clanton Press to take up the official record of Judge Reynolds while he was in office and prove by those facts there, why it believes he should not be elected again. Show why it is not for the best interest of the county that he be given the honor to which he so nobly aspires.

We believe as firmly as ever in the sincerity and genuineness of Teddy Roosevelt's patriotic Americanism. He no doubt saw that the good of the American people demanded a united effort in order to relieve the country from the oppression and disastrious results of the free trade menace, hence his refusal to run on a ticket that would keep a division, and deliver our country again into the hands of the Democrats.

The Clanton Press would have you believe that Reynolds deserted the Progressives when he secured the endorsement of the Republicans in this county. Now that is all bosh and the Clanton Press is just doing what it always seeks to do—create the wrong impression. The truth of the whole thing is that both Republicans and Progressives want Reynolds, and have openly declared for him. He is the man for our county, and you just as well admit it. Reynolds is no more actuated by his own desires and aspirations than he is by the demands of the people. He is doing what the men of the county want him to do. When he comes out in the campaign, and the cast is made in November you will see the greatest universal approval given him that has ever been given a man in our county.

IT JUST BEATS ALL

A ggod man who had long been a subscriber to our paper, happened to the great misfortune of dying not many months ago.

After the death the paper was mailed to the same address, and his family found much pleasure and comfort in reading it. Especially did they appreciate the half-column obituary that the editor laboriously contributed to the deceased father and husband.

Time went along and this family moved from their old home, where they were living when the god man left them, and went to a different address. Promptly the editor was notified to please change the paper to the new address, and he did accordingly. The paper was, as before, received and read with interest every week.

By and by, when about a year had elapsed since the death of our aforesaid friend and subscriber, the editor observed that the subscription of the paper, which the family had been getting, was unpaid.

Being in great need of money, with which to pay board bills and various and sundry other items that are want to press hard upon an editor, he decided to kindly remind this family of the subscription, feeling sure that they, as in many other cases, had just overlooked the matter, as it seemed so small to them.

A kind letter was sent to the good mother, wife of the hereinbefore mentioned deceased subscriber, begging of her, if it were convenient, to please send a money order for the dollar, that was due for the back subscription.

Well, now of course you are expecting us in this paragraph to greatly and highly eulogize her for sending this dollar promptly, inasmuch as she had been such an admirer of the paper for its kind mention of her dearly beloved upon the occasion of his demise.

But alas! We cannot tell the story as you thought.

The very next copy of the paper that was mailed following the kind appeal for the dollar, was promptly returned to the kind editor with the stamp of refusal at the hands of those who had erstewhile been such great admirers of the good old sheet.

Should we say anything more of this occurrence? Is it necessary for us to essay further, and tell our gratitude for such kind treatment? Surely you who have read the above narrative can appreciate the feeling, without us having to go into detailed description of it just here.

MINERAL SPRINGS

Health is very good at present.

Mr. Jim Collins has been sick, but is better now.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ervan Gable last Friday night and took from them their only child, which was about seven months old. The remains were laid to rest at Union Grove Saturday afternoon.

It is sad that the one we cherish
Shold be taken from our home,
But the joys that don't perish
Live in memory alone.
All the days were spent together
All the happy golden hours
Shall be cherished in remembrance
Fragrants sweet from memory's flowers.
We had a little treasure once
She was our joy and pride
We loved her, Oh, perhaps to well
For soon she slept, and died,
All is dark within our dwelling
Lonely are our hearts today
For the one we loved so dearly
Has forever pessed awey.

MR. E. H. SMITH WRITES CONCERNING PENSIONS

Editor Union-Banner:

Will you allowe me a small space in your paper?

In looking over the pension list of Chilton County, I find that there are 125 old Confederate soldiers and about 115 widows of Confederate soldiers deserving pensions in this county, making a total of 240 pensioners in Chilton County.

I want to say to those old Confederate soldiers and widows that I attended the reunion on the 16, 17 and 18 of May in Birmingham, and while there I had the honor of hearing Hon. John M. Tillman, Representative in congress from Arkansas, who introduced a bill in congress, which provides for the payment of $500 to old Confederate soldiers and widows and $30 per month during the remainder of their lives.

Now then, I want every Confederate and every widow of a Confederate soldier to meet me in Clanton on the first day of July and approve the Hon. John M. Tillman Bill. Let us ask the Congressmen of this state to boost the passage of this bill.

Just here I wish to say that the pension bill that Senator Tillman has introduced does not come out of the United States treasury, but it is from other sources; first, from captured and abandoned property, second from confiscated property, and third from the collection of the cotton tax from 1863 to 1878. This cotton tax as is well known, was declared unconstitutional, and by justice and rights, it belongs to the Southern states and it ought to come home. I now call on the United Daughters of the Confederacy in Clanton to aid the old Confederate soldiers in this move. Let every person who is in favor of the passage of the Tillman Bill, bring dinner to the Courthouse on Saturday, July 1, 1916. I solicit Hons. E. B. Deason, L. H. Reynolds, S. M. Adams and J. O. Middleton to address us on that day, on some subject concerning pensions. But no politics, if you please, and let it be a day never to be forgotten. I hope that the Hon. Thomas Curry will attend and give us his convictions on the Tillman bill.

Listen, old comrades, that is the day we are to draw our pensions. And had you not rather draw $500 and then $90 a quarter, than to draw 18. 20. Thanks, Mr. Editor in advance.

Yours truly,
E. H. SMITH.

CARE OF THE TEETH

Please give me a space in the Union-Banner to say a few words about the care of the teeth.

"A clean tooth never decays."

A tooth brush and warm water should be used night and morning thoroughly. Both the inner and outer surfaces of the teeth should be cleansed perfectly. To clean the upper teeth, the brush should be drawn from the gums downward; to clean the lawer teeth it should be drawn from the gums upward.

A little good tooth powder used on the brush once a day is helpful. The care of the teeth in childhood will prevent much pain and sickness in later years.

The grinding or meat or biting off thread of the ends of the finger nails is hurtful to the teeth, as the enamel is likely to be fractured.

The teeth should be examined at least twice a year by a dentist, and any decaying places should be repaired. Decayed teeth make the whole mouth sore, and the result is that the food eaten is poorly chewed, which brings on an ultimate result of imperfect digestion.

The cavaties in decaying teeth is a breeding place for disease germs. The outer part of the teeth is crowned with a thin layer of hard, shiny substance called enamel. This serves as a protection to the inner porous bony part from bacteria which bring on decay.

Small food particles clinging to the teeth after eating makes the bacteria grow rapidly and produces an acid. This may soften the enamel and thus let the acid and bacteria get to the porous part of the tooth, which then sets up decaying rapidly. For this reason a strong thread called dental floss or a wooden toothpick should be used to remove the bits of food that collect between the teeth after each meal.

The biting of the finger nails may crack the enamel and then the tooth will decay. If the teeth are washed morning and night and the enamel not broken and go to the dentist twice a year and have them examined the teeth will not decay.

Decayed teeth make the mouth sore and the food is not chewed properly, for this reason the teeth should have good care during childhood. A clean mouth and sound teeth have much to do in keeping a person well. The germs which cause nearly a half million deaths in the United States every year enter the body through the mouth. It is just as important to wash the mouth and teeth as it is to wash the face and hands. A few germs of diphtheria, sore throat or tuberculosis are likely to get into the mouth any day, but if the mouth and teeth are well washed with a brush morning and night the germ will not have time to grow and cause sickness, but if the mouth is unclean they will remain there and grow. Toothache is caused from decayed teeth. A tooth does not ache until it has a hole in it. The tender nerves within give us warning that it is being hurt. The dentist can stop the ache

You should look at your teeth every month and feel about them with a wooden tooth pick to know when the decay begins, if the little hole is mended as soon as formed you will never have toothache and you can keep your teeth as long as you live. If the teeth are not straight the dentist should be asked to help straighten them as soon as they appear crooked.

The dentist can stop the decay in a tooth by cleaning out the little hole and filling it with gold or some other material. It may cause and little pain and expense to have the teeth filled, but it will save a hundred times as much pain and expense later.

The health of the whole body depends on the work done by the teeth, unless they do their part the stomach cannot get the food ready for the blood. A part of the body chewed food is turned into a poison further down in the food chanel, and this is what makes many people feel so tired and miserable much of the time.

Hundreds of men have been refused admission to our army because they have poor teeth. Soldiers must be strong and well to take long marches and fight battles. Sound teeth give strength and health.

Hope every reader of this paper that reads this will take my advice and care for their teeth.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SETTLEMENT NOTICE

THE STATE of ALABAMA,
Chilton County.
Probate Court.
June 5th 1916.

In the matter of the estate of J. M. Kennard, deceased, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. surety on the bond of C. A. Gunn, deceased as Administrator of the Estate of said deceased, this day came and files his account, vouchers, evidence, and statement for a final settlement of said Administration.

It is ordered that the 17th day of July ,1916, be appointed a day on which to make such settlement, at which time all persons interested can appear and contest the said settlement if they think proper.

Witness my hand, this 22nd day of June 1916,

E. B. DEASON,
Judge of Probate.

Of course, it is barely possible that our Free-Trade administration is going so far out of its way to favor foreign industrial enterprises at the expense of home-developed institutions, maybe laboring under the delusion that it is thus carrying out its Baltimore platform pledge to protect American citizens having property in foreign countries. It certainly has not protected them otherwise up to the hour we rush respectfully to the press.—American Economist.

ALRED DRUG CO. GETS AGENCY FOR "FERRALINE"

After spending severtl days looking over this territory, we have decided to place the agency for "Ferraline" in Clanton, said a representative of the Franklin Medicine Company, Inc.

We have a great remedy in "Ferraline," one that is truyl wonderful. It will give to the people of Clanton a tonic, the like of which they have never before known, and is one that will absolutely build up run-down conditioins.

The Alrad Drug Company will be our exclusive agents for "Ferraline" in Clanton, and in securing the agency for "Ferraline" they placed with the representative of the Franklin Medicine Co., Inc., a very large order for this wonderful compound.

"Ferraline" Tonic will do more towards restoring to permanent health those, whose systems need a tonic, whose stomachs from dyspepsia have become inflamed or ulcerated, than any remedy known. It aids digestion and is assimulated by the most delicate stomach known. There is no better remedy to be had for sour stomach, either in baby or in adult. It is pleasant to take, and gives the taste of drinking a mineral springs water.

"Ferraline" does not contain alcohol, which is a habit-forming poisonous drug and dangerous to inflamed or ulcerated stomachs, due to its deterious effect upon the lining and membrane of the stomach. Instead of irritating, it heals. It gives to the system rich, red blood, and eliminates impurities and poisons from the body in the manner intended by natnre.

Every carton containing "Ferraline" shows the formula, and all physicians know that it will do what the company claims for it—build up the system, and heal stomach complaints, where there exists any inflamed or ulcerated condition, and that it will aid digestion and give rich corpuscles to the blood.

No other tonic known will do for you what "Ferraline" will do, and watch this paper for people that have used "Ferraline" with marvelous results.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Regulator Co., 713 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers. It is a delight to read it.

BELIEVES HE COULD WIN IN A FOOT RACE

Woodward says he is just Brimful of New Life and Energy since Taking Tanlac.

"I feel just like getting out there in the street now and outrunning any man in this town," was the characteristic statement made by J. B. Woodward, a well known citiken of Lexington, Ky., in telling his friends of the remarkable benefits he had derived from Tanlac.

"Yes, sir, it's a fact," he continued, "I have only used Tanlac for about two weeks now and I am like a new man. I feel just brimful of new life and energy, and my family and all of my friends can see the difference in my condition.

"Before I began taking Tanlac I could not raise my left hand to my head and it had been that way for fully two years. I suffered from stomach trouble, rheumatism and neuralgia, and no other medicine seemed to do me a particle of good. It certainly was a great day for me when I heard of Tanlac and I take great pleasure in recommending it."

The above statement appeared in a recent issue of The Lexington Leader, and it is only one of many thousands of similar statements that have been given by grateful users of Tanlac in all parts of the country from Maine to Mexico. Tanlac is now on sale in practically every city, town and village throughout the entire United States and is selling at the phenomenal rate of five million bottles per year.

Tanlac is sold in Clanton exclusively by Upchurch Drug Co.

THE YOUNG MAN'S PROGRAM

By Dr. Frank Crane in The Birmingham News—

A man being of sound health and disposing mind, and of the age of twenty-one, hereby set down these things that I have resolved: I will profit by the experience of others and not wait to learn sense by my own experience.

I will study the older men I meet and will find out from them what is profitable and what is bad. I will not insist on the expensive and often fatal method of trying out everything for myself.

I will be teachable. From every human being I encounter I will learn something.

I will avoid egotism, boasting, speaking of myself and all other forms of vanity, as disgusting to my friends and weakening to my own personality.

I will deeide by my intellect what my tastes ought to be and make myself like the right things.

I will put away the weakling's arguments that I can't help my likes and dislikes.

I will find out what kind of food is good for my health and learn to like that.

I will put no stimulant of any kind into my body.

I will learn how to be genial and convivial without artificial and poisonous foods, drinks or drugs.

I will keep clean in body and in mind.

I will investigate the sex question, find out the facts and laws about it, and then settle in by my intelligence once and all, so that I will not be led into folly by an unreasoning desire, but shall keep that desire under my will, strong and helpful to minister to my welfare and to the welfare of those that love me.

I will not accept as a satisfactory standard what the majority of people are and do, but will decide for myself what is right and normal and stick to that.

I wil allow no person or institution to coerce my opinion; my judgment shall remain unterrified, unbribed, unseduced. In this I will not be truculent and offensive, but modest and open to the conviction.

I will not declare my belief in anything, religious, social or scientific that I do not clearly understand.

I wil learn to do some one kind of work expertly, and make my living by that.

I will accept no inheritance, gift, loan, bribe, graft or other unearned money or goods. I will take from the world only the FAIR EQUIVALENT OF WHAT I GIVE IT.

I will never take revenge, will harbor no grudges and utterly eliminate any spirit of retaliation. Life is too short for destruction; all my efforts shall be constructive.

I will not engage in any business or sport that implies fraud, cruelty, or injustice to any living thing. I will hurt no child, punish no man, wrong no woman.

In everything I do, I will strive to add a little to the sum of happiness and subtract a little from the sum of misery of all living creatures.

I will constantly try to make myself agreeable to all persons, with whom I come in contact.

I will never indulge in self-pity, nor will I speak disparagingly of myself. I will talk of myself as little as possible.

I will regulate myself strictly but will never undertake to regulate anybody else. I will mind my own business.

I will cooperate with others in organizations for service, but will belong to no organizations that involve uniformity of opinion.

I know death is as natural as birth that I am to die, and that no man knows his hour. I will not fret at this, nor try to dodge it, but so live that I am ready to go each day.

I will be lieve that honesty is better than crookedness, kindness is better than cruelty, truth is better than lies, cleanliness is better than dirt, loyalty is better that trechery, and love is better than hate and coldness; and I will trust my life and my career to an unfailing reliance upon this creed.

Baseball News of Local Games and the Players

CLANTON WILL PLAY ACIPCO HERE ON JULY THE FOURTH

On the fourth of July the Clanton baseball team will engage the Acipco team of Birmingham in a double header at the eastside park. The coming team is a live city leaguer of the magic city and a good game is expected.

CLANTON AND SYLACAUGA EVEN ON DOUBLE HEADER

The series of games between Clanton and Sylacauga closed last Thursday with a double header in the latter city.

The entire series consisted of six games, three played here a few weeks ago, and the three played there last week.

In the games Thursday the break was even, Clanton winning the first game by score of 4 to 2. Clanton's batteries were Cook and Pyron; for Sylacauga, Stewart, Shin and Jenkins.

The second game was handled by Pyron andPyron for Clanton, and D. Stewart and Shin for Sylacauga. The score was 3 to 2 in favor of Sylacauga.

Umpire for both games was Ed Headley.

The hitting of Cook for the Clanton team was a remarkable feature. He went up 8 times and landed 7 safe hits in the two games. Besides being a splendid hurler, Cook displays valuable ability as a hitter.

The home boys returned Friday night, well pleased with the treatment of the Sylacauga boys, but with some complaint on the umpiring that was handed them by Headley.

If you are one that believes that the tariff has nothing to do with the country's progress and prosperity, turn the leaves of the book of time back to the Cleveland bread lines and soup joints. The nation was rejuvinated as if by magic, when the protective tariff got to working after that awful period of want and misery. Be not hoodooed by the siren song of the Free-Trade speelbinders.

GEORGE FOSTER

FAMOUS PLAYS AND PLAYERS

By RANDOLPH ROSE

RANDOLPH ROSE

GEORGE FOSTER. When it comes to pitching, Foster is a real pitcher. It always struck me that the major leagues were a little slow in picking up this "phenom," for he played a whole year of marvelous ball with Houston in the Texas League, back in 1912, before the Boston Red Sox made sufficient effort to get him.

I think the majors first woke up to him about that time in a spring series of games between McGraw's Giants and the Houston, Texas, team. Of course, the Giants look upon Texas league teams as their meat, but this day with Foster up, the Texas team beat the Giants, 2 to 1.

This was the first game the New York team had lost to a Texas team in five years and it sure did break their hearts, and also it woke them up to the fact that this young gentleman, Foster, was there with the lick.

Last season, with the Red Sox, he was the mainstay of the club, for with Wood absent, the team had seemingly lost its principal pitching strength. But Foster stepped into the breach and helped win the pennant. He's a hustler, a tireless worker, and the kind of a player I always have admired.

Foster was born in Bokoshe, Oklahoma, and is twenty-six years old. He sure made good in the world's series last fall. He won the second game of the series, working against Mayer of Philadelphia, and carried the game home with him by a 2 to 1 score, allowing only three hits. Foster came back in the fifth and decisive game, and working against Mayer and also Rixey, won by a 5 to 4 score. In this game he allowed nine hits.

The experts tell me he ought to be good for several more good years.

Foster had quite a fight battling his way to the top. He started out in Tulsa in 1908, and it was not until 1913 he really arrived with Boston, in the meantime having one try-out with St. Louis, but he did not catch on. He was with Savannah in the Sally League for a short time in 1911.

What Muscle Shoals Is To The South

Vast Project Gives Hope Of New Industrial Era In Unending Supply Of Nitrates

Right at this time the greatest industrial opportunity ever offered the South is ours.

We refer, of course, to the Muscle Shoals—the damming of the Tennessee river at and above the "Tri-Cities" to make the river navigable over the Muscle Shoals and on to the Ohio; the building of nitrate plants for ammunition; the manufacture of fertilizer through the cyanamid process; and the attracting to Alabama of big industries that are looking for cheap water power.

Congress has finished its work on this great endeavor, opposed as it was, by the "powder interests that at present have the nitrates pretty well "sewed up." Now it remains for the President of the United States to select the site. It is natural for the people of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Mississippi and Kentucky to urge upon the President the selection of the Muscle Shoals. It will be of vast benefit to the people of these states and even to the entire South.

Naturally other sections of country will make claims upon the President for the selection of their water-power rivers. It is fortunate for the people of the Central South that the Muscle Shoals is so vastly superior, in several ways, to other water power sites If the President selects the Muscle Shoals it will only mean that he, in his judgment, sees what Nature herself points out—that here in our own country is an unrealized project that quickens the imagination as did the building the Panama Canal.

Here far inland—safe from attack from any foreign nation, however powerful—is the natural source of our nitrates for supplies of ammunition in time of war. Here and on transmission lines, can be built nitrate plants that will take nitrogen from the air as is being done in Norway and Germany. If we were to get involved in war now with a powerful nation and if that nation's navy were powerful enough to shut off our supply of nitrate from Chile, we would find ourselves in a more or less helpless condition. But with enough nitrate plants, built at the Muscle Shoals and on the transmission lines from the great dams, we would be independent of imported nitrates and source of supply, being so far inland, would be safe from capture or serious injury.

This is just one of the truly magnificent phases of the Muscle Shoals development. Anotner one that may come home to thousands of us with even greater force, is the making of fertilizers from the nitrogen in the air and the phosphate rock of the Tennessee Valley. Right in this lovely valley are virtually unlimited supplies of phosphate rock—unused now—that, with the nitrate plants, would go into the making of reasonable-priced fertilizers for American farmers.

At present, the price of nitrates is so high that only bare quantities can be used by our farmers. It is high because the nations at war have more money to pay for nitrates than our farmers and because of present excessive ocean freight rates. The fertilizer manufacturers have only limited quantities of nitrates to offer, and the farmers couldn't buy more even if the fertilizer manufacturers had them. We of the South, as well as many farmers of the East and West suffer under present conditions. We have no nitrate plants like Norway and Germany.

What a condition for a people to be in when we have right at our doors such water-power possibilities that do not exist in all of Germany. This condition effects every chick and child of us because it means serious reduction in our crops, and serious reduction in crops brings loss to every man and woman no matter what his or her occupation. We have not yet reached the point where we can give back to soil all the nitrogen it needs through the planting of legumes. Our soil has been cotton farmed and corn farmed for so long that it will be a good while before all the lost nitrogen is made up for by the continued planting of legumes.

But with the nitrate plants made possible by vast and cheap water power, and the phosphate rock and the lime rock of the Tennessee Valley we could have reasonable priced fertilizers for hundreds of thousands of farms that are now being cropped with just as little fertilizer as possible. What an opportunity! What a prospect!

Then again: the damming of the Tennessee river and producing greater horse power than exists, either actually or potentially, anywhere else in the United States, would bring to the Central South large manufacturing concerns. And how much the South needs manufacturing. We are making solid progress agriculturally, despite the lack of fertilizers. But our progress as a people is dependent in large measure on the building up of manufacturing enterprises to give employment to town and city dwellers, thus enlarging our markets for our livestock, our grains and hays, and our poultry and truck. As it is now the bulk of Southern produce that is marketed goes to the North and Central West and our people have heavy freight tolls to pay.

Our opportunity for agricultural production is without limit. But we have limited home markets because we have not the industrial population—the consuming population—that northern and western centers have.

The Muscle Shoals project will give to the South an opportunity for manufacturing that it has not had before. The South, of all sections, needs most this spirit of manufacturing and power made aailable for manufacturing. The Muscle Shoals will give us both.

Theodore Roosevelt has a sure place in American history as the man who "gave us" the Panama Canal. President Wilson's name will live in the agricultural and industrial history of the New South if he selects the Muscle Shoals site. Of course, this "human" phase of the question—a natural desire to have a great part in an enterprise meaning so much to this and future generations—should have no part in the selection of the water-power site for nitrate plants. The President will decide on merit, and we repeat that it is fortunate that the Central South has such tremendous water power that can be so effectually harnessed so far inland and right alongside extensive deposits of phosphate rock and lime rock. No other site in the United States is comparable to it.

These outstanding facts, presented accurately, and completely will of course be given to the President. He will make the decision on facts. Therefore, our people can have strong hopes of the Muscle Shoals development beginning at an early date. This development will last through a number of years. When it is completed it is safe to say that it will be the most magnificent development of its kind in the entire world.

Here in the United States, for the first time— and in the Central South we will have greater water power than any section of the Union.

Here we will have nitrate plants taking from the air an unending supply of nitrogen for ammunition for the Army and Navy, no matter how great the need for it may become.

Here we will have nitrogen from the air combined with the phosphate rock of the Tennessee Valley giving our farmers unlimited supplies of fertilizer for many years to come.

Here we will have big new factories using this vast cheap water-power and stimulating industry as never before in any part of the South.

Last, but possibly not least, the Tennessee river will be navigable over the Muscle Shoals, for the shoals will be buried under an immensity of dammed up waters.

The Muscle Shoals, viewed solely in the light of cold scientific facts, stirs the imagination of the Central South and gives a vision of industrial possibilities that our people have never had before.

Is Your Family Canning The Surplus?

The heading on top of these pictures is not intended to be funny. It is intended to mean exactly what it says, "Can All You Can Can."

Let us get away from figures—but not facts--for a little while and try to realize what a tremendous advantage we in this section have over city people. Now by city people we don't mean folks who live in Montgomery, Mobile, Birmingham or Selma, where most people can have a garden and a yard too if they have a mind to. We mean dwellers in the cities—Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, St. Louis, New York, Chicago and such great centers of population. In not one of these cities is it possible for the average family to produce anything that goes on its table. Everything, absolutely everything mind you has to be bought—and at highest prices. Most of the income of the average family in these cities goes for bottled milk, butter, boxed breakfast bacon, cold storage eggs, canned beans, canned peas, canned soups and canned everything else. Baltimore, it is true, has maghificent markets but it is the onl one of the cities mentioned where fresh, country produce can be easily obtained.

No Chance To Save

The city dweller has a hard time of it, for after paying for what goes on the table he has but little left with which to pay rent buy clothing and pay car fare. He is hemmed in on every side by brick walls. He has no place to keep any chickens, no place to plant a little garden. The only method of having enough on the table is to get the best salary he can and then turn right around and give it to the corner grocer, the milkman and the butcher just around the block.

This having to buy—at maximum prices--every single, solitary thing that goes on the table keeps the average city dweller's nose perpetually to the grindstone. He has not much chance to get ahead, and the average city dweller never does get ahead.

They Try To Get Out

There are thousands upon thousands of people in the cities mentioned who would give most anything for a little plot of ground on which they could raise a garden and shut off some of the eternal expense of keeping up the table. But there is but little ground to be had and what is available is too costly to use for gardening. In desperation many of these people, in the last few years of high-priced foodstuffs, have gone out on the suburban railroads to small communities some distance from the cities. But in doing this their railroad fare back and forth every day amounts often to more than they can make with a garden three months in the year.

There Is No Answer

There are thousands upon thousands of these people who sometimes sit down and frankly ask themselves "What am I going to do? Everything I make goes out as fast as I make it, and prices are still going up."

There is no answer to this question. There never will be any answer to it until cities are built differently from what they are at present. Do you think we are over-stating the case? Well, you go and live with the average big city family for a year and meanwhile look at the neighbors about you and you will find that we have put the situation mildly.

hn r vouxa aGduoa ':jz:pmmfm

Are You Like Indians?

And so we say that our people in this territory do not realize what a tremendous advantage they have over the city dweller. Here we can all have our gardens, if we have any desire to have them, and we can raise enough to can for a good part of the winter. Every family that has any ground—and what family cannot have some ground if it really tries to get it--can produce most everything that goes on the table.

Are you doing this? If you have a nice garden, with some berries and fruit trees about the place, are you getting ready to can just as mpch as you can for this winter's use? Have you got your cans ready and your canner? If not, you are somewhat like the Indians who used to kill buffalo, eat all they could and then fast falo, eat all they could and then fast until some more buffalo could be found.

Are You In The Work?

The pictures above mean a good deal. They show the new spirit of the South in practice—canning in summer for the winter. These women of the canning clubs, and the girls of our canning clubs, are doing a work whose importance and value simply cannot be over estimated.

Are you in this work? Have you a daughter in it? It there a canning club worker in your territory? It not, the fault is partly yours. We must have a canning club agent in every county, we must have this work grow, we must have our people realize its value in dollars and cents.

Write Miss Reese

Do you know how to can by the cold-pack method? If not, find out from the nearest canning club agent. If you have no canning club worker, then write to Miss Madge Reese at Auburn, Ala., and she will help you. This hard working young woman and her hard-working associates over the State are doing all they can to help the people save their fruits and vegetables for winter use and for sale as well. Some of our girls are making nice money by canning and preserving and selling the canned vegetables and fruits and the preserves and jellies. Many of these girls will make more and more money from season to season. There is always a market for canned products if the products are good and the canning is done right. There always will be a market for them, for there are so many people who have not the desire or the opportunity to raise what they eat.

Here in this territory you have this opportunity which the city dweller does not have. If you have not the desire to raise a garden and plant and take care of some fruit trees and can the surplus, the fault is your own. Some day you will realize what you have lost and are losing by not producing your own vegetables and fruits and canning them.

Cold Pack Method

The cold-pack system of canning does away in large measure with the hot kitchen canning of the old days. It does not eliminate work by any means, but it does make the work far easier. Our mothers, in days not far back, had to stay in a steaming hot kitchen over a furnace-like stove cooking the stuff that was to be canned. Some genius thought that the stuff could be cooked just as well after it was put in the cans as before, and hence we have the cold-pack system. Nowadays, with the modern canner, we can do our canning outdoors under the shade trees if we have a mind to.

Good folks, this is a big thing. It means dollars and cents and better living. Have you got a part in it?

Weaning Time

If the sow and litter has been properly cared for thus far, the pigs may by weaned without noticing the change. The pigs should be eating and drinking with their mother before any attempt is made to wean them. The sows and pigs should then be separated, removing the sows to some other pasture or lot, and letting the pigs remain in the quarters they are used to. Continue the feeding of the same rations to the pigs that was fed to the sow before weaning, as a change at this time is liable to upset the pigs' digestive system. Many a runt is started upon its miserable career at this time. All pens, troughs, etc., should be kept in a sanitary condition.

It will pay well to run the pigs through a dipping vat filled with one of the standard dips once each three or four weeks. The modern rubbing post or hog oiler are good paying devices, as they do away with vermin and prevent skin disease.

Now, as to the weanling pig ration, nothing can beat milk, but in its absence a good slop can be made of six parts bran or ground oats mixed with enough water to make the mixture slightly thicker than milk. This is fed nicely in V-shaped troughs on a cement feeding floor. The pigs should be fed several times each day at first, and they will soon forget that they ever had a mother. They seem to enjoy corn dry, and it is just as well fed that way. After pigs have ben weaned two or three weeks it is a good plan to feed shelled corn and tankage in a self-feeder where they can get it as they want it and they will soon make hogs of themselves.

HE DIDN'T WASTE IT.

A little boy went to Sunday school for the first time. His mother gave him a nickel to put in the collection When he returned he had a sack of candy.

"Where did you get the candy?" asked his mother.

"From the stand around the corner

"But what did you buy it with?"

"With the nickel you gave me."

"But that was for Sunday school!"

"Well," replied the boy, "I didn't need it. The minter met me at the door and got me in free."

For Crimson Clover In The South

A dollar's worth of crimson clover seed grown experimentally on a few acres at first, the sowing of the seed thus grown and steady persistent culture on large areas more than doubled the producing power of one farm in South Carolina and saved considerable expense in purchasing fertilizre.

"Don't try to raise too much clover at first" is the advice of this farm owner who spoke at a clover meeting in Laurens, South Carolina, to more than 500 interested farmers. "Start with a small area and first learn how to handle the crop. I had the poorest land in the county to work and I started growing clover with a dollar's worth of seed nine years ago. I have not bought any seed since." The following directions, gained from his years of experience in growing crimson clover on the soils of South Carolina, were given by the speaker.

"Sow all land by September 15. If the sowing is earlier the clover is apt to be sun-killed. Later sowing will give the clover insufficient time for rooting before the winter frosts. The seed should be planted on soil which has been inocculated either with soils from other areas on which clover has been grown or with soil cultures, although the speaker stated that he had never had to inoculate. The seed should be sowed with the chaff just as it is gathered from the ripened heads. The seeds need not be covered, though a light covering of earth is thought to give a better stand. To make hay, the clover should be cut as it begins to bloom, although where it is grown to improve the soil this grower prefers to feed it to the land.

"Turning clover should start when the most forward patches are in full bloom. Before starting to turn the clover it should be double disked both ways with the harrow. This lays the clover and prepares the ground so that the turning may be done more evenly. Half of the farm is then plowed under at the time when cotton should be planted.

"To allow plenty of the clover to mature for seed, 5 foot rows should be laid off for cotton. At these intervals 25 to 30 inch beds of cotton are planted and strips of crimson clover thirty inches wide are left to mature for seed in between the rows of cotton. When the ripe clover heads turn brown and the seeds will strip easily they may be stripped by hand.

"After the seed are gathered from the clover strips a piece of railroad iron is dragged over the remaining clover when it is wet. This lays the plants all flat and the one-horse turn plow may then be used to cover it up snugly. In this way the remaining clover will soon rot and be ready to mix with the soil when it is desired to plant the rest in cotton."

GUINEA CHICKS

It takes the guinea's eggs from 26 to 30 days to hatch. As soon as the chicks are dry give them some bread crumbs and repeat every two hours all they eat up clean the first two days. Also keep before them clean water and plenty of grit. Make them a little run out on the lawn where the grass is young and tender, as they eat a lot of grass.

I have a poultry hen bring off the little guineas, writes Mrs. Willard W. Tuttle, as they are sure to be shy and a little wild if brought up by a guinea hen. Have the hen shut in the coop which is fixed so the little guineas can run in to her. I keep them in a run for two weeks, changing the run often onto new ground and feeding them bread crumbs and cottage cheese every two hours and for their last feed at night cracked corn. I see to it that they do not miss a feed or that they are never without clean water and grit.

When they get their feathers, which will be in about two weeks or a little over, I then let them run as soon as the dew is off the grass. On rainy days I keep the hen shut in, but let the guineas have their freedom, as they will not go far without the hen. They are very good layers; once they start to lay they will keep it up till cold weather. My guineas will lay in the coop with the hens and we find the eggs and the young very delicious eating.

At Last We Get Rural Credits Bill

Government Will Put Up Money And Twelve Land Banks Will Be Established

Well, it looks like at last we are to have a Rural Credits system.

The present plans, now being "conferred" on in Congress, are based in part on the German system. The German system was established a century ago. It has enabled German farmers to borrow money at a low rate of interest, and with this money to build up their farms, stock them with livestock and establish themselves on a permanent basis. The German system, of course, gives the farmers a good long time in which to pay back the principal. Rural credits for German farmers has been one of the main factors in making Germany such a compact and self-sustaining nation. German efficiency and the German industrial and military systems have as their foundation the best agricultural system of any country. Those who talk of German farmers being "oppressed" evidently do not know that the German farmer gets money at four per cent. No man can be very much "oppressed" who can get money at four per cent.

The chief difference between our rural credits system to-be and the one in Germany is that here the government will put up the money. This is known by the politicians as "paternalism," but "paternalism" may be made a very beneficial thing if it is based on business principles and applied in a business-like way. The government will put up the money that the farmers will borrow, it being handled by twelve land banks established in various parts of the country. The money itself will go through local associations direct to the farmers. The farmers will get the money at about six per cent. This isn't as low interest as charged in Germany, but it is satisfactory. The time limit on paying back the principal will be thirty-six years. The man who can't pay the money back in thirty-six years had better quit farming and get him a job somewhere.

The money, it is presumed, will not be loaned to Tom, Dick and Harry. It will be loaned to men who own farms, live on them and who are trying to build up their farms and make them more productive and more profitable. It will enable these men to pay off debts and make permanent improvements. And the more improvements they make in the way of barns, silos, drainage systems, homes, waterworks, etc., the more valuable will their farms become and the greater their earning power and the greater the opportunity for and the chances of permanent success. Farmers will then not have to sacrifice crops because of notes coming due in the fall. They will not have to keep borrowing from season to season to make a crop so that they can secure another loan. They will have a chance to farm as nature intended—rotate the crops, have more livestock, and build up for seasons ahead rather than for the debt-paying time every fall.

+ +

In short, rural credits, handled in a business-like way and by men who understand the importance of a permanent agriculture and who have a real sympathy for the man on the land, will be a God's blessing. It will not make anybody any more efficient or have any control over the weather or a wife with a temper. But it will give the earnest, hard-working farmer a chance to get ahead—and a real chance is all any ambitious, hard-working man wants.

+ +

It will encourage the owning of land. If a man knows that he can borrow long-time money at six per cent to improve a farm, he will make an extra effort to own a farm.

It will put more people to tilling the soil, and that's what all of America needs, except such states as Illinois and Iowa.

It will quicken interest in and knowledge of agriculture in every part of our country.

It will mean the paying of debts more promptly, and here in the Central South it will mean, in many cases, a getting away from our "credit system."

It will mean new bank accounts and a more systematic increase of bank accounts—old and new.

It will mean more stability in merchandising.

It will mean an increase in land values.

It will mean that we have at last realized that no country can be great and strong within itself without a large proportion of its population living on the land and cultivating it with profit.

NEARER HEAVEN.

A little nearer haven
When within our hearts the dove
Of the peace of simple living
Sings the litany of love,
When the anger and the hatred
Have been purged and put away
And we walk a path of sunshine
Through a summer holiday.

A little nearer heaven.
Near its beauty and its light,
When our souls are full of kindness
And we feel and act aright;
When the passions that degrade us
Burn to ashes and we live
In the laughter of forgetting,
And forgetting, we forgive.

A little nearer heaven.
When we've done some tender thing,
Helped another heart to blossom
And another soul to sing;
When we've turned our strength to duty
And in duty's love been born
To the gladness of the sunshine
And the sweetness of the morn.

A little nearer heaven.
When we turn from doubt to roam
To the gates of life's affection
And the lilied dreams of home;
When the calm o'ertakes the tempest
And the sunshine once again
Cleans the canker from our natures
And turns creatures into men.

A little nearer heaven.
When we make this earth a place
Where the blossoms of affection
Glow in all their tender grace;
When we strive with all our being
To make all around us seem
Like the gardens of that heaven
Where the eyes of beauty dream.

WHITE FARMERS ON SMALL FARMS

Have Made Covington County the Most Progressive In Alabama

The farmers in Covington County have gotten out of debt. White farmers raising corn, cattle and hogs on small farms are the answer. Covington County not only raises enough to feed itself, but ships out thousands of dollars worth. Of course Covington County has grown faster than any county in Alabama. Things are going to be even better. The most modern packing plant in the South is just being completed at Andalusia, which will take care of all the cattle, hogs and poultry that can be produced.

All we need now in Covington County is more people. That's why we want you. That's why we will sell you 20 to 40 acres of cut over land and give you

Galloway Cattle--Shaggy Coated Polls, and Their Marbled Meat

The Fascinatating Story of Those Wild Days in Old England When Great, Fierce Cattle Roamed the Forests and Amazed Even the Roman Invaders Under Julius Caesar

By Lieutenant Colonel David McCrae

Galloways are a hardy, hornless breed of beef cattle which take their name from an old district southwest of Scotland.

The name is not confined to the Stewartry of Kirkeudbright and the Shire of Wigton, but in ancient times it extended over parts of Ayrshire, Lanark, Renfrew and Dumfries. This district enjoyed a semi-independence under special laws, judges and kings and was not finally and fully annexed to the crown of Scotland till 1455, A. D. The modern district is about ninety miles in length, by forty in breadth bounded on the south by the Solway Firth and on the west by the North Channel, which separates it from Ireland.

Near the sea, and along the valleys of the rivers are many glens of rich fertile land. On the higher ground the surface is more undulating and irregular with numerous small lakes, wide stretches of mossy moorland, rocky hills and high heathery mountains. The climate is mild and moist, and while cattle usually have winter shelter provided, they sometimes winter well without any, and sheep are out all the year. In the days of the Romans, it contained dense forests, largely of oak and many trees of the Roman occupation may still be seen. The forests have disappeared, but there is still in many sections considerable wooded shelter.

Origin of the Breed.

Much has been written about the origin of our modern breeds of cattle. The Romans when they came into Britain, found the great Bos Urus roaming through the forests. Caesar says this animal resembled the domestic cattle, but in size was more like an elephant and exceedingly wild and fierce, with immense horns. Professor Low says their skeleton indicates an animal "nearly three times the bulk of the oxen of the present time."

Much has been written to show that our modern breeds are descended from this savage wild ox, but the bulk of opinion seems to be against this supposition. Youatt in his work on the cattle of Great Britain, says: "There appears to me the remnants of two distinct breeds of aboriginal cattle, one in the parks of Chillingham, in Northumberland; the other at Chatelerault, in Lanarkshire. The first are middle-horned, and the second are polled. In continuation of the first we have the Devon, the Hereford, the Sussex, and the Highland cattle. The others would appear to survive in the Galloways, the Angus humlies, the Suffolks and the Norfolks."

This may be a feasable supposition but it is just as likely that these wild cattle are the descendants of the domestic animals escaped into the forest and become wild there. Youatt says: "In the comparative roving and uncertain life which our earlier and later ancestors led, these cattle would sometimes stray and be lost. The country was then overgrown with forests, and the beasts betook themselves to the recesses of the woods became wild and sometimes ferocious. They, by degrees, grew so numerous as to be dangerous to the inhabitants of the neighboring district. As civilization advanced and the forests became thinned and contracted, these animals were seldom seen and at length almost disappeared. They are still to be found in a few parks."

Instead of attempting to domesticate the buffalo we have brought with us the breeds of cattle used by our forefathers in Europe. The buffalo is readily tamed and has been more than once used as the ox in the plough. To judge by the historical accounts he is a meek and wild animal compared with the ancient Urus. When the white man came to America the horse was unknown, now there are many bands of wild horses descended from those escaped from settlers both in North and South America. The most likely theory is that our modern breeds of cattle are descended from the domestic cattle brought into Europe by the early settlers. The Scots are said to have come across Europe and through Ireland into Scotland from Scythia and it is a singular fact that Heroditus, the historian who wrote about 400 B. C., says: "In Scythia the oxen have no horns." It is therefore probable that the Galloways are the direct descendants of the old Scythian breed of polled cattle.

Other Polled Breeds.

We find traces of old breeds of polled cattle here and there over the continent of Europe. In Austria there is a breed of polled cattle. mostly red in color, which have existed for many years, just how long is not known; their origin is lost in antiquity. Polled cattle are common in Norway and Iceland has a hornless breed of small size, but very fat and good. Ireland had at one time a breed of polled cattle. "The Devonshire Nats, or polled cattle, now rapidly decreasing in number, possess the general figure and most of the good qualities of the horned beasts of that district," was written about 1840, and now this breed has quite disappeared. The Yorkshire polls were described as good for grazing, and for the pail, having the same qualities as the Short Horns. They are now quite rare. The Suffolk dun used to be celebrated on account of the large quantity of milk that she yielded. They have been merged into the Red Polls of Norfolk now a well-known and justly celebrated dairy breed. This breed is the only modern breed of polled dairy cattle. Polled Durhams have of late years become a distinct breed and are widely and favorably known. The Polled Aberdeen or Angus cattle have become one of the most popular of the modern beef breeds and one well worthy of a foremost place in any company. They have been very much improved in recent years by careful and judicious selection. All these breeds have with the Galloways, probably a common ancestry.

Early History.

The breeding of cattle has been for time immemorial a chief object of the Galloway farmers. A compiled history alluding to the time of Alexander III (1249), says: "Black cattle were also reared in great numbers during the Scoto-Saxon period. The dairy was a considerable object of attention in the early ages of Scottish history and cheese had meen made in great abundance. As the people lived much on animal food, the cattle were all consumed within the land, while their skins formed a considerable article of export."

George Buchanan, tutor to James I, of England, writing his history of Scotland, says of Galloway:: "It is more fruitful in cattle than corn." Hector Boece (1570), says of Galloways: "In this region are many fair Ky and oxin the flesh is right delicious, tender." Ortellius, the celebrated geographer and anthor, who wrote in 1573 says: "In Carrick (then part of Galloway), are oxen of large size, whose flesh is tender, sweet and juicy." We then find that many hundred years ago the superior excellence of Galloway beef was well known.

After the union of England and Scotland, (1688), a trade in live cattle sprang up between Galloway and the markets of England—notably those in Norfolk and Suffolk, where the Galloways were sold to the English feeders, who fed them mainly for the London market. The author of "A Journey Through Scotland," published in London in 1723, mentions the flocks and herds of "Alexander Mackie, of Palgowan, who keeps at least ten thousand sheep on these mountains, besides an incredible number of black cattle. Not far from this is the famous mountains of Cairnsmure full of deer and wild cattle. To the southwest stands a handsome seat, called the Cally, belonging to Alexander Murray, of Brochton, with a large park which feeds one thousand bullocks, that he sends once every year to the markets of England."

The Galloways were sent to England in large droves, which followed old drove roads over the rough hills and through country at that time unfenced. They were slowly driven,grazing as they went and usually took three of four weeks on the road. As the country become better cultivated and fenced, driving became more difficult and had to be done mostly at night along the highways, when traffic was less. With the advent of railways it ceased altogether. Galloway was then the breeding ground and the finishing was done in Norfolk and Suffolk.

The object of the breeder was to raise a good uniform lot, and as many as he could winter. Calves were never killed and were usually allowed to nurse the dam. On the rough hill pastures they ran the whole season, much as cattle are now raised on the western ranches. On the lower richer pastures where they could be milked the dairymaid often took half, and the calves got the balance. Young cattle were seldom housed and then only in open sheds, but they usually were left on the hills all winter. In times of deep snow a feed of coarse hay was sent out in trusses slung across a horse's back.

The custom of spaying the heifer was the prevailing practice in Galloway. These spayed heifers did not quite attain the size of oxen, but their beef was considered more delicate and brought a higher price. At three years old they were ready to go south. If a few of the two year olds were good enough to go with the drove so much the better. A good uniform lot was wanted and special excellence in a few was not thought desirable. An extra good animal was far more likely to go south as a two years old, than to be kept for the improvement of the breed. This ranching business did not improve the breed very much, but it did give the Scotch cattle a good name for excellent beef in the London markets. This name and fame was made for the breed before the modern rival breeds of polled cattle had any position or even the names which they now bear.

This splendid article continued in next issue of this farm paper.

Button Clover---New Crop That Will Thrive on Our Southern Farms

Button clover is a new pasture plant which specialists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture are now advocating for use in the milder districts of the southwest and along the gulf the South Atlantic, and the Pacific coasts.

This plant will succeed, it is said, wherever bur clover does well, and it is to be preferred to the latter in certain respects. Under favorable conditions it produces much more seed and it has no spines on the pod or bur. For this reason it is particularly desirable for ranges where sheep are pastured. The great loss of wool occasioned by the spiny burs of spotted or toothed bur clover getting into the fleece is evidence of the value of a species with a spineless pod.

What It Is.

Button clover is as yet but little known in most parts of the Rnited States. In general appearance and manner of growth it resembles the toothed or California bur clover and the spotted or Southern bur clover. The chief difference between it and these two species lies in the burs. In the case of button clover these are large and spineless, while the burs of the others are comparatively small and spiny. The button clover pods ripen in early summer and drop from the vines. In their ripened state they are then available at any time as food for stock.

Where It Will Thrieve.

For the best results with button clover, a growing period with no extremes of temperature is essential. The plant is not adapted to sections with a winter temperature below 18 degrees F., and it does not do well in extreme heat. In the United States it is believed that it will do best in a narrow strip extending along the entire length of the Pacific coast, in southwestern Arizona and southern Nevada, and along the gulf and Atlantic coasts as far north as South Carolina.

A fairly well-drained rich loamy soal is desirable, but the crop can be grown on almost any soil which contains sufficient moisture.

Makes Fine Pasture.

The principal value of the new plant is for pasturage. In the green state it is readily eaten by live stock and as has been said the absence of spines in the burs makes it especially desirable on sheep ranges. This fact has been recognized for some time in Australia. In districts which produce an abundance of spiny bur clovers, it has been found that fleeces often contain as much as 25 to 30 per cent burs. This means lower prices for the wool and extra freight charges. With button clover this trouble is of course eliminated.

Hay and Green Manure.

Button clover also makes good hay. For this purpose it should be cut when most of the pods are still green but well developed and just before the leaves begin to fall. If allowed to become more mature, many of the pods as well as the leaves, are lost in handling. A supporting crop of oats or barley or some other grain should be sown with the button clover in order to facilitate cutting. There are however, a number of other legume crops that are more desirable for hay production than button clover, so that its use for this purpose will no doubt be very limited. For green manuring the value of the new plant is about the same as toothed and spotted bur clover.

Inoculation.

Button clover can be easily established in pastures, for nothing more is necessary than to scatter the seed in the most favorable places. The working of the soil prior to sowing will perhaps aid in establishing a stand, but except on good land this will hardly be profitable. Ordinarily the most profitable practice is to sow the seed broadcast and allow it to compete with other pasture plants. Here in this territory the clover should be sown in the fall and the seeding should be done about the first of September. Early summer seeding in the cotton States is not advisable. In the Southern States inoculation is recommended except on land that has previously grown bur clover. Mixing soil from an old field of bur clover with button clover seed is one of the easiest methods of securing inoculation. Only enough soil to dust the seed is necessary. Another method is to scatter soil from an old bur clover field over the area to be seeded immediately before sowing. Sowing inseed in the bur also seems to insure inoculation. Good inoculation may be obtained by the use of artificial cultures.

In comparison with the spotted and toothed bur clover, button clover produces a large amount of seed. The harvesting of it is rather difficult, however, because the burs fall from the vines so easily.

THE EGG SUPPLY.

The United States has a population of a little more than 100,000,000 and the annual egg production of the country is estimated at 20,000,000 000. If all these eggs were used as human food it would mean half an egg per person daily.

Are you getting your half- Of course not.

Millions of these are used for hatching purposes, millions more are made unfit for food by carelessness on the part of the farmer or producer and by improper methods of shipping and storage, and still millions more are used by factories, tanneries bakeries and numerous other industries.

In spite of all this eggs are consumed in great numbers, as human food. At least three-fifths of the people in the country will eat their breakfast in part or wholly of eggs. Fully half of this great throng will eat a dinner in which eggs or poultry as meat are utilized, and more than two-thirds of these people will eat eggs in some form or another for supper.

Strictly fresh eggs are always in demand, and frequently retail in our large cities at prices which make them prohibitive to any but the wealthy. According to present indications the supply will never equal the demand.

MAD AT MOTHER?

Don't be mad at mother
When her patience seems to break
'Neath the thousand little duties
That she does for childhoods sake;
If she scolds a bit when worried,
If her temper seems to slip;
Her brow may wear a wrinkle,
Rut a smile is on her lip.

Don't get mad at mother
If she seems a little cross;
It's a privilege she possesses
As the manager and boss;
And perhap beneath her worry—
And her temper stern and ill—
She's the same old lovely mother
With a heart that loves you still.

Don't get made at mother,
When her cares and worries seem
To fret her and arouse her—
Maybe mother has her dream,
And it fades as yours does often,
And her many plans go wrong—
And she can't be always smiling,
Nor forever hum a song.

Pigeons Pay Better Than Chickens---The Reason

By J. S. McCreight

I am asked frequently by men who want a few pets and help out the grocery bill, which is the best, "pigeons or chickens" Having had experience of a good many years with both I think I am safe in saying pigeons. However as there are always two sides to a question will give a little of my observations and experience with same.

Presuming you have a small back yard at your home a flock of a dozen hens will pay handsomely in the way of furnishing fresh eggs for your table. The flock is small, the feed bill is small, virtually nothing, as the scraps from the table nearly supply this want. The principle reason that you get such a large number of eggs from your few hens is due to these table scraps. In these leavings are ingredients for egg production that put the cost of feed up so high that it is impossible to provide the same elements on a large scale and make money. When the persons having such good returns from his few hens fed on these craps begins figuring on how much money he can make on a hundred or a thousand of these hens (of course he figures on this thousand hens equaling the performance of his dozen hens) he then puts in a larger flock and the table scraps falls short. Then he begins buying feed and at the price of grain needed to produce the same results the chickens will soon eat their heads off:

The greatest drawback to the chicken business is putting yourself in the position to do business. Taking into consideration the cost of your land, flock, houses, room required and the 24-hour-a-day attention is more than the average person will stand for even after he has gotten into the game.

My advice to a person having a small yar dand wanting to invest a few dollars, and having no experience with either pigeons or chickens and who is willing to put forth an honest effort—one who will start his flock with quality and not quantity—is to invest in pigeons.

Small Cost Starting.

I feel absolutely safe in saying that pigeons will pay better than chickens every time. Any one can begin with pigeons-good stock—costing from $3 to $5 per pair for the best squab breeders. They do not need expensive buildings and costly fixtures. Build the house plain and cheap and put the money saved on the building into better quality of stock. They give no trouble about preparing their nests or raising their young and any pair of good stock Carneaux will raise an average of ten pairs of squabs a year. The cost of feed for a year will be from $1.50 to $1.80 and their young will bring at wholesale price not less than 60 cents per pair or $6 for the year's squabs. If you do not care to sell the squabs but keep them for breeders you can find ready sale for all mated pairs at prices from $3 to $5 per pair. And the demand for squabs is greater than the demand for fowls because where one man is raising squabs a dozen or more are raising chickens.

Quick Producers.

The laws of the different states have become so strict relating to game and the squab is served as game and the price will suit only the rich. The producer gets a better price for his output than in the chicken business. Squabs bring good money at all times and the supply is never equal to the demand.

The time that it takes to turn your money in pigeons is about forty-seven days while the chicken requires twenty-one days to hatch and at least sixteen to twenty weeks to mature for market.

The pigeon has the same market as the chicken, both for fancy thoroughbreds and utility and there is another feature that should not be overlooked. Along with the various laws in the different states there is a law that prohibits the killing of fancy birds and as a consequence the white pigeon has come into demand to a large extent to use for trimming ladies hats.

I do not think there is any question in the mind of the person who has tried both pigeons and chickens but what the pigeon will beat the chicken with a great deal less trouble and less expense involved. The pigeon may sometimes get out of condition and possibly die but the amount invested in a single pigeon is so small that its loss will not seriously hurt you. The money spent for a single chicken will buy several pair of good pigeons.

In starting with pigeons don't write to everybody advertsing pigeons but make up your mind what breed you fancy and tell a good breeder how much money you wish to put in pigeons and the great majority of pigeon men will give you the worth of your money.

Skim Milk For Poultry

By Horace A twood.

For the best results growing chicks and laying hens require, relatively, large amounts of easily digested food. Seldom does one stop to think how rapidly a little chicken increases in weight or what a large amount of food must be digested and assimilated for this purpose. A chick weighing one and one half ounces when hatched can be made to weigh two and one-half pounds when 12 weeks old. This is a gain of slightly more than 25 times the original weight of the chick in 12 weeks, or an average gain of more than twice its original weight per week. If a 10-pound baby were to grow relatively as fast as a chicken it would weigh 260 pounds when three months old.

What They Must Have.

It is clearly evident that growing chickens and laying hens require large quantities of protein or muscle forming materials to build up the tissues of the eggs; also large quantities of ash constituents are necessary from which to manufacture the rapidly growing bones of the young chick, to furnish egg shells and mineral matter used for other purposes by the laying hen. Of course in addition to the ash and protein carbonaceous matters are required to keep the fowls warm and supply energy.

What Is In Skim Milk?

Now let us examine the composition of skim milk to see whether, theoretically, it should answer for the growth of the chicken or for the formation of flesh and bone. If we were to remove the water from 100 pounds of skim milk there would be left about 9.75 pounds of solid matter of which 3.5 pounds would be casein and albumen, 5.25 pounds of milk sugar and a little over .75 pounds of ash. It may be seen at a glance that the dry matter of skim milk is relatively very rich in muscle-forming material there being one part of casein and albumen to one and one-half parts of milk sugar or heat forming material, while in corn the ratio between these two classes of compounds is about as one to ten. The ash is also relatively high. The composition of skim milk indicates that it is well adapted to furnish material for growing chicks and for the laying hen. When skim milk is fed to chickens the deficiency of carbonaceous material is abundantly supplied by the grain that constitutes the main art of all poultry rations.

What Skim Milk Did.

W. H. Anderson of Indiana experiment station has carried through two tests to determine the value of skim milk for growing chickens. In the first test two lots of chickens containing ten Plymouth Rocks and 10 Houdans were fed all they would eat of a mixture of crushed corn bran and ground oats, 2 1-2. Both lots were also fed cracked bone, cabbage and lettuce, and the amount of these articles consumed is not recorded. The two lots received the same treatment, except that Lot 2 were given all the skim milk they would eat in addition to the grain ration. The test was continued for eight weeks. Lot 1 consumed 179.8 pounds of grain and the average weekly gain per chick was 2.62 ounces. Lot No 2 consumed 217.3 pounds of grain and 90.4 pounds of skim milk and the average weekly gain per chick was 4.46 ounces. The conclusion drawn was to the effect that the use of milk was very profitable, as it aided in the digestion of other foods, resulting in the increased consumption and faster growth. This test was duplicated during the summer with practically identical results and we may assume that skim milk whenever available is especially valuable for growing chickens

Other Tests.

Regarding the value of skim milk for egg production two experiments have been carried out at the West Virginia experiment station. In the first test two pens of Single Comb White Leghorns fowls were used, each lot containing 20 hens and two cocks. In the second test each lot contained 60 hens and six cocks.

Each test was carried on for practically three months. The skim milk was allowed to sour, then was used to moisten the ground feed which was fed to one lot of fowls, while water was used to moisten the mixture fed to the other lot of fowls. In both tests both lots of fowls were fed and handled in the same way with the single exception noted. Eight to 10 quarts of sour skim milk were fed per day per 100 fowls, and the general result of the two tests was that the fowls whose mixture had been moistened with sour milk laid better than the fowls whose mash had been moistened with water. In the two trials 802 quarts of skim milk were fed resulting in an increase in the egg-production of 702 eggs. Under the conditions which prevailed in the experiments and the eggs selling for 20 to 25 cents per dozen, the skim milk used to moisten the mash had a feeding value of one and one-half to two cents a quart.

For some reason not fully understood thick, sour skim milk seems to have a greater value for hens than sweet milk. This may be due to the milk sugar not being digested and assimilated by fowls or possibly the lactic acid which is present in sour milk may have an especially beneficial effect.

Sudan Grass For Hay Crop

By B. E. Mi ller, Of Texas.

There is no doubt but Sudan grass is the quickest growing forage or hay crop as well as the greatest producer of first class hay now in cultivation, hence it is best for cover crops or late planting. It is also one of the greatest drouth resisters and seems to thrive best in hot dry weather. It will produce a crop ready for harvest in 40 days from time of planting, then succeeding crops every 30 days until frost.

Sudan grass is a most most valuable crop to plant after wheat or oats after the grain has been harvested. It may be planted here in Texas till the latter part of August and good paying crops expected. In Missouri it makes good paying crops planted the last of July.

In planting in rows, use 4 to 5 lbs. seed per acre. May be planted with regular corn planter, using cane plate with holes reamed out about twice the size that used for cane. The most common way is to lay off with large sweep, then follow with large sweep on planter bursting out bed which cleans the land as you plant. Another good way to plant is to lay off a land and go around with planter as if you were breaking the land. In this latter way you will clean your land and at the same time plant your seed practically broadcast. In this way you should use about 20 pounds seed per acre, and the grass will outgrow other vegetation and will smother down anything that may come up, while if planted in rows it should be plowed, at least once.

Sudan grass has proven to be a great success in all parts of the United States except in cold soggy land and is sure to become the leading standard hay crop. It will never become a pest, while it sprouts out readily from the stools when cut, the first frost kills it, both root and top. It has to be planted over every year, but only once a year to get several crops of hay that same year.

Sudan seed have been extremely high but the price of seed is now very reasonable and one can well afford to pay the present prices for seed for the regular hay crop.

Since the first test was made at our Texas A. and M. College a few years ago, I have made Sudan grass a specialty, was enthusiastic when I saw the first plat just 30 days after planting which had not a drop of rain since planting, and the grass shoulder high and ready for harvest.

To those who have Sudan growing, do not let your grass get ripe before harvesting for hay. Cut as soon as it begins to head well. Sudan resembles Johnson grass very closely and will cross with it very readily, and procuring seed, would be very careful to get seed that is pure and that have been field inspected.

For quantity and quality ,there is nothing that will equal Sudan grass, especially in hot dry weather.

CARE OF DRAINS

In the early summer there are frequent complaints from farmers that the drainage systems which they constructed a year or more before are not improving the land as they had expected.

Perhaps the soil is just as wet as it was before installing drainage, but is this a valid reason for condemning drainage?

To answer this question correctly, other questions must first be answered. Were the drainage improvements in the first place properly designed and constructed? If the answer to this question is affirmative, may not some defective condition have developed in the system since construction? Have the ditches been kept open and clean or have they been permitted to cave in and deteriorate generally Have the outlets to the tile drains been allowed to close during the winter? Have the inlets and catch basins been permitted to become choked with leaves and other dry vegetable matter of the previous season? If these conditions exist, does not the failure of the system to give the desired results lie with the farmer rather than the system?

In the spring, when the root system of the young plant is developing, it is essential that the level of the ground water be maintained at such a depth as always to permit free growth of the roots downward as well as laterally. The control of the water level is the purpose of any drainage improvement. The largest returns of money invested in such improvements can be obtained only when they accomplish their real purpose, and this purpose can be accomplished only by keeping the drains in the best possible state of efficiency.

To obtain the greatest degree of efficiency in drainage improvements, as in any other work, frequent inspection is necessary. Brush and weeds should be cut from the banks of the open ditches and the latter cleaned out to the proper depth. Openings should be made into the ditches where necessary to permit the surface water in the fields to flow off rapidly.

In tile systems, if the outlet has not been protected by a headwall, one should be constructed, for unprotected outlets are often damaged by stock and the action of surface water. If a tile drain empties into an open ditch or swale, steps should be taken to see that sufficient fall exists in the ditch to remove the water as fast as it is discharged from the tile; otherwise the water will back up into the tile and the efficiency of the drain will be impaired. Where surface inlets and sand traps have been installed in a tile system these should be examined, and cleaned if necessary.

To realize the maximum results from any drainage system it is therefore essential that inspection be frequent and that necessary repairs be made promptly.

WISDOM OF WILLY

Mother (angrily)--Why didn't you come, when I called you the first time?

Willie--' Cause I didn't hear you till you called the third time.

Mother--Now how could you know it was the third call unless you heard the other two?

Willie--Easy enough, me. I knew it was the third time 'cause you sounded so mad.--

WHAT BULL IS FOR THE HERD

That the bull is even more than "half the herd" if he is of the proper type and of good ancestry is the statement made by I. W. Carpenter, of the Mississippi A. and M. College animal husbandry extension work. "It is not enough merely to get a registered bull," says Mr. Carpenter, "but equally important to get the best."

"The type of bull that is needed is just the opposite of the small, leggy, narrow-chested, scrub cows. He should be compact and blocky, broad, deep, low set, with straight top and underline, showing lots of constitution and masculinity. Look out for the bull that drops behind the shoulder, he has a long face and narrow chest, because he lacks constitution. Also avoid the bull that has flat ribs, making a narrow back and hips, because it is on the back and hips that the highest priced cuts are found."

In buying a pure bred bull his registration and the reputation of the breeder are the only means we have of knowing the value of the animal before he has been tried, and it is important to investigate before purchasing. It is quite easy to find a good bull for $200 and one of this type will easily pay for himself the first year by adding $5.00 per head to the value of the calves.

$1,000,000 Strawberry Crop In Arkansas And How It Is Handled

The strawberry crop has brought into Arkansas more than a million dollars during the season just closed, and more than a quarter million dollars worth of the crop was consumed with in the state, according to figures secured by the Extension Division of the University of Arkansas.

Arkansas strawberries were most in demand, and led in quality in Northern markets. Arkansas tied with Louisiana for second place in total production.

Since April 24 there left Arkansas 1,350 cars of strawberries, or 600,000 crates which sold at an average price of $1.75 a crate. The 13,880 acres of strawberries in this state will yield a net return of $100 an acre, while in the Judsonia district the farmers averaged $125 an acre.

Handled by Associations.

This tremendous crop has been handled largely through the Ozark fruit Growers' Association which takes care of the business in northwestern Arkansas and by the Judsonia Strawberry Growers' Association, which handles the crop in the immediate vicinity of Judsonia. The Ozark Fruit Growers' Association is made up of several local associations, each holding a single membership in the organization whose members are to be found in Tennessee, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Missouri and Arkansas, The Judsonia Association is made up of individual growers who live in the Judsonia district and has about 350 members. The object of both associations is to create a market to stableize prices prevent abuses, to make possible economy in operation and to sell at a profit. The Ozark Association keeps salesmen in all the northern markets while the Judsonia Association is able to take care of the greater part of crop by selling directly to the buyers on the ground. Both associations are largely dependent upon the ability and skill of their sales managers for the prosperity of the members.

Make No Profit.

P. A. Rogers manager of the Ozark Fruit Growers' Association and W. C. North of the Judsonia Association report a charge of 3 per cent on the selling price of all berries for running expenses. Both associations are operation on a "no-profit" basis. The association relieves the growers of all worry after the berries are brought to the shipping platform. The market price is determined by the law of supply and demand. Each sales manager fixes the market price for the day and no man can receive less than the price decided upon although he may accept a better price. Once fixed, the price is telegraphed to the salesman in the cities and through the local buyers to their brokers. Both associations sell on track and will not consign. Both have been successful in avoiding a corner on the market or an undesirable combination of the buyers in an effort to force down the price.

No Dishonesty Tolerated

W. C. North says there is a sense of fairness among the buyers and salesmen, and that the success of the association is largely dependent upon the respect which they have earned through an effort to supply the demand for good fruit and by giving an honest peck and by requiring the proper care of the berries.

The members of the association have co-operated in an effort to have the same kind of berries, of the same quality on the market at the same time. With this in view the growers in Arkansas generally have adopted the Excelsior, Klondyke and Amora varieties. These follow one another in ripening. The berries of these three varieties are of a most excellent quality and of uniform size, color and flavor.

Berries Rushed to Market.

The method of handling the berries in the field has also helped in establishing a reputation for the Arkansas strawberry. The berries must be picked at the right time and handled with every possible care. they must be rushed from the field to the consumers table in the shortest possible time.

Pickers, graders, drivers inspectors leaders and the railroads cooperate with the telegraph companies in rushing this most perishable product on to market. The picker goes in to the field with six quart boxes in a tray. Each quart box brought back filled with berries and without leaves straw or grass nets him two cents. Consequently he hastens to the receiving station where he is relieved by the collector who takes up the full carriers and gives out empties and a check or ticket to the picker. The filled boxes are taken from the carrier and are rapidly inspected, graded and placed in crates on which is stamped the growers name and number. The crates are kept in the shade until enough are filled to make a wagon load. They are then loaded and covered with canvas to protect them from the sun and are sent to the platform. Berries are handled on spring wagons and usually the best teams in the country are used, since it is an advantage to get them into the refrigerator car without delay. All berries are packed in a standard crate provided by the association. In nearly every case this is the ventilated 24-quart box case. Every quart is of standard size, and the pickers are given instructions to fill the boxes heaping full.

Berries Inspected Carefully.

At the loading platform the association inspector carefully examines each crate before it is loaded in the refrigerator car. In addition to the association's expert, the refrigerator companies keep an expert on hand, who also inspects the berries and directs the handling and loading. It is his business to see that the cars have been thoroughly cleaned, disinfected and aired. The cars are then iced. It requires nine tons of ice for each car. No loading is permitted before the cars are thoroughly cooled. Crates are placed in the cars in such a way as to permit circulation of air between them. They never touch one another or the sides of the cars. This is done by using one-half inch strips between the crates as they are placed in tiers. Every car is re-iced at some convenient place en route. Special fruit trains are run every day during the berry season through the Ozark region, and as many as 25 cars leave the Judsonia fields every night. Each refrigerator car will carry 448 crates of berries and on May 8, when a solid train of 35 cars left Judsonia, it contained 350 wagon loads of berries.

Arkansas berries find a ready market in all the large cities of the north They are sold from Cheyenne to Buffalo and from St. Louis to Winnipeg and Toronto.

Handle Other Crops.

The Ozark Fruit Growers' Association and the Judsonia Strawberry Growers Association also handle other crops during the year such as peaches apples, grapes, cantaloupes, radishes etc. These crops furnish the necessary cash for carrying on a system of diversified farming, which includes corn, cotton, cattle and hogs. The farmers of this district are in the financial condition Mr. Erganbright, president of the Judsonia bank, through which most of the money for his district is handled says the farmers of this dictrict are making money rapidly, and in some are getting rich. New raw land within a reasonable distance of Judsonia, can be bought for $15 to $60 and improved land from $75 to $100 per acre. On this land a crop which will net from $100 to $150 can be grown each year. Another reason for the success of the Judsonia territory is that the strawberry business has been established there for several years, and the business and the work of the association has passed through the experimental stage. Every body is cooperating, the district is ideally located and the conditions are right for this kind of farming. Land is cheap, the soil is good and the Arkansas field is far enough south so that spring frost and winter killing are not a menace. The association plan, as operated at Judsonia and by the Ozark Fruit Growers Association where the care of the crops and the selling are handled under one hand has proven to be the only successful plan in operation in the United States.

The railroads are doing everything they can to encourage the development of this territory and loading and transportation facilities are unexcelled. In the Judsonia district the bankers are able to finance these crops with local capital. These bankers believe in the future of the surrounding territory and have invested a great deal of money.

Two Girl Champions.

The Ozark Fruit Growers' Association buys nothing for its members. It acts only as a selling agency, but the Judsonia association buys anything the members need in the production of their crops. A strawberry crate and box factory has been established at Judsonia which gives employment during the winter to many. This factory makes a standard crate used by all the associations of Arkansas. Miss Ollie Gibson of Judsonia is the world's champion strawberry box maker. She has a record of 5,640 quart boxes for ten hours' work.

Miss Fay Parker, Arkansas' champion canning club girl also lives in this district. Miss Parker made $189-97 from one-tenth of an acre. Radishes and seasonable vegetables were shipped to St. Louis and disposed of at a cost of $31.14, leaving a net profit of $15.83.

The strawberry and truck acreage of Arkansas has increased 50 per cent during the past year. Immigration and a surety in the future of the state with plenty of cheap land will more than double the present acreage in 1917.

Dairy Cow a Lady---Treat Her as One And Produce Clean Milk and Cream

A good many of our folks here in the Central South are now getting them some good dairy cows and going into the business of producing whole milk and cream.

As the dairy business is just starting—and starting off very well—it behooves every man of us (and woman too) to do the thing right. If we watch the business close and send to the creamery cream from good, healthy, clean-kept cows the creamery business will increase and our business will increase also. If we sell milk, cream or butter to private trade our business will increase in proportion to the care we give in producing absolutely clean dairy products from good cows.

Now that warm weather is on us it is especially necessary, good folks, that we give every care and attention to the dairy—not only for the sake of profit but fo rthe sake of the health of our people.

Clean Cow and Milk.

In the first place it is necessary to have clean and healthy cows and who wants any other kind if he or she takes any pride in the dairy business? Milk from unhealthy cows is not safe, no matter if there shouldn't happen to be any dirt in it. Any mlk that appears to be slimy, ropy, or otherwise as it should not be, should not me sold. If you think it is all right drink it yourself—but don't give it to your child.

The body of the cow should be kept free from mud or manure. The dairy cow is a lady—or should be—and you should treat her as one. The hair on the flanks and udder should be clipped as long hair hatches filth. When my lady, the dairy cow, is left in the stable the bedding should be clean and dry and used in quantities to keep my lady comfortable.

Stable and Barnyard.

The stable should be well lighted, well ventilated and so built that it can be kept clean easily. It should have a hard, non-absorbent floor without cracks where filth can collect. Dust or cobwebs should not be allowed to accumulate on the walls or ceiling and it is a good plan to whitewash the walls and ceiling of the stable at least once a year.

Manure should be removed at least once a day. The manure pile should be some distance from the stable; hog houses, privies and poultry houses should be far enough away so as not to contaminate the stable air and the barnyard should be well drained so that there will be no mudholes. A clean yard is a great help in keeping the cows from becoming soiled by mud and manure. The yard should drain away from the buildings and manure should not be allowed to accumulate in it.

Feeds and Feedings.

The odor and flavor of milk are very readily affected by certain feeds, such as rape, cabbage, turnips and silage, and such feeds should not be given immediately before milking. If fed after milking they will not taint the milk. When the pastures are overrun with garlic or wild onion, the cows should be removed from the pasture three or four hours before milking. Moldy and decayed feed and such other feeds as may injuriously affect the cows' health nad the character of the milk should be carefully avoided. Dusty hay should not be fed immediately before milkling, nor should the cows be bedded at this time, as either of either operations will cause a circulation of dust in the stable which will affect the cleanliness of the milk. It is important that the water, of which the cow needs an abundance, should be fresh and pure.

Clean Utensils.

All utensils which come in contact with milk should be made of smooth, durable material which can be easily cleaned. Utensils of wood and crockery are apt to be porous; it is impossible to clean them properly and they should not be used in handling milk. Vessels made of heavy tin are good. The joints should be well closed with solder. All rusty utensile should be discarded.

All milk utensils should be thoroughly washed after each time of using and scalded with boiling water, special care being given to strainers made of cloth. Milk utensils should not be used for any other purpose than that for which they are intended and when not in use should be kept in some place free from dust and odors and screened so as to protect them from flies. Improperly washed utensils acquire a bad odor and cause warm milk placed in them to absorb this odor; dirty utensils also cause the milk to sour quickly.

All vessels used in handling milk should be rinsed with cold or lukewarm water and then washed in hot water containing some good washink powder such as sal soda. Soap is not desirable for washing milk utensils. Fiber brushes are much better than rags for washing purposes, as they are more easily kept clean and do better work.

After the utensils are washed thoroughly they should be rinsed in scalding water and inverted on a rack in a clean place, screened from flies, but exposed to fresh air and sunshine and allowed to remain there until required for usé.

Strainer cloths should be thoroughly washed and boiled each day.

One of the most important things in the production of milk and cream of good quality is the care of the utensils in which they are handled. Utensils can not be properly cleaned without an abundance of boiling water. Equipment for furnishing this water is absolutely necessary where milk and cream of the best quality are produced.

Milking.

Before milking the cow's udder and flanks should be wiped off with a damp cloth to remove any dust and loose hair which might fall into the pail. The milkers should milk with dry, clean hands, and should practice cleanliness in every respect while handling the milk.

Care of Milk and Cream.

Milk, whether to be sold in its natural state or to be separated, should be removed from the stable immediately after milking. If it is not to be seperated it should be cooled at once to a temperature of 50 degrees Farenheit, or lower and held there until disposed of.

The separator will produce cream of better quality than is possible with any other means of separation. If a separator is used, it should be thoroughly washed and scalded after each time it is used. If the milk is to be hand-skimmed, it should be put into "shot-gun" cans for the cream to rise, and the cans should be well covered to keep dust and insects out and be kept in a room free from odors. This is better than putting the milk in shallow vessels.

Thin cream sours more quickly than rich cream. With a rich cream there is also less bulk to handle, more skim milk for feeding purposes and the cream is in better condition to make into butter. It is desirable to skim the milk so as to produce a cream containing between 30 and 35 per cent of butter fat. A great advantage in using a separator is that the richness of the cream can be easily regulated. Cream sours very readily at temperatures about 50 degrees Farenheit; hence it should be kept as much below this temperature as possible.

If warm cream is mixed with cold cream the whole mass is warmed thereby and souring will follow more quickly; therefore the newly seperated cream should be cooled before adding it to the cream on hand. A thorough stirring each time newly separated cream is added to other cream will bring the whole mass to an even temperature throughout.

Care in Shipping.

The cream should be kept in a clean, well-ventilated place in order that odors may not be taken up by it. If cream is sold to the ice-cream or retail trade, it should be delivered daily. If sold to the creamery it should be sold daily or at least so frequently that it will arrive in good condition. If properly cared for cream need not be delivered oftener than two or three times a week in winter and three or four times a week in summer. Cream cans should be protected with blankets during delivery in summer months to prevent marked rise in temperature.

Synthetic milk is being produced from peanuts by European chemists.

Soil Surveys For Farms And What They Mean

BY N. Eric Bell.

For centuries people have been making and using maps of various kinds. Everything mapable from temperatural variations to the latest positions of the European armies have been graphically set forth. Municipalities, states, countries, the earth itself, and the heavenly bodies have been charted and all of these have had their place in adding to our sum total of knowledge on these subjects. However here in Alabama our efforts of late have been along more material lines.

Farming Instead of Latin.

Recently I visited an up-to-date rural community school in which I incidentally learned that Latin and foreign languages are not taught. The superintendet explained that the records of the school show that only about two per cent of the students seek a higher education after graduation. Most of them remain on the farm and some seek employment in the cities and towns, hence it was thought best to give the overwhelming majority the benefit of the time which would be consumed with languages by introducing agricultural subjects in their place. The same thought which prompted this action is today pervading the activities of our various national and state institutions.

Equal To Any State.

Alabama is turning to her natural resources and in this connection, is taking stock of these resources. For some time we have realized that we have great mineral wealth great stores of iron of coal, of graphite, and other minerals but we have only recently discovered that we have also the best agricultural combination that can be found anywhere, namely, good soils, good climate, and good people. These combined natural resources make Alabama comparable to any state in the Union in its inherent wealth.

In recent years the state has seen fit to institute what is known as the "Soil Survey" The work of this deparment in effect is to take stock of the agricultural resources of the State and it might be added here that with the present rate of progress this will be the first state in the Union to complete this survey of its agricultural possibilities. In doing this work it has seen fit to set forth in map form the soils of the various counties which have been worked, a map which graphically describes not only the soil types but gives their relative extent and location as well as the other features commonly shown on a map, such as roads, streams, railroads, towns, schools, churches, houses etc. These maps have been constructed on the scale of one inch to the mile.

Since I have been engaged in this work, which has extended over a period of about six years, it has been constantly in my mind that sometime there will be a strong demand here in Alabama for reliable farm surveys showing not only the general information contained in these soil survey reports but also the more detailed information which is applicable only to the farm under consideration, such as the state of cultivation, the improvements, timber, growth, etc. These individual farm soil maps should be made on a larger scale than that employed in the county surveys, thus allowing more leave way for mapping minor changes in the soils. Then too these surveys should be made under our national system of classification so that outside or foreign investors can have as even chance with the man on an adjoining farm in judging of the nature and value of lands. Locally such terms as "Piney woods land" and "Prairie soil" may have some significance, though giving no definite suggestion as to its nature, but these terms mean nothing to an Illinois or to a Kansas farmer. His "Prairie soil" is very different from ours. If we had to designate every member of the human family by some family characteristic and had no other means of identification for them we can readily see that there would be utter confusion. Yet we go on using general descriptive terms for what we want to designate as some specific soil, all the while feeling like there ought to be some system for naming it. And there is.

Just now there is a strong awakening of the farmers of the North and Middle west to the advantages of coming to Alabama where lands may be bought that are both cheap and good. Thousands of intelligent men, a great many of whom are men of means, are ready to come if they only knew where the land can be gotten that will suit their needs. Let it be said here that not all good lands will suit every man's needs. So it becomes necessary for him to have authoritatve information not only as to its goodness and cheapness but also as to its suitability for his needs. Such information would be of value to the land owner himself as well as to a prospective purchaser. It would be especially valuable where it is desired to cut a large tract of land up into small farms and sell them.

Promoters who have sold them unproductive farms could not have accomplished this had these purchasers demanded a soil map and report on these lands by a competent person. The time is coming and is not far distant when prospective purchasers of lands will demand this information and farm lands will no longer be sold on hot air and padded statements but on common hard facts.

This then is one of the principal functions of the individual farm soil survey. It gives authentic information as to the nature of the land, its inherent value, its suitability for certain purposes and the character and quality of the improvements. A report should accompany the map showing the general agricultural conditions of the community, the location of the place, the climate, transportation facilities labor conditions, etc., and describing fully each type of soil and its adaptability.

How Several Hundred of Us Raise What We Eat and Live Happy

By Dr. J. W. Beeson, of Mississippi

One of the most neglected spots on many a Southern farm is the garden. And yet there is not a spot on the entire farm that will bring in as much returns to the farmer as the garden. In this sunny southern climate a garden is easily raised the year around. There is not a day in all the year on which Southern farmers could not have a variety of fresh vegetables from his garden.

Some Things To Grow.

In Tennessee in a winter month we saw seventeen different kinds of vegetables growing i none garden. If one man can have them the other men could if they would make the proper effort. here are more than twenty kinds of vegetables that will grow all winter in the guf states without protection; with a little protection most of them can be grown in all Southern states. Everyone has a garden in the spring, and after that is gone the garden is generally turned over to weeds and grass till next spring. Some of us have a few collards and turnip greens, (and that is much better than nothing inthe winter; but why not have to select from each day beets, onions, cabbage, carrots, parsnip, parseley, spinach, mustard, rutaagas, raddishes lettuce kale, salsify, turnips, collards and other winter vegetables. It will help to solve the problems of the housewife who has such a time finding a variety, or a change in the bill of fare in the winter. There is great need of a variety of vegetables to balance up the heavy meat diet that comes at "hog-killing" time The spare ribs, back bones, sausage. "souse meat" or head cheese, chitlings, pig feet, brains, etc. need something attractive in the way of a variety of vegetables to balance the diet and prevent sickness. We southern people are the greatest meat eaters of any human beings on earth.

Eat Balanced Ration.

There is only one class of beings that can excel us and that is the lions and tigers, the carnivorous animals. No wonder we are so quick tempered and fractious in the South. No wonder we have so much "liver complaint," kidney trouble, indigestion billiousness and pelagra. If we will eat more vegetables, and a greater variety of food and a more nearly balanced ration, we will have less sickness and better health. The farmers ought to live better than any one else, since he is where he can raise almost everything he needs so cheaply and have it pure and fresh and in great variety and abundance. He can have all sorts of fresh vegetables eggs, milk, butter, etc., yet as a rule the farmer lives harder than any one has less variety on his table, when there is no excuse for it I saw in Februray farmers twenty five miles from town buying rutabaga turnip that had been shipped from Nova Scotia where the ground was frozen three feet deep and paying three dollars a bushel for them. when they could have had them growing in their own garden in abundance without protection. No wonder we have "hard times" and look poor and are poor.

What Do You Grow.

Fellow farmers, how many kinds of vegetables have you growing in your garden that you can gather to eat in January or February? Count and see how many kinds and then look into your cellar or pantry and see how many kinds, and how much canned vegetables and fruits you have that were put up in your farm in the summer for winter use and you can size yourself up as a farmer. Take your measure. We ought to can the surplus snap beans squash, okra, tomatoes, English peas, and other tender vegetables that will not grow in winter. We ought to have all sorts of canned fruits, berries, etc., put up for winter use. What we cannot consume will if properly canned and labeled sell to good advantage and bring in some extra money from what is generally let go to waste. There should be enough to use, not only when the "preacher" or visitor comes, but for home use every time the appetite calls for it. It will save many a dictors bill if we have a greater variety of vegetables and fruits all the year around. We will be healthier, happier, and feel more like work. Many people drag around unfit for work merely because they have not had a balanced ration or enough variety, or have eaten too much meat, or too much sameness in the bill of fare.

Making Healthy People.

"We are studying "balanced rations for your pigs, poultry, milk cows but we forget to study to balance the ration for our children and ourselves. Our children should be taught to eat a variety of food if we want strong healthy men and women. The garden is a great help in doing this. We should have dried peas, beans, butter beans, etc., which help to furnish healthful protein.

Costing of Living.

The garden is a great saving in the cost of living. We hear much of "high cost of living" but the farmer need not be hurt by that, but it should be a benefit to him as it brings him a better price for his produce. A good garden is at least one third the living, and if we count the fruits and berries it is over half the living in a properly balanced diet. It is to the human body what hay or grass and silage is to stock, and should be the greater part of the living from the standpoint of economy and health.

The writer runs a boarding school and has found that the garden is one of his best friends. We have about 100 acres in cultivation and in pasturage to furnish vegetables for the college and pasturage and feed for the herd of dairy and beef cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs, sheep, horses, mule etc and we come near making it self supporting. We have a rule to plant something in the garden every two weeks during the year and there is never a day when we cannot get fresh vegetables from the college garden.

Nothing Goes to Waste

Formerly we did not know what to do with the garden when school was out and the students went home. We sold what we could, fed some to stock, let the balance go to waste. Now we have learned a better way. We have a rule that nothing shall go to waste. We can what we can't eat or sell. Our rule is that not a tomato or pod of okra shall go to waste or a snap bean or squash get hard. We can twice or three times a week in the summer. We put cucumbers under brine that will float an egg. We make kraut of the cabbage we can't sell.

When school opened last fall we had about 3,000 gallons of string beans, tomatoes, okra, squash, peaches, etc. We had fifteen barrels of cucumbers for pickles ,twenty barrels of kraut. We put our syrup in cans and sealed air tight like tomatoes so it will be fresh the year around. We put the crushed cane stalks or "bagasse" in a silo for feed for our dairy and beef cattle. We had two other concrete silos full of ensilage for feeding cattle.

We planted velvet beans and peanuts and cow peas between corn for hogs and have some of the prettiest registered Duroc Jersey hogs one would want to see or eat. A flock of 100 pure bred dark rich red Rhode Island pullets of a fine laying strain help us with some eggs and an occasional meal of fowl. A flock of southdown sheep give us an occasional mutton.

Nuts From the Grove.

A fine grove of grafted pecans is now beginning to bear large well-flavored nuts which will add to the increase, as well as furnish nuts for salads, cakes and Thanksgiving and Christmas occasions. We plant all ditch banks, fence roks, corners of lats and waste corners in grafted pecans instead of letting them grow up in briars and bushes. We raise some colts to help us out and the registered white collie and airdale bring in an income from a litter once or twice a year, besides furnishing intelligent farm dogs for useful purposes. A cheap second hand Ford car runs to town each day to sell surplus vegetables and bring back what is needed from town. We sell some registered Jerseys or Holstein or grade milk cows each year and some brood hogs and thoroughbred chickens as breeders, which help the income.

We come very near to living at home. If a college can do this and feed several hundred boarders, surely every farmer can raise most of what he needs on the farm, have a greater variety, live well and have better health. The garden is the most important factor towards accomplishing this end. A flock of pure-bred young hens of a good laying strain is the next most important factor. One or more good milk cows come right along with the hens. A few fine thoroughbred pigs come next. All these things are possible to every farmer whether tenant or land owner on a small or larger scale as conditions may demand.

Feeding Sow and Pigs From Weaning To Butchering Time

By W. D. Scott, Swine Breeder.

Beginning with the date of farrow, we advise very little feed of any kind for the first twenty-four hours, then a light feed of slop. Plenty of pure water at all times. Feed lightly for several days, gradually bringing the sow up to a full ration in ten days. Too heavy feed at first means an excess of milk, a feverish sow, and sick pigs, a check of the milk flow, which can never be restored, hence a shortage of milk when most needed.

From Farrowing Time.

Give the sow a well balanced ration of corn and meat-meal, using at least ten per cent meat meal. It is better to give a ration of forty pounds of corn meal, forty pounds of wheat shorts (midlings), ten per cent meat-meal and ten per cent cottonseed meal, where kept in dry lot. But if on green pasture as she should be, then leave out the cottonseed meal and increase the meat meal to fifteen per cent. Bring the sow and pigs gradually up to the meat meal if they have not been fed on it before farrowing or else your pigs will scour and not develop as they should. This means well developed pigs with plenty of bone and muscle on which to build your hog. At three weeks old, build your creep close to where you feed the sow and put in a small door through which the pigs can go at will. Also provide a shallow trough and keep some feed in this trough at all times where the pigs can find it and they will grow like weeds.

Your rape sown late in August or the first of September should be ready for them to begin on now, so keep up the feed as above allowing them all the rape they can eat, allowing them to go with the sow on your fields of velvet beans and peas ,or peanut fields that have been fairly well gleaned by your fattening hogs.

Feeding On Peanuts.

You can allow your sows and pigs to run on peanut fields without injury to either the sows or pigs, provided you shut the sows up every night and give a feed of tankage and shorts; all they can eat for breakfast before turning them out. Give them fifty per cent of each. You will have to start them slowly on peanuts, and gradually bring them up on the tankage and shorts. It is best to begin throwing over peanut vines and all to start with, and in a very few days you can turn them loose on all they will consume after having taken on sufficient bone and muscle, making the feed to balance out their peanuts.

I have had great success with pigs running on peanuts, when I kept a self feeder filled with tankage or meat meal, and one of shorts where they could get what they needed to balance their own ration, to suit themselves. It is surprising to see how well they will do it.

If grown out on peanuts alone, you make fat at the expense of bone and muscle. You have a foundation on which to build a hog, for building hogs is like building houses, first you must lay your foundation then build on it.

Peas and Velvet Beans.

Velvet beans and peas are really a better and safer food for sows and pigs because of the great amount of protein in them, and it is the cheapest and easiest crop to make. Turn your hogs on a field of velvet beans, corn, peas, and peanuts, and put your meat meal in a feeder where the pigs can get all they want, and they will do the rest.

In a field with two rows of corn and a row of peanuts, plant velvet beans in the peanut row as neither seem to conflict with the other. As you begin to lay by your corn plant peas in the corn middlewhere you have no beans and peanuts. Just try five acres this way and you will repeat it next year.

We are now coming up to the weaning period with the pigs at ten weeks old. When you begin to wean them, take them from the sow every morning for four days and keep them away all day, allowing them to stay with her at night. Then for three days take them away and keep for twenty-four hours each time, only allowing them with their mother for about thirty minutes. This will in most cases be sufficient to wean them, but if the sow's udders begin to swell or get too full, it will be well to allow them to suckle occasionaly unti you can wean them off.

Keep up the feed. Give plenty of it at all times, for the best and cheapest meat that can be grown is that produced in the shortest time. Good dry quarters free from dust are a necessary adjunct to swine breeding.

On To Butchering Time.

After your pigs are weaned and wintered over on good pasture of either rape, oats and vetch, crimson clover, bur clover or rye, all of which grow abundantly in our country and furnish a good part of their feed until May, then you should have plenty of early peas followed by early peanuts, soy beans and chufas; later peanuts and corn on which to fatten them for the market. For two or three weeks before killing they should be put on floor and fed all they will consume of corn meal and cottonseed meal and shorts, equal parts, which will make their meat white and firm and of the finest quality.

Your pigs will be about twelve or fourteen months old and should dress you anywhere from 250 to 400 pounds, according to how well you have followed the above instructions. We presume you are breeding pure-bred hogs. Self feeders filled with shorts and tankage will add materially to their growth while on peas, peanuts, etc., and will not add to the cost of your meat, as it will more than pay for feed consumed. Always keep a mixture of salt, five pounds; charcoal, one bushel; copperas, two pounds; lime, two pounds, under shelter where they can get it at will.

"Lily" Is Brilliant New Star In Jersey Firmament

The official announceement of the winners of the American Jersey Cattle Club Medal Awards for 1915, just published, shows the most successful year the register of Merit Department has so far experienced, both in the number of records accepted and in the quality of them, and also shows the possibilities of dairying with the right kind of cows and the right kind of management.

Among the 1,448 cows competing for honors in 1915, there stands out with brilliancy a new star in the Jersey firmament, the great cow Dosoris Park Lily. Dorsoris Park Lily started her year's work on December 3, 1914 and produced in the following 365 days 16,728 pounds of milk, containing 957. 4 pounds of butter-fat. This production was the highest record of the year, but on February 29, 1916, "Lily" earned the title of Grand Champion of 1915 when she droped a live, vigorous heifer calf which had been carried 188 days of the test period.

Owned on an estate where sanitation is the paramount consideration, and the highest grade of milk the object, "Lily" was obliged to stand in a stanchion with her stable mates throughout the greater portion of the year, and receive the regular routine treatment followed in an establishment of this kind.

"Lily's" milk, being certified Jersey milk, sold for 20 cents a quart, and therefore the 16,728 pounds of 5.72 per cent milk was worth $1,556.08. Valuing her entire grain ration at $37 a ton, alfalfa hay at $26 a ton, and silage at $5 a ton, "Lily" returned a profit of $1,357.16 over and above the cost of her feed, in spite of the high valuation placed on it. This return on her milk alone represents 5 per cent interest on $27,143.34. The heifer calf is valued by its owners at $2,000. The return on "Lily's" entire product for the lactation of 1914 to 1915 represents 5 per cent interest on $67,143.34.

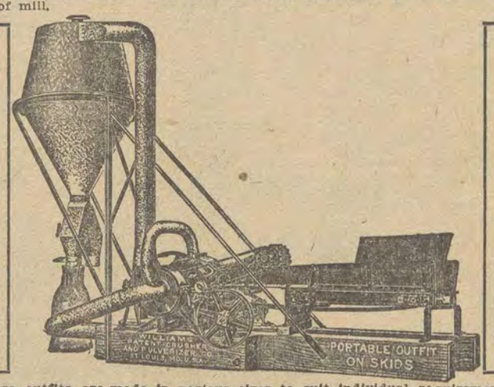
Plans For Permanent Hay Shed

Drawings for a hay shed which is to be part of the permanent farm equipment have been prepared by the office of public roads and rural engineering of the department of agriculture at Washington, D. C. Working drawings, with a bill of materials, may be had upon application to that office.

The construction of this shed is such that it may be built in as many sections each 16 feet long, as are needed to meet the different requirements of individual farms. The width is 28 feet and the height to the eaves 20 feet with a quarter-pitch gable roof. If the building is more than three sections, or 48 feet long, there should be a hay door in each end. Each section, it is calculated, has a capacity of about 20 tons of average hay ,the exact capacity varying of course, with the kind of hay and its condition when put in. With good alfalfa it may be possible to put as much as 25 tons into each section. In case the building is used for alfalfa a lean-to for storing baled hay may be built on one or both sides.

As planned, the shed is of the maximum width consistent with ease in mowing away the hay, and the interior has been left clear of braces in order that the hay may be gotten in and out without interference. In the drawing prepared by the department the top 7 feet at the sides are covered, but if desirable the whole building may be inclosed.



Since this hay shed is to be permanent it should be located on well-drained ground and in a situation as convenient to as many fields as possible. The plans call for concrete piers in order to avoid the rotting of timbers from contact with the ground. The frame is strongly braced and intended to withstand any storm except a cyclone. As fire is the chief danger to a building of this kind, lightning rods should be installed. This will lessen the danger from this source.

The cost of such a structure will vary, of course, with the situation and local conditions. With lumber at $30 a thousand, however, it is estimated that the materials in a 3-section shed, such as that shown in the illustration, 28 feet by 48 feet, should cost a little more than $300. A shed of this size may be expected to hold about 60 tons of hay. Including the cost of labor, the shed should be built complete, with hay carrier and lightning rods, for approximately $450.

Cottonseed Hulls Have Advanced $12 a Ton

What does this mean It means that you should grind Velvet Beans, Snapped Corn, Peavine Hay, Alfalfa Hay, and other herbage to take the place of Cottonseed hulls for dairy feed. This will give you a better balanced ration than obtainable by using Cottonseed hulls. The Williams Snapped Corn Grinder shown below will grind all of these materials faster, cheaper, and better than any other types of mill.

Dear Sirs:
Your letter of the 18th to hand and in reply will say that since putting in one of your No. 0 snapped corn grinders about eight months ago we have been operating this mill steadily, turning out at the rate of 60,000 pounds of feed daily, and it gives me much pleasure to say to you that our troubles with the mill have been so little that they are not worth mentioning, and we can recommend your mill to be just exactly what you claim for it and we are delighted with our purchase, and will say that the upkeep of the mill is very small indeed. Yours very truly,

As previously stated these outfits are made in various sizes to suit individual requirements and are sold on trial to all responsible parties.

When writing specify materials you wish to grind, fineness desired, and quantity per hour, preferably in pounds. Bulletin MF-99 gives additional data.

Special Live Stock Market Report From St. Louis

By A. G. Bray

A decline of 25 cents per cwt will fully cover the drop in cattle values during the past thirty days duration. The trade as a rule has been rather satisfactory, but there is no such certainty for the future. The reason is, the influx of grass cattle from all sections, particularly from Texas and Oklahoma. As the summer advances the movement of grassers will be more generous and this can be looked forward to wider price range between the common to best cattle.

Other than the competition of grass cattle, there is litle under the surface at the present time to mar the general outlook of this trade.

Formerly quotations covered fed cattle, but starting today and continuing throughout the summer all cattle will be based on grass flesh. Fed cattle, of course, will be few and far between, but for the benefit of any stockman who possibly may be dry-lotting cattle at this time, $1.50 per cwt added to the following price ranges will be a safe criterion to judge by.

Killing cattle: choice to prime grass steers $7.50 to $8; good to choice grass steers $6.50 to $7.50; medium to good $5.75 to $6.50 common to medium $5.25 to $5.75. Canners $4.75 to $5; cutters $5 to 55.50 medium cows $5.50 to $6; fat cows $6 to $7; light weight bulls $5.25 to 5.75; heavy weight bulls $5.75 to $6.50; yearlings $4.75 to $5.25; heretics $5.50 to $6.50 light vealer calves at $7 to $11.

Trade for cattle (tick-free) commonly known as stock cattle has been affected by similar conditions as killing stuff. It is a usual fact that with the rise or fall of beef stuff that trade for thin stuff is more or less influenced and this has not been nothing out of the ordinary. Present values are fully 25 cents per cwt lower than a month ago and in cases it has been a 25 to 50 lower trade. Good to choice quality thin steers are selling at $6.25 to $6.75; medium to good quality thin steers $5.50 to $6.25; common to medium kinds at $5 to $5.50 with good quality stock heifers at $5.25 to $6.

The hog market has been a "see-saw" game since our last report, recording about two weeks ago a top of $9.40, the lowest level this trade has reached in months. Then again last Friday's trade recorded a $10.05 basis which lacks but a nickle of the high time this year. Since the trade has weakened and todays trade which follows will average 10 to 15 cents lower than a month ag. At this time prime heavy corn-fed hogs are selling at a top of $9.80 with bulk of the good corn-fed hogs 160 pounds upward, selling at $9.40 to $9.65; pigs weighing 120 to 150 pounds, $9 to $9.30; lighter weight pigs $7.50 to $9.25; while rough heavy hogs sold mostly at $9.25. Just at this time hogs weighing 200 pounds or more or those under 150 pounds have strongest competition of all buyers. The in-between weights, on the other hand, are too heavy for pigs and not heavy enough to get in the heavy classes and as result have been more or less neglected. This is a temporary condition, however and will be adjusted in due time, being brought about to a large extent by a strike of butchers in the east, where a considerable proportation of such weights ordinary move.

HE RECOGNIZED IT

In honor of a visit to his plant by the governor of the state, an automobile manufacturer once had a complete car assembled in something like seven minutes.

Some weeks after the feat was heralded in the daily papers the telephone at the factory rang vigorously.

"It it true you assembled a car in seven minutes at your factory?" the voice asked.

"Yes," came the reply. "Why?"

"Oh, nothing," said the calm inquirer, "only I've got the car!"

Superior-Duplex Grinding Mills

"The Mill That Fills the Bill"

The Superior-Duplex line is made in nine sizes and adapted to power from 2 to 25 H. P.

They cover a wider range of grinding than any line of mills made. These mills will successfully grind corn on the cob, corn in the shuck, alfalfa, peavine hay, cotton seed and all small grain.

The feed regulator has perfect control over the flow of feed into the grinding rings, making it possible to regulate the feed to accommodate any power available. The grade of grinding may be as coarse or as fine as desired. There is absolutely no choking or bridging over in the hopper in grinding any kind of feed.

The Superior-Duplex is equipped with duplex or double grinding rings by which a greater amount of work may be done at a decreased expenditure of power.

The Government is spending large sums of money to teach farmers that ground feed goes farther than unground feed and, being easier digested, gets far better results.

Our general catalogue showing and fully describing our entire line of mills will be furnished on request.

The Superior-Duplex Geared Type mills are the result of several years experimenting and are adapted for use in any locality; they are particularly valuable for use in the Southern States for grinding corn in the shuck, kaffir corn and milo maize in the head, cotton seed, etc., and for this work they have no rival.

A single trial will convince the most skeptical that these mills do this work in a most satisfactory way. They will also grind all kinds of small grain, either alone or mixed with the coarser materials.

With the Superior-Duplex Alfalfa and Small Grain Grinder it is possible to grind alfalfa hay, corn fodder, peavine hay, clover hay, etc., either alone or mixed in any quantity desired with small grain, or the small grain may be ground alone without any alfalfa being fed through; or the mill, by opening the grinding rings, can be used as a hay cutter, allowing the material to pass through without being operated upon by the grinding rings.

SUPERIOR DUPLEX MILL WITH SACKING ELEVATOR

ELEVATORS—The elevator as shown above is furnished in 6ft. length for bagging elevator, which is equipped with a double spout and shut-off for using two bags; and 10 ft. length for wagon box elevator, equipped with a swivel spout for lifting feed into wagon boxes or grain bins. These elevators can be used on either side of the mill and with any type of our mills.

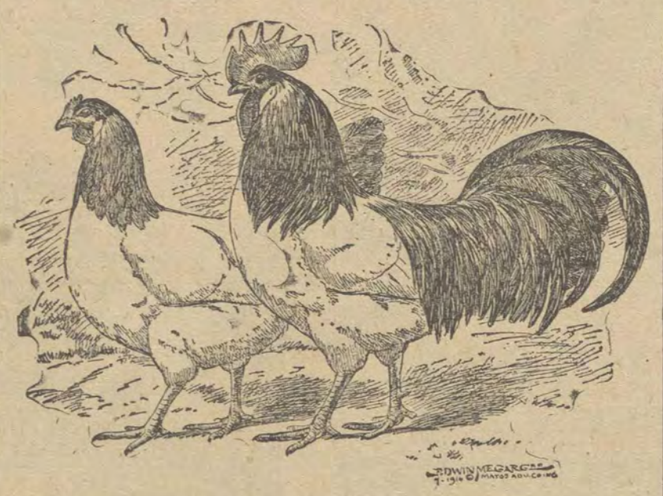
Chicken Dollars and Sense---XI; Efficient Brooding Equipment Important

Plan to Use Brooder Houses the Year Round

BY R. P. ELLIS.

Finding an efficient yet economical brooding system has caused me more trouble (and expense) than any other department connected with my cooperative chain of egg farms. It is with much satisfaction that I have been able to recommend to the latter, and to my readers, the following method of brooding chicks, since it embraces a greater number of desirable qualities than any other method with which I am familiar.



I want to state that the method of brooding that I describe below is not the only method of brooding chicks that is good; but it is the one that I have found most suitable to the egg-farming business. Perhaps I had better state that just ten years ago I started to keep some chicks in the backyard of my residence in one of the less-thickly built up sections of Brooklyn, which is now one of the boroughs of New York city.

I was then engaged in teaching school. I knew nothing at all about chicks, when I started, but read every thing I could get hold of and I drew my own conclusions concerning what I read. The first year proved a success, and I moved to a larger place.

My foundamental idea was to sell direct to the consumer. Being within the city limits of a great community people came to the door and took the eggs away. I soon found I could sell more eggs than I could raise. As I had a very fine strain of layers that had been trap-nested for nine generations, a little judicious advertising enabled me to sell quite a few baby chicks in the spring of 1908. I agreed to take back the eggs laid by the pullets that were grown from my chicks, and thus started what has become known as the Aurbra System of branch egg farms. The fundamental idea of this plan being cooperation.

As many of my branch members knew nothing, or next to nothing, about chick raising when they started, it became necessary for me to devise a simple and effective method of brooding chicks. There were two things I had to strive to accomplish. One was to get a method of brooding chicks that would raise 80 per cent to 90 per cent of chicks brooded on a large scale. The second was to get a system of brooding that would be as cheap as possible. It was manifestly ridiculous to sell a man 15c chicks and then tell him that he had to spend from 25c to $40 per check on brooding equipment to raise those chicks. For a number of years I struggled with this problem until I happily hit upon the solution which I give below. That it is effective and successful, I know. Hundreds of thousands of chicks have been brooded on this plan successfully, and I can only say that I have never heard of a more economical plan, excepting the so-called fireless brooder plan, which is not worthy of anybody's serious consideration when chicks are to be brooded on a large scale. The labor involved in taking care of chicks in fireless brooders in broods of 20 to 25 chicks is out of the question when you want to raise 1,500 to 12,000 in a season.

LAKENVELDER FOWLS,

"MADE IN GERMANY,"

Exceptions to The Rule.

When it comes to raising chicks for exhibition or fancy purposes (the so-called show birds) the cost of brooding equipment is not a prime consideration which the breeder must think about. Such a fancier, has primarily an interest in producing a few of the best possible birds, and since these birds are worth all kinds of money (if they ultimately prove winners) he is justified in allowing a very much greater expense for the equipment necessary to raise them. But with the average commercial egg farmer it is strictly a matter of cold, hard dollars and cents. He cannot afford to have any sentimentality about it. He must regard his flock of chicks very much the way a general regards the soldiers under his command. He cannot think of the individual life. If for instance a commercial egg farmer can raise 80 per cent of any number of 15-cent chicks by having a brooding system which costs him 10 cents a chick, he would not be justified, from a business point of view, in putting in a brooding system that would cost 30 cents or 40 cents a chicken, even if it should prove that the more expensive brooding system would raise 90 per cent. or even 95 per cent. of the chicks. Therefore, the prime consideration for the commercial egg farm is economy. Of course if he has such a poor equipment for brooding chicks that most of the chicks die, or fail to develop properly it stands to reason that such a system is not economical.

Topheavy Investment in Buildings.

When I first started poultry farming, what particularly used to annoy me was the fact that most poultry plants had about 80 per cent. of the money tied up in buildings and equipment, and about 20 per cent of the money invested and appearing in the form of actual chickens, or the food necessary to grow the chicks to maturity. It always struck me as wrong that a "poultry plant" should consist of a lot of nice buildings with beautiful contraptions therein for doing all sorts of stunts the said buildings being populated by a few chickens. It would have taken a flock of 'Lady Eglantines" to pull such a commercial farm out of the financial hole into which such an enormous overhead expense had plunged the enterprise.

I very soon saw that if a poultry farm was to succeed, the greatest possible number of cents out every dollar invested must appear in the form of actual chickens. In my early reading poultry matters I waded through the description of some right beautiful so-called long, piped brooding houses, which would cost all the way from $7 to $10 a running foot to erect The capacity for brooding chicks for each runing foot amounted to about twenty chicks. You can figure the cost of such a brooding equipment per chick yourself. And at that the brooder house could only be used for eight or twelve weeks at most; after which time other houses or means of shelter had to be provided for the growing flock. Now what I objected to, beside the enormous cost per chick of such a brooding equipment was the fact that for more than half of the months out of the year the entire building was lying idle.

Adapting the Square House.

It was during the early stages of my enterprise, while in conference with one of my branch farmers, that the idea suddenly came to us that we should get hold of some system of brooding which could be installed in our 14-foot laying houses. When the chicks had grown beyond the need of artificial heat the brooding equipment could be taken out of the house and the house used to raise the pullets of the flock to maturity. Thereafter it could be used as a laying house for some of the pullets. What particularly appealed to me in this plan was that the growing pullets would not have to be moved from a brooder to a colony house later in the season, and from a colony house to a laying house. All my experience had shown me that every time chicks were moved to new quarters there was a per centage of deaths. Be it only 5 per cent—that loss was an absolute waste; and it seemed to appear with great regularity.

The 14-foot laying house was, because of its square shape, admirably adapted as a brooder house, because yards could be built about it that were vedy commodious Through careful planning yards as wide as 14-feet could be given to each of six broods. Now if a long house were taken and turned into a brooder house, the width of any of the chick runs would be limited to the width of the brooding pens inside the house; say, about 3 feet. The chicks would very soon trample down the little grass, or other green food that was growing in the runs, and experience has shown that young chicks will usually forage only 50 to 100 feet away from the house in which they are raised.

After hitting upon the idea of using the fourteen-foot laying house as a brooder house, and realizing it was very superior to any long house in the matter of yard arrangement, it devolved upon us to discover some suitable form of brooding equipment to install in the house. It was just about this time that the individual hovers had come on the market, and had been tried for a few years and developed into successful brooding appliances. We divided our fourteen-foot laying-house floor space by an aisle three feet wide, and subdivided each side into three pens, which were a little under five feet wide each. In each of these pens we installed one of the metal hovers that were then on the market. Later on, these hovers were made in portable style, and we used that kind. We put from fifty to sixty chicks under a hover, and thus we were enabled to brood from300 to 360 chicks in one fourteen-foot square house.

Practical Measurement of Land

To find the number of acres in any rectangular piece of land, multiply the length and breadth in rods together, and divide by 160 (the number of square rods in an acre), and the result will be the required answer.

When one side of a triangle and the perpendicular to that side, from the opposite angle are given, take one-half the product of the side and perpendicular, and divide by 160.

To find the area of a triangle when three sides are given, subtract from half the sum of the three sides each side separately; multiply the half sum and the three remainders together, extract the square root of the product and divide by 160. This will give the number of acres in the field.

When the piece of land is in the shape of a trapezoid, multiply one-half the sum of the parallel sides by the perpendicular between those sides, and divide by 160.

To find the area of any straight-sided piece of land, divide the latter into convenient parts, find the area of every part, and the sum will be the area of the field.

In general, the parts into which the field can be most conveniently divided will be triangles, but in some cases we may have a rectangle or a trapezoid, whose areas may be found by the preceding rules. The area of a right-angle triangle equals one-half the product of the two short sides.

Formula for Whitewash.

Take half a bushel of unslacked lime; slack it with boiling water and cover during the process to keep in the steam; strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer; add a peck of salt previously well dissolved in warm water, 3 pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste, stir in boiling hot one-half pounr of powdered Spanish whiting, and one pound of glue which has been previously dissolved over a slow fire, and add 5 gallons hot water to the mixture; stir well and let it stand for a few days, covered up from the dirt. It should be put on hot. One pint of mixture will cover a square yard properly applied. Small brushes are best. There is nothing that can compare with it for outside or inside work, and it retains its brilliancy for years. Coloring matter may be put in and made of any shade, as Spanish brown, yellow ochre or common clay.

TWELVE HUNDRED BABIES DIED

ENORMOUS LOSS OF LIFE IN LARGE CITIES.

Twelve hundred and ten babies died in the city of St. Louis in 1915 and half of the deaths were caused by ignorance on the part of those who had the care of them.

This is the startling statement made in an editorial of The St. Louis Post-Dispatch in issue of March 2, 1916, and continuing, the paper said that much of that ignorance can be removed,

Mothers can learn without cost how to care for their children by writing for a copy of a booklet that has just been published and called "Healthy Babies," says the National Druggist, published in St. Louis, in the March, 1916 issue, and this journal says this booklet can not fail to remove much of that ignorance and hence will tend to save many human lives.

It gives suggestions to prevent underfeeding and overfeeding, when and how to wean the baby, the care of the bottle, how to avoid the petty troubles like chafing, prickly heat and numerous other subjects are treated in such manner as to be easily understood by every mother.

Any mother can secure a copy of this valuable booklet free by writing the C. J. Moffett Medicine Co., 1315 1st Avenue, Columbus, Ga. The Moffett Company are the manufacturers of "Teethina," a preparation for children that has had a most successful sale since 1877. Write for a copy today, a postal card will do.

CHILDHOOD FAIRYLAND.

There is a childhood fairyland
In childhood's long ago
Which every rainy Saturday
We used to seek, you know:
On Saturday, when we'd get up
And stretch a bit, and say—
"Oh, there ain't goin' to be no school,
For this is Saturday!"

And then how little eyes would gleam
And little cheeks would glow,
Way back amid that golden dream
In childhood's long ago!
For ever to its fairyland
When we had dined we'd fly—
The great old attic up three flights
Of stairs most to the sky!

The rafters showed, the shingles too,
And the floor was bare and white—
The boards had nothing else to do
But lie there day and night.
And round the walls were hooks and knobs,
And things hung up—Oh, say,
Now wasn't it a fairyland
On a rainy Saturday!

Old chests and trunks and boxes sat around the edge of things
And every kind of coat and hat,
Dim ribbons, faded wings,
Strange lovely dresses they had worn
In some old time of life—
And I would marry sister Rose,
And she would be my wife!

Of all the childhood fairylands
Old garrets seem to me
To be the finest ever known
Upon the land or sea.
And often when it's Saturday
And the children rush upstairs,
I wish that I could visit, too,
That fairyland of theirs!

—Folger McKinsey.

GOD'S WONDERFUL CREATURE AND MAN'S FRIEND—THE BEE

S. E. WESSON

Materials For the Bee Man and Importance of Hive Entrances

Perhaps you haver handled bees, and if so you do not know just how to begin. I would advise a moderate attempt. Do not undertake too much, Experience is necessary to handle several hives. You can get this from trying your hand with one or two colonies at first. Then as your knowledge and skill is gained, you can increase the number and extent of your colonies.

If you have never worked with bees and have no knowledge of them I would only begin with one hive, certainly not more than two. But if you have had any experience, or even close observation, and feel confident you can proceed with poise and not become panicky over some peevish pet which they may have some nice day when you want to get familiar with their secrets, then you might try four or five colonies.

Supposing you have nothing in the bee-ware line, and that you have no bees, I am going to tell you what I would do.

1. Buy one colony of three band Italian bees in an eight frame, dovetailed hive. If possible be sure the queen is a pure Italian. Probable cost $7.50.

2. Purchase two complete eight-frame dove-tailed hives. This means two brood chambers, two supers and all the material for furnishing them except the comb foundation. Probable cost $5.

3. Two pounds of foundation comb. Probatve cost $1.30.

4. One smoker. Cost $1.

5 One bee oil. Cost 50 cents.

6. Bee gloves. Cost 50 cents.

7. Spool of small wire. Cost 10 cents.

8. Have blacksmith make you one hive tool. This can be done by taking 10 inches of the end of an old buggy spring, forging each end to a knife edge, rounding one and squaring the other. Turn the square end at right angle 1 inch from end. Cost 25 cents.

This is all you will probably need for one years supplies. It has cost you only $16.10. You have one hive of bees and the supplies to take care of two more colonies. You can safely depend on at least one swarm from your one colony. That will give two colonies. Your bees ought to certainly make you one full super of honey and possibly two, during the season. If you have only one swarm you have one full hive and fixtures for the start on the second year.

Preventing Swarming.

When you have handled the bees for one year you can easily begin to prevent swarming. You can buy your own queens and take out two or three frames of brood from one of the strong hives set them in a new hivt and introduce the new queen, thus making a nucleus of a hive and preventing swarming. By this method you can soon reduce the swarming evil to a minimum and increase your number of colonies at will.

Of course no beekeeper will long endeavor to work with bees without becoming a reader of the best bee journals. This will soon widen your vision and give you a confidence that comes from knowledge of the business.

Your supplies can be had from several bee-ware supply men. I can give you such information as you wish about that, but I am not advertising anybody's business, so you better write me personally in regard to such mattens as you wish to inquire about.

Hive Entrances.

An entrance too large or too many places of entrance may be the unsuspected source of serious trouble. Inexperienced bee keepers wonder sometimes how the bee moth ever slips into the hive. Large entrances or many entrances are nearly always the explanation of it. Look at your hives right now. Spring is here and the bee moth is on the job.

If your bees are in old fashioned gums, the probability is that several notches have been sawed in the sides at the bottom. Sometimes there are to be seen hives with the notches on two, three, or even four sides of the gum. That is too many. The entrance should be confined to one side. The space needs to be small. Usually an opening about half an inch deep by five inches long is ample. If the hive is a very strong one the opening may be a bit larger. If it is a weak colony it had better not be even that large. Guards are always on duty at the entrance to protect the hive from intruders, enemies, and robbers. If there are too many places where entrance may be made these guards can not do their work well. If the colony is weak, or a young nucleus, there are not enough workers in the hive to furnish a strong guard. These are the circumstances which the moth flies take advantage of. Patent hives only provide for an entrance at the front end. This is so made that it can be regulated in size to meet the conditions and the time of the year.

Do not make the mistake of allowing the entrance to be so small that it will be difficult of entrance. A middle ground of medium sized entrance is the thing to strive for.

A Resting Place.

Another small matter about entrances. It is well to give the bees a good place to alight when they come in with their burden. It is not difficult to see that many of the veterans come to the hive greatly wearied after a long flight with a load of sweets. When the tired worker arrives at the door of her house with her burden it is only kind treatment that her keeper furnish her a lighting board on which she may drop for a second's rest before she rushes into the hive with the reward of her toil.

The lighting board should be about four or five inches wide and it should be fitted right well to the front of the hive bottom. Let it make a gentle slope up to the floor of the hive. The bees will land on this and slowly make their way into the hive. We have witnessed many of the best workers coming in worn and burdened making unsuccessful attempts to land in the difficult opening at the perpendicular front of the hive. This is a bad economy. It is attended by loss of willing workers, loss of their time, and interference with other workers.

For the Bee Children

Another use of the lighting board for the front of the hive: When the young bees hatch they first want to fan their wings in the air and light. They seek the front of the hive. A good lighting board will be a playground for the bee children. On it they will be safe. Here they can receive the attention of their careful nurses. In its sunshine and on its broad space they can learn to crawl, use their legs, handle their pollen paddles, and do all the little stunts of real bees. This may seem an insignificant matter, but it is not. By all means keep down the weeds and grass about the front of the hives, and give the colony a lighting board. They need it and they deserve it.

Delicious Canned Soups Mamma and the Girls Can Make

A supply of canned soups is frequently of great convenience to the housewife, as such soup may be prepared ready for serving at almost a moment's notice. Many economical and palatable soups may be put up in the summer and early fall, and in this way the odds and ends of vegetables and cereals may be utilized as well as meat scraps, bones, and ligaments that are often wasted. The canning of vegetable soups, purees and consommes is thoroughly practical and should be a part of the canning work of every home as well as canning-club member.

The following recipes in which the soup stock is made from beef, are prepared for the use of home canning clubs, and the products are intended for home consumption. When these roducts are intended to be sold those undertaking this work are cautioned inform themselves as to the requirements of State and Federal food laws and meat-in-spection regulations.

Ground Grain Better Than Whole Grain

The feed bill is an important factor in the raising of stock if the feed is bought and the thing to do is to discriminate in the feed so as to get the best results.

Even if the farmer or stock grower raises his own feedstuffs, as he should, there is the same incentive to avoid waste.

In feeding grain, especially corn, the ground grain has a decided advantage over the whole kernels and not only from an economical viewpoint, but on the score of the health and well-being of the animal. Foods that are easy to digest are sought by human animals and the same advantage in the selection of feed for stock applies.

At some of the government experiment stations interesting results have been obtained in comparing ground with whole grain. At the Michigan station it was found that when whole grain was fed to cows that 22.8 per cent of the corn went through them whole, 12.1 per cent of oats and 26.5 per cent of corn and oats mixed, thus in feeding 500 bushels of mixed grain, 132.5 bushels were wasted. At 50c a bushel this would amount to $66.25. At that rate a man doesn't need to be a very heavy feeder before he wastes the price of a mill by feeding whole grain.

Cobs Have Food Value.

Grain is the basis of all stock rations, and corn is king of them all. Corn is fed in various forms, but with the improvement of machinery for its conversion into crop of various grades, there has come a widespread demand for it in this form. Farmers have learned that the cobs can be used as a food, being ground with the grain. Other parts of the corn plant are being largely fed—all along the line a more economical system of utilizing farm crops is being pursued by the most successful farmers. Years ago, before grinding mills were in use corn was fed whole or on the ear. Cattle feeders usually broke the ears into short lengths. A considerable portion was wasted. Corn was cheaper then than it will ever be again. Nowadays farmers cannot afford to feed it in any form in which loss occurs. Conditions have changed to such an extent that every car, cob and all, should be used to the best possible advantage. Methods of feeding have been improved until loss is reduced to the minimum.

It pays to grind feed, whether raising breeding stock or feeding for the market. Grinding puts the nutritive elements in the most available form. In starting young stock, ground feed is indispensible, where quick, smooth growth is desired. By grinding grain physical mixing is secured, palatability is increased ,the nutrients of the grain are rendered more assimilable and quicker returns in flesh and growth are obtained. Feeders wish to make rapid, substantial gains; to do this it is necessary for the stock to derive the full nutritive value of the feed consumed. Whole grain makes this impossible. No feeder can afford to fatten stock in the old way. Economic conditions render it imperative that he make the largest possible gains in the shortest possible time. A quick feed is the rule these days.

DUSTLESS MOP

Many want to know how to make a dust cloth or mop which will catch and hold the dust, and not permit it to be scattered about as the ordinary dry dust cloth is sure to do.

Take a length (any length you desire) of cheesecloth, hem it neatly, and dip it into cedar oil, linseed oil or kerosene. Then wring it as dry as possible and hang it in the air until it is dry. That is your dustless duster. The first named oil is best. but the others will do very well if you cannot procure the cedar oil.

Now for the mop. If you have a floor mop and want to make it the dustless kind, simply dip it in oil. squeeze and let dry. A very good mop can be made by taking several old stockings and cutting them in inch wide strips. Bind them to the end of an old broom handle and tack them fast, then dip into the oil and allow to dry in the air.

Old rope cut in lengths of about 14 inches, then the lengths tied in the center and bound and nailed to a broom handle, makes a good mop. The ends of the rope are separated or fringed before dipping into the oil.

Each of these dusters and mop can be washed when they are filled with dust and when dry they will be as good as ever. If, however, after washing several times the oil is gone simply dip them again in the oil, and proceed as before.

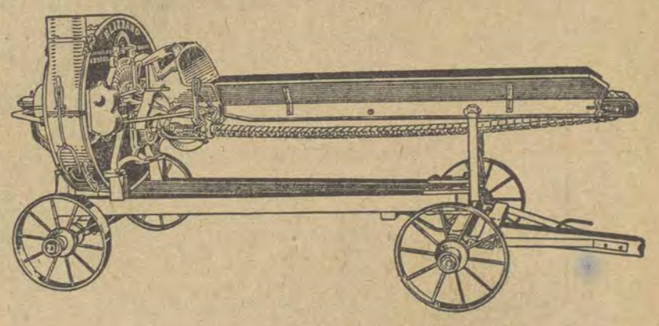
To Farmers of Boll Weevil Sections:-

THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG will do effective and rapid work in brushing to the ground boll weevils and punctured squares.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is a strong, practical and economical device for getting rid of the most weevils in the QUICKEST TIME and the CHEAPEST WAY. It is used and highly recommended by some of the most successful farmers in Mississippi and Alabama.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is the best device known for the use of tenant farmers in fighting the weevil.

THE DRAG DESCRIBED



The Drag is a steel rod that holds a light durable chain, the rod and chain being attached to the beam of the plow stock with a casting arranged so as to be adjustable to the size of plants at the time for plowing. The rod is placed at an angle to the beam and as the plow proceeds down the row the rod bends down the plant over towards the middle between the rows and the chain agitates the plant sufficiently to cause the Weevil and infested squares to fall off into the middle of the row. The attachment is reversible as well as adjustable, up and down, and can be used on either right or left side of the plow below or above the beam.

We do not desire to create the impression among farmers that any device will prevent all the damage the weevil usually causes, unless the approved measures for control be carefully followed.

Write us so we can take care of your order before the growing season starts.

Hogs which are to be treated should be placed in a clean, dry pen or lot without access to mud or filth for at least twelve hours preceding treatment. Reasonable cleanliness of the animals is essential as a sanitary measure.

Confining the Animal.

Light hogs are best confined by having an assistant grasp them by the hind feet (for the ham injections) or by the front feet (for the armpit injections) and lifting the animals to an upright position so as to expose the under surface of the body to the aperator. The pig is thus held between and steadied b ythe legs of the assistant. Large hogs should be rolled over on the side or back and held by the legs. Pregnant sows or very large hogs are best confined in the standing position by placing a noose about the upper jaw, the free end of which is then tied to a post or tree. Great care must be exercised in the handling of pregnant sows to avoid liability of abortion.

Preparation Point of Injection.

Before the injection is made the field should be scrubbed clean with a stiff brush and water, after which it should be washed with a good skin disinfectant. For this purpose a clean vessel should be provided, and small pieces of absorbent cotton placed therein, which, after once using, should be discarded and not returned to the pan. An efficient but somewhat more expensive disinfection consists of painting the point of injection with Tincture of Iodine. Disregard of these precautions means abscesses which will rarely occur if the directions given above are carefully followed.

Place of Injection.

The point for making injection must be decided by the operator. The region which is found most satisfactory, however, is the axilla or armpit. Here the serum reaches the muscular tissue, from which it is readily absorbed with little danger of damaging the part for food purposes.

Injections into the ham are practiced by some, in which event the needle would be placed deeply into the muscular structures well towards the inner part in order that the bone, large vessels and nerves may be avoided. The only objection to this site lies in the danger to the hams.

When treated in the standing position the neck region just back of the ears is recommended. The needle should be directed downward and backward to avoid the large glands and bony structures. Following withdrawal of the needle the escape of serum through the skin punctures may be lessened by rolling the skin between the thumb and the finger.

Handling the Serum.

When about ready to begin work the seals upon the serum bottles may be broken and a limited amount of serum poured into a thoroughly clean and sterile container, previously provided. We recommended for this purpose a pint size glass fruit jar, or better still, a special enamelware serum cup, provided with a handle and hinged cover. It goes without saying that such containers should be protected from dust-laden air as much as possible at all times, and thoroughly cleaned and boiled before using. If the serum is very cold, it should be warmed before injecting, by placing the container in a vessel of warm water.

Syringe for Serum.

The syringe should be of at least 30 cc capacity and provided with several long slip-on needles. It should be thoroughly washed out after each job, and before being used again should be sterilized by boiling. When used again, great care must be exercised that the syringe is clean. Wrapping in sterile gauze is a reasonably certain protection for such instruments until needed.

The Operator.

The operator should thoroughly appreciate the necessity of cleanliness. He should take no part in the preparation of the hogs and should work with his hands absolutely clean. He must direct all parts o fthe work and should insist on plenty of helpers, in order that the work may be done easily and quickly. He should accustom himself to the accurate estimation of the weights of pigs in order that the proper dosage may be given. It is false economy to stint on dosage. The results will be better if too much rather than not enough serum is used.

Handling of Virus.

Hog cholera virus should always be regarded as a dangerous product and handled accordingly. When stored it should be kept in a refrigerator and not used after the date stamped on the bottle. Any unused virus, together with the bottle, should be destroyed by burning. A separate syringe and needles should be provided for virus injections and be handled in the same careful manner as the serum syringe. One and a half cc of virus is sufficient for any hog being given the simultaneous treatment and a smaller dose sufficient for hogs of 150 pounds or less. Virus and serum should not be injected into the same ham. Escape of virus upon withdrawal of the needle should be guarded against as much as possible by pinching the skin where the needle penetrated.

After-Care of Treated Animals.

Following the serum treatment care must still be exercised. Reports of death after simultaneous treatment have, in several instances, been traced to septic infection, introduced by permitting the hogs to wallow in mud and filth. It must be borne in mind that a reaction to this treatment means depressed protective forces. The animal should be fed a moderate quantity of their accustomed food and kept in clean, comfortable quarters for several days. An occasional death from cholera is to be expected after the use of the simultaneous method, but such loss should not be great if the right amount of serum is given.

IDLE ACRES

Put those idle acres to work, by planting a crop of cowpeas or soybeans on the stubble land after the oat crop is harvested. The soil represents a large part of the farmer's capital, and it is good business policy to make it produce all the year around If legumes are planted after the oat harvest the soil is not only kept busy producing a valuable crop of hay for winter feeding, but the roots of the legumes add valuable stores of nitrogen and organic matter to the soil to increase the yields of the next crop.

Cowpeas are perhaps the best legume to plant on oat stubble as they may be sown broadcast and harrowed in. After this they need no further attention until harvesting time. Soybeans are best planted in rows, and require one or two cultivations for the maximum yield. It is not a good plan to plant soybeans on poor land after an oat crop has been removed. On such land early planting is imperative if the beans are to give satisfactory results.

When cowpeas are planted at the rate of about two bhshels to the acre, from one to two and one-half tons of hay may he expected, oesides the improvement in the soil, and at no expense besides the planting and harvesting. Many of our good business farmers take this opportunity every year to make their capital in land bring in an extra profit.

NEARLY DIED OF PELLAGRA

Used to Pray She'd Pass Away, But Happy Now She's Cured.

Mrs. Bama Jacobs, Garnsey, Ala., writes: "I was a constant sufferer from that dreadful pellagra for four long years. My case seemed beyond my doctor's reach and in July, 1910, he said he could do no more for me. I would even find myself praying to die, I suffered so much. Finally my husband ordered a trial of Baughn's Pellagra Treatment and in three weeks I could see a great change and I am well today. I say to all, take Baughn's Treatment and be cured for my case was bad and of long standing."

That testimonial says more than we could say, except this: We can cure pellagra and will undertake to cure any case, no matter how long standing, on basis of refunding the money if we fail to effect a cure. To get informed on the subject write today for Baughn's big booklet on pellagra, sent free. Write American Compounding Company, Box 3091, Jasper, Ala.

What One Cutting Of Alfalfa Brought Farms In 1916

Alfalfa has long been recognized as the staple leguminous crop in the middle and far western United States.

Due to its perennial habit of growth; its deep rooting system, giving ability to stand very severe droughts; its long growing season and its heavy net tonnage on land suitable to its growth; and its high feeding and market value as a hay—it can hardly be surpassed as a hay and forge crop on lands suited to its growth. But it has only been comparatively recently that this crop has begun to be known among the farmers of the South, and even yet the acreage is small on lands which are naturally adapted to its growth—isolated acreages in Texas, some parts of the Mississippi delta; and in spots over the prairie region of Mississippi and Alabama.

In lieu of the enormous increase in acreage of this crop on the lime lands adjacent to Demopolis, and its great success as a profitable crop, it will possibly be interesting to other farmers in Alabama to learn exactly, and accurately what a cotton farmer did with his first cutting of alfalfa on his first planting of alfalfa in the spring of 1916. Within a radius of 15 miles of Demopolis, the acreage in alfalfa is now approximately 4,500 acres with a yearly seeding averaging about 1,200 acres. By far the larger portion of this acreage is now being cut and sold directly on market as a hay crop, but at the same time most all the farmers producing it have for their ultimate aim the increase of livestock on the farm sufficient to consume a good portion of it and thus conserve soil fertility. The alfalfa fields are used also a great deal for grazing with both cattle and hogs.

As it happened Mr. W. C. Harrison, of Gallion, Ala., was the first man in this section to begin cutting and baling his spring crop of alfalfa this year and it is from his exact records that the following figures are taken:

Mr. Harrison planted 19.5 acres of alfalfa in the spring of 1915, and cut it three times during the summer of 1915. The resultant hay was not marketable, the alfalfa hay being small and insufficiently rooted, and mixed with Johnson grass which had a tendency to be course. This hay valued at a very low figure $8, paid for his seeding and land rent that the land would have brought in cotton with a normal crop.

This being the second year of the planting, was to be countinued as a critical test by Mr. Harrison as to whether his alfalfa would pay. Hence he was very careful to keep an accurate record of all cost and expenses connected with its harvesting.

On April 26, the mowers went into this 19.5 acre field and started cutting and during the next few days a large portion of the force on the place were busy "saving the hay." Following are the figures of expense which Mr. Harrison was put to:

Mowing with two teams at $1.60.	$3.20
Mowing with two teams at $1.60	3.20
Raking 1 1-2 days at $1.60	2.40
Shocking, 3 men 1 1-2 days at 60s	2.70
Baling, hauling, storing, 16 men.	14.40
Baling wire	6.90
Kerosene oil for engine and gas..	2.30
Grease and oil	.50
Four teams hauling 1 1-2 days..	6.00
One team hauling 1 day	1.00
Total	$52.60

Weight of baled hay, 572 bales weighing 49,505 pounds, or 24.75 tons.
Cost per ton to harvest and store $ 2.12
Sold immediately F. O. P. Gallion 17.50

Net profit, per ton $15.50

Or $383.62 on entire 19.5 acres, or $19.70 per acre.

It will be interesting to add that on Mr. Harrison's books, slightly over $200 is the most profit shown by this same piece of land during any year which he has owned the place even in the best cotton times before the advent of the boll weevil. He will doubtless get 4 or 5 additional cuttings on this land during the ensuing summer, running his profit up proportionately.

South Is Place For Swine Breeders To Win Success

By E. S. Eby, Formerly of Ohio.

We are all new in the live stock business in this state, but we are coming to the front. I was born in Camden, Ohio and raised in Tennessee, the state that put the "live" in the live stock industry and I predict that in a few years time the state of Louisiana will be one of the leading live stock states in the union.

And what is the explanation? Feed stuff—grass at all times, a climate that is unequalled, and what appeals to me is the responsiveness of the soil. I've taken land that looked cold and clammy, was called "black" "buck shot" and "gumbo," in fact everything disagreeable, and in three years cut two and three tons of as pretty hay as you can buy anywhere and now, the fifth year am planting it in cotton. Last year we cut our winter oats in May, and planted corn. In some we had sown Japan clover in February, and this we cut in September and October. We plant Irish potatoeh in February, harvest in May, and plant the land in corn and make a big crop.

Today (April 13th) I picked and shipped from the garden four bushel of English peas started planting cotton, plowed corn first time, plowed early Irish potatoes last time, etc. So you see that we raise something besides cotton; and we are trying hard indeed to pay as we go, which is something entirely new for the Louisiana farmer. I didnt mention the dairy just started, which is adding about $50 per week to our income. My place is partly in town, so I have no hogs here but eight miles down the river my brother-in-law J. T. Austin and I are operating on a large scale.

We are cultivating about 800 acres and have now about 200 hogs and sows farrowing daily. Here we have a small herd of registered Durocs, headed by a grandson of Defender, and a grandson of Good Enuff, with Defender on bottom line. They are siring us some grand pigs and if we raise them all we except to have a fall sale.

We solved the oiling bugaboo by building a small dipping vat, and when we get ready to oil, just drive them through on the way to the field. Have also built quite a number of concrete wallows, or swimming pools as the niggers call them and as we have a fine artesian well with running water, it makes the fresh water problem easy. We raise our hogs entirely by pasture, using a rotation of crops, such as sweet potatoes, peanuts and turnips, oats, sorghum, corn, peas soy and velvet beans beside the clover. I tried my first patch of winter vetch and rape, and am delighted with the rape (so were my claves) but vetch grew so rank I couldn't successfully cure it.

All this country, especially bottom lands, is in large tracts, the average plantation being 700 to 1,000 acres and in very few instances do the owners live on them but in town operating through a hired manager. In ten years time this will be all changed The boys' corn clubs and pig clubs, the girls', canning clubs and other such industrial teachings in the rural communities will bring back a 'back to the farm" movement never equalled Every planter is now having his cows milked (unheard of a few years ago) and sending milk or cream to town to local trade or ice cream factory or creamery. Every bull bought now must not only be a registered one, but must show the red ink in pedigree, where a few years ago looks sold him. Now the hog raisers are trying to supply the market with what it wants where a few years ago they went out on the rang after the acorns had fallen and shot and hauled in the most likely looking razors (as a native hog is called). If we could get a hundred good farmers from the north with money to buy their land outright and improve it. Ouchita Parrish county would bloom like the Garden of Eden.

But excuse us from the "ne'er do well who is a failure before he comes—and, I suppose would be anywhere—and because he finds he has to work here, as anywhere, also that there are certain local conditions and customs (as the world over) that must be complied with, "blows up" then jumps the county, "cussing everything and everybody." But we like the young farmers who come here to make their homes, and are offering them every inducement in the world.

Keep Young Stock and "Swat the Rooster"

Rainy seasons break many rules, but the gospel of harrowing both before and after planting corn and cotton is one to keep pretty well in mind. The right handling of soil is an art that too few seem to understand.

Land should not be plowed wet. Harrow each day's plowing before leaving the field. Harrow this seed bed after every rain until the crop is planted. These are three safe rules. Many farmers harrow both corn and cotton within three or four days after planting and again before the plants are big enough to permit working with a cultivator. A man who does not own a harrow should rent one from a neighbor as no one can afford to neglect these early harrowings.

Keep Your Cows.

Far too many cows and heifers have been sold this season. Even a scrub cow bred to a good bull will produce a calf worth $15 next fall, and $25 if a pure bred beef bull is used. A heifer calf from a grade cow and a pure bred dairy bull will be worth twice as much as the mother. Farmers are making a mistake in selling young cows and heifers.

Swat the Rooster.

Merchants complain that they cannot pay good prices for eggs in the summer because the eggs will not keep, and that the city dealers destroy one-half the eggs they ship. it has been proved beyond a doubt that hens will lay as many eggs with no rooster in the flock as if the roosters are there. It has also been proved beyond a doubt that the eggs so produced, called infertile eggs, will keep fresh for table use for many days, even in summer. The rooster is absolutely useless except for breeding purposes. Therefore, when the hatching season is over farmers should separate the roosters from the hens, fatten and sell them. Six or seven days after separation the eggs will be infertile and can be marketed as fresh eggs even three or four days old, whereas in the summer a fertile egg is not really fit to eat after it is two days old.

HOGS ON PASTURE ALSO NEED A GRAIN RATION

The cost of pork is reduced materially by the use of pasture and forage crops, but it is desirable to feed grain or other concentrated feed in addition Where pastures are luxuriant mature hogs are maintained in an apparently satisfactory condition on pasture alone This practice should not be followed, however, in the case of young, growing pigs, because they will become thin in flesh and stunted if compelled to live on pasture alone.

Hog raisers differ widely regarding the quantity of grain that should be fed to hogs while on pasture. Some feeders give them all they will consume. Others feed a ration equal to about 3 to 3 per cent of the live weight of the hog. Still others will allow pigs to run on pasture and them a 1 per cent grain ration. There is no fixed rule governing the supplemental grain ration which should be fed in combination with forage. The amount of grain fed depends upon the kind of pasture used, the price of grain and the market.

Pasture forage, has a variable composition. Alfalfa, clover, vetch, and peas furnish feed much richer in protein than most other crops. Where hogs are feeding on leguminous pasture they require less concentrated feed than when grazing upon non-leguminous pasture such as timothy, orchard, grass, Bermuda, or bluegrass In the early stages of growth the cereals may be classed as nitrogenous forages. A farmer may have more hogs than his pasture will accommodate. When this is the case, the pasture will last longer if a full grain ration is fed. The more grain a hog consumes, the less forage he will eat.

When grain is high, it is rather expensive to feed a suplemental grain ration. At such times there is a great temptation to place the hogs upon pasture alone. This practice will hardly ever pay, for it generally takes more grain and more time to finish off the hogs than if they had been fed a liberal ration while on pasture.

The amount of grain used will also depend upon the length of time the feeder has in which to fit the hogs for market. Hogs that are marketed rfom 10 to 12 months old are usually maintained on pasture alone during the grazing season. If any grain is given at all it is very light. In this way the great per centage of growth is made from the cheaply grown forage. Where rapid finishing is desired the liberal use of grain is important.

Poison For Cut Worms In the Corn

When cutworms are abundant on corn land, the use of poisoned bait is recommended by W. R. Walton and J. J. Davis of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The poisoned bait may be prepared by mixing 50 pounds of wheat bran, 2 pounds of Paris green, and 6 finely chopped oranges or lemons. Low-grade molasses is added until the whole mixture attains the consistency of a stiff dough. Water also may be added if necessary, and middlings or alfalfa meal may be substituted for the bran. This bait should be distributed over the infested field in small lumps, and sprinkled sparingly around each hill. In cases where the field is known to be infested, this bait should be distributed as soon as the corn appears above the ground and before the cutworms have had an opportunity to do much damage. It is best to apply the bait during the late afternoon or early evening hours, as the cutworms do most of their feeding at night. A narow band of the poisoned bait placed around the edge of the field will also assist in protecting the field from an invasion of the worms from adjoining grassland.

Feeds Pigs Well Right From Start

I give my pigs all they can eat from birth. They will eat out of a trough at two weeks old in addition to getting all the milk they want from the sow. All my sows are good sucklers and good mothers. By having the pigs eat at an early age they lose nothing at weaning time ,and I wean them at eight weeks old—and they just hump themselves and make rapid gains when the cost of each pound of gain is the cheapest.

I think the ideal hog is the one which matures quickly. That is the kind the packer wants, and breeding stock should be exactly the type demanded by the packer, for the breeders are to produce the market hogs and will transmit their qualities. That is why I want to push my hogs to 200 pounds as soon as possible. The better the start the earlier rapid gains are made ,then the sooner one may expect early maturity. A good average weight of rather lean meat at a low cost, at an early age.

I believe we have correct type here, so by correct feeding and plenty of it, attention to the details that promote health and vigor, and culling of all unsatisfactory pigs. We are making a success of our work.

"Man's Work Is From Sun to Sun, But Woman's Work Is Never Done"

A PLEA FOR A RESTING SPELL

Maybe, dear woman friend, you have your own plea for "a resting spell." If so send it to editor Country Woman's Corner, Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala. Don't worry—your name will not be used in your letter if it is published. If you know of any short cuts to lighten the labor of the woman in country or small town send them in also. This is your column, run by a country woman for your benefit.

Nowhere is the above saying more true than in the country where women do their own work in and around the house after which there are yards to be swept, then comes preserving time followed by hog killing at first frost, and her's is a greater share of the work in all these yearly functions.

There is little or no time for a day off to visit and in some cases when visitors call the time given them is begrudged, though otherwise they are welcome.

There are women who hoe in the fields side by side with their husbands all the week and rejoice in having the strength to do it, but it is a custom in the South for all laborers, black and white on farms, to quit work at noon Saturday until Monday morning, and they draw their pay or ration check, go to the village store where they chat and have a jolly time until sometimes late at night, while the wife and mother sits home alone.

The Wife's Share.

But the woman! She is at home mending, bathing the children, sweeping yards, or a thousand other things but you may count on it she is not loafing or taking any kind of rest.

The day on the farm begins with woman's work in preparation of breakfast for the workmen and ends with putting the family to bed, while between these tasks is a constant round of duties, the same day after day with few modern convenient helps and no monetary reward whatever.

Some farmers object seriously to the use (on Sunday) of their horses or mules that have worked all week, yet their wives cook just as many meals, dress just as many children and wash just as many dishes as well as milk cows, gather eggs, etc., just as on every other of the week's six days, and this is called a day of rest, and the woman is the only animal on the place that don't get her share of it. It's a shame.

It is high time the women on the farms cease staying at home to dry-rot and work their lives out in the steady monotonous grind of work, but strike for her own rest hour, so on Saturday at dinner hour when your "better half" starts for the village store to sell or "swap" your eggs and spend the afternoon in small talk, you and the children jump in that wagon and go to your neighbor's for the afternoon, taking your darning with you if you cannot leave it for it is much more pleasant to sew and talk than to sew and think. But try to content yourself with leaving all work at home and have a real half day off as all other laborers do, for who labors more steadily than yourself, or has longer hours? Where the neighbors are within easy walking distance a little social club can be formed and all meet each Saturday at a different one's house to sew or just chat thus giving each mind food for thought until the next meeting.

Of course the stay-at-homes will find it hard to break their long set rule of years staying by themselves, but once the little social circle is started you will each look forward to Saturday with pleasant anticipations. You be the one to start such a move in your neighborhood.

At quilting times a little neighborhood gathering like this would be a pleasure to each and all quilts quickly quilted. Try it and see.

The Real "Day of Rest."

And now a plea for Sunday, the real old fashioned kind like our grandmothers had, the real day of rest as it should be.

In the north and west today you eat cold Sunday dinners and yet they are delicious and if thousands live thus, you can!

Take Saturday morn for your cooking, just as you do when there is going to be all-day-singing at the church and you carry your basket with you, and every member of your household eats it and enjoys it. Why can't they do the same at home one day in the week? They can, if they will!

A cold dinner can be made as inviting and as nourishing (and in summertime far more comfortable) as a hot one; and cool enough to have some for supper. In this way you may get a chance to go to that Sunday School and church service you've been unable to attend so long, secure in the knowledge that your dinner is all cooked, table set, and nothing do but eat when you get home. No hot stove to stand over and no stomach full of hot food to heat your blood to boiling point and make yu talk all afternoon about it being "the hottest day we've had this year," a favorite remark of those who pile in hot foods in hot weather just as you pile wood on the furnace; for food is to our system just what the wood or coal is to the stove, it increases the heat.

I have tried this proposition I'm making you, and it proved most pleasant to all of us, being just like a picnic dinner, and where there are chickens, eggs, milk, butter, new potatoes and fresh vegetables for salads, don't dare say you can't prepare a cold dinner for Sunday, have you tried it? Let us start the first Sunday in July with the cold Sunday dinner to give the womenfolk a day of rest, and let me have a letter from you saying how you like it, for you know letters from you whom I cannot see are an inspiration to me, and I want more of you to write me what you want me to talk about and I'll sift the subject from every point of view and try to give you only such advice as will prove helpful to you on any subject, so jot down your wants right now and write them to me, for I am just a plain country woman like yourself and in position to know what the woman of the country lacks in the way of comforts and considerations.

Next issue I am going to give you some pickle recipes, so if there is any special kind you want, write me and I'll try to give it to you. Of course no letters or names will be published.

Don't forget! Cold dinner "first Sunday" in July!

Creameries Win In Mississippi

Where the creameries and dairymen of Mississipi made one pound of butter last year they are now making two. Mississippi dairy leadership was well illustrated in the recent butter scoring competition held at Birmingham, when this state exhibited six of the samples of butter judges against an average of two from ten other states. These statements have been just given out by L. A. Higgins, dairy extension worker of the Mississippi A. and M. College.

Eleven creameries are now in active operation in the state according to Mr. Huggins, and two more will start work within the next two weeks while two years ago there were only two; one at the A. and M. College and the other at Brookhaven. Many of these started with comparatively small outputs and have more than doubled their producing power in the past year. This is true with the creamery at Aberdeen which has now a monthly output of 25,000 to 50,000 pounds of butter.

The telephone rang and the new maid answered it.

"Hella!" came from the receiver.

"Hello!" answered the girl timidly.

"Who is this" again came the voice

"I don't know who it is," said the girl. 'I can't see you.'

VOLUME V. CLANTON, ALABAMA, JUNE 29, 1916. NUMBER 13.

HUGHES IS INDORSED BY THE PROGRESSIVES

National Committee Heals Former Division by Indorsement of Republican Candidate.

CHICAGO, June 26.—Tne national committee of the progressive party today endorsed Charles E. Hughes for President and the party born four years ago practically went out of existenee as a national political organization. The vote was 32 to 6 with nine members declining to vote.

The dicision to endorse the republican nominee came at the end of a stormy session. The fight for Hughes' endorsement was led by George W. Perkins of New York. James R. Garfield of Ohio and Chester H. Rowell of California.

The radical element in the committee, represented by John M. Parker of Louisiana, nominee of the progressive convention for vice president; Matthew Hale of Massachusetts; Bainbridge Colby of New York, and Henry F. Cochems of Wisconsin, vigorously protested against the endorsement of any candidate for President, and fought the majority at every step of the proceedings. The minority's first move was to insist on an open session of the committee, and it won this point after a number of committeemen led by Mr. Parker bolted the meeting.

Declination Accepted

After Oscar King Davis, secretary of the committee, had read Col. Theodore Roosevelt's letter finally declining the progressive nomination for President and urging that Mr. Hughes be supported by progressives in order to beat President Wilson, the committee voted to accept Colonel Roosevelt's declination and took a recess for luncheon.

At the beginning of the afternoon session Chairman Hale ruled the next order of business was to fill the vacancy on the ticket caused by the refusal of Colonel Roosevelt to run.

Bainbridge Colby of New York presented the name of Victor Murdock of Kansas, chairman of the national committee, now on his way to China. This led to a clash between Raymond Robins of Illinoise and Mr. Colby in which the lie was passed. Mr. Robins said Mr. Murdock had told him he would not accept the presidential nomination. The proposition to run a third party ticket then was defeated, 31 to 15.

Mr. Garfield next introduced a reso lution indorsing Hughes for President and directing the executive committee of the progressive party to cooperate with the republicans in the campaign.

Mr. Cochems of Wisconsin contended the committee had no authority to indorse any candidate and that its power was limited to the filling of the vacancy on the ticket caused by the refusal of Colonel Roosevelt to run.

Chairman Hale ruled that the motion to indorse or recommend the republican candidate for president was out of order and a de bate of several hours ensued.

Garfield Is Sustained

Finally Mr. Garfield appealed from the decision of the chair and was sustained, 33 to 14. During the discussion Raymond Robins indicated he would support President Wilson if the progressives did not put a ticket in the field.

Mr. Parker made a firey protest against any endorsement. Many of the progressives were former democrats, he said, and had burned all their political bridges when they joined the new organization. He intimated he might vote for President Wilson.

Be fore the roll was called on the endorsement of Hughes Mr. Colby made an unsuccessful attempt to have all action delayed until August 5, the anniversary of the birth of the party.

While the debate was at its height, Clarence Straus read a resolution said to have been passed by the delegates from Virginia to the progressive national convention opposing the endorsement of any other than a progressive for President and challenged the right of Garfield to vote for Hughes under the proxy he held of the national committeeman from Virginia.

Mr. Garfield said he had never heard of the action and finally declined to be guided by it.

The following states voted for the indorsement of Hughes on the roll call:

Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Georgia, Illinoise, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Wyoming, Hawaii.

After endorsing Mr. Hughes the committee on motion of Dean W. D. Lewis of Pennsylvania unanimously decided that the action should not be binding on any individual.

Before adjournment late today the following resolutions were adopted as expressing the sense of the committee:

Sense of Committee

"The national progressive committee recognizes the following basic facts:

"1. The progressive party was created by the coming together of men who saw that if our nation was to maintain its place in civilization, certain great advances must be made in economic conditions, in governmental efficiency and in political machinery. These men men set forth in the progressive platform of 1912 a great and definite programme of action, then far in advance of any proposals made to the American people, but now by their work accepted in substance by the whole country as the plain path of duty.

"2. Moved by this purpose at the sacrifice of old associations and material consideration, under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, these men and women for four years, without hope of personal gain or advantage, have earnestly lebored to serve their country in its need. As a political party they met almost uniform defeat at the elections. But out of office, opposed by some of the most powerful and subtile forces of modern life, they succeeded in the substance of their aim in making their purpose the purpose of the nation. Thus much of the Progressive program has already become law. Again the 1916 platform of the Republican party has been made substantially progressive pledging that party to a federal child labor law, a federal workman's compensation act and federal investigation of the conditions of the workmen in industries.

"Had world conditions remained normal, it is fairly certain that the progressive party would ultimately have secured in legislation, in government action, in non-sectional politics, the enforcement of their great plan of advance.

"Across the normal paths of peace, however, came the great European war and with an issue deeper than national advance, the issue of national unity and nation's existence, of Americanism and of preparedness. The Progressive platform, therefore, placed foremost, as our immediate necessity, preparedness in arms, industry and spirit; in arms, the Democratic principle of universal military training, in industry, the cooperation through government, of the whole people, to promote individutl welfare and businss prosperity; in spirit of Americanism that knows no hyphenated patriotism. The national progressive committe recognizes that such are now the issues that immediately confront the country and looks only to the duty that arises therefrom.

In accord with Hughes.

"As a plain political fact the next administration of the United States will be either republican or democratic. The progressive party holds the deciding vote in this issue. If the party throws its weight to Mr. Hughes his election will probably be insured. If that party runs a third ticket of its own, it is equally probable it will insure the re-election of Mr. Wilson. The party is in accord with the views of Colonel Roosevelt set forth in his letter as to the disastrous effects which the democratic administration has had upon the interests and honor of of our country. The national committee concurs with him on the grave national peril that would be involved in a continuance of that administration, and as to the desirability of placing Mr. Hughes in the control of the adminitration.

"The progressive party has brought together much of the best intellect, moral courage and qualities and leadership that the country has. In the work that must be done for the country in the next few years, it is essential that these qualities, the most important national resources, be available, either individually or, if need be, in organized form. The men and women who have formed the progressive party have in the past four years come to know each other, have been bound by the common ties, a great and unselfish purpose, of personal sacrifice and a united action. As individuals their influence hed been before that time, small. As such a group they worked enormous courage in American conditions.

"Facing these essential facts which transcend partisan or personal considerations the national committe sets forth the following as its earnest and solemn conviction:

"It accepts the resignation of Colonel Roosevelt as a candidate of the party for the president of the United States and concurs in the reasons for his action given in his letter of resignation. It recognizes his past services as leader of this party, a service that cannot adequately be expressed in words, and it recognizes the sacrifice which the present crisis has demanded of him and which he has met in listening rather to the urgent need of the nation than to any partisan or personal ambition.

"The national committe supports Charles Evans Hughes of Nek York for the presidency.

"The committee desires to make it entirely clear that in its action herein it asks nothing for the progressive party, as a party or for members thereof. It imposes no condition or consideration for the support of the party, save only the condition that Mr. Hughes shall earnestly work toward the accomplishment of the great purposes of national security and national honor and justice which are set forth by Colonel Roosevelt in his letter as the motive for the action.

"The committe earnestly desires that the power of the progressive movement, which has largely without political victory accomplished so great a change in the aspect of American affairs, be continued and preserved intact for further service. To this end, the committee therefore recommends that the organization of the progressive party be preserved so far as possible and so far as it is best consistent with that purpose of national service; that the state committees continue in operation and take such action as is best fitted to give unity and expressions to the progressive movement in their respective localities. The national committee will maintain its organization for the same purpose throughout the country to the end that we may the unified working power of that great body of men and women of high national purpose, whose intellects and ideals were never more needed by the country, and whose power to make good these ideals will be greatly increased by maintaining their common action both for the present and for the future."

WELL KNOWN TEACHER RETURNS TO CHILTON

Prof. Charles M. Williams, who has recently been elected a member of the faculty of Thorsby Institute for the cominge year, taught for several years in Chilton County, being associated with Prof. Rasco at Collins Chapel, and later being principal of the Jemison school. More recently he has been teaching in Clay County, and has made an enviable record as a successful teacher, well liked by pupils and patrons. His return to Chilton County will be good news for his friends here.

Prof. Williams is a graduate with the degree B. S. from the Southern Normal University of Huntingdon, Tenn. While there he took a teachers training course under Chancellor Alfred Holdbrook, a well known train er of teachers. Since graduating he has taught continuously in the public schools of Alabama, making successful records in both town and country schools. The trustees of Thorsby Institute count themselves fortunate in being able to secure his services.

The new catalogue of Thorsby Institute will be issued in a couple of weeks.

BANK WILL PAY DEPOSITORS

From the best information in hand the indications are that the Clanton Bank, which was recently closed by Supt. Walker, will in the next few days, pay something like eighty per cent. of the deposits to the individual depositors of the institution.

FORMER CASHIER CLANTON BANK PLACED ON TRIAL

The case of Dr. E. A. Matthews, former cashier of the Clanton Bank, was called by Judge Alston in the Circuit Court of Chilton County Wednesday morning.

There are thirteen indictments against Dr. Matthews for alleged mismanagement in the affairs of the bank.

After Judge Alston had sifted out of the forty-eight jurors those whe were in any way related to the offi cers of the bank or connected with the institution as either depositors or stockholders, the twelve men who are to occupy the jury box were selected and took their seats to decide on this important case.

The first witness called by Circuit Solicitor Tate was State Superintendent of banks, Alex Walker, who was on the stand for several hours. Letters written by Mr. Walker to the bank officials—Mr. Matthews, the cashier, Mr. Mullins, the president—and replies thereto were read by Mr. Tate. Direct questions were asked the witness, who testified that his instructions as to the management of the bank's affairs had not been in the main, adhered to.

Especially was the witness questioned as the dealings between the Clanton Bank and the Fertilizer company, which at one time held notes endorsed by some of the officials of these letters and replies, Attonrey the bank. During the reading of Tate was particularly pointed in his queries.

Judge Alston instructed Sheriff H. A. Harris to place a number of large electric fans throughout the court room.

Two assistant bank examiners were on the stand later, and each of them testified substantiating the testimony as given by Mr. Walker as to the condition of the Clanton Bank at the time it was ordered to be closed.

Dr. Matthews was called and was on the witness stand for an hour testifying as to the bank's affairs. Mr. Phillip Barrett, assistant cashier, was called and examined in general as to the affairs of the bank and its condition. At six o'clock court was adjourned till 9:30, a.m. on Thursday.

The case was resumed Thursday morning, and but few additional witnesses were examined.

Dr. Matthews was called the second time by Mr. Tate, the prosecutor, and for some two hours the witness was questioned. Dr. Matthews was followed on the stand by the president of the Clanton Bank, and several of the directors, and at 11:00 o'clock, the evidence being all in, Mr. Tate commenced his argument, which proved to be an able effort. He was folowed by Mr. Walker, and later by Mr. Curry. Both of these lawyers pleaded earnestly for the client.

In this case, which is one of the thirteen indictments against Dr. Matthews, the jury late Thursday afternoon returned a verdict of guilty and imposed a sentence of three years on the defendant. Another case against the former cashier was taken up immediately.

TOMATO CLUB GIRLS MAKE GOOD SHOWING

Attendance at Short Course this week is good, and great interest is shown by Girls.

A bevy of good-looking lassies wearing white caps and red ribbon badges have been loudly in evidence in and around Clanton this week. They have taken every bit of the town that happened to be in their pathway, —automobiles, picture shows, drug stores, and even the very homes of our good-hearted citizens have been given to this fair contingent from the rural sections of our county.

The occasion for their assembly here is the Chilton County Girls Canning Club Short Course, under the supervision of Mrs. Lida Jones, our local Direstress for the Canning Club Work in this county.

Girls representing each of the several canning clubs that have been organized over the county arrived in Clanton on Tuesday and were taken in charge by Mrs. Jones and conducted to the high school building, and assigned to homes while they were in town. This was the fulfillment of Mrs. Jone's previous assurances that the girls would be cared for while in attendance. Words of welcome were spoken to the visiting girls by Miss Marjorie Murphy and Mrs. W. T. Callen.

On Tuesday at 11:30 Judge E. B. Deason spoke to the girls on Club Work and its benefits to the county.

Along with canning demonstrations fancy packing and cooking lessons all interspersed with songs and club yells, the afternoon on Tuesday was passed, closing with a delightful and lovely social hour with Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Callen at their home.

Wednesday, June 28

From the hour of assembly in the morning, the time till noon was given to the demonstration of the fireless cooker, and canning of tomatoes and soup mixtures by Miss Paxton and Miss Zeigler. The dinner for the girls in attendance on Wednesday was prepared and served by their own members at the high school, which shows the great practicibility of the course that the girls are receiving.

In the afternoon Prof. S. L. Chessnett of the Alabama Girls Technical Institute of Montevallo rendered valuable information on the growing of tomatoes. Mr. Conway, county farm demonstrator for Chilton County, addressed the audience on the Pig Club work.

In the afteernoon the girls were treated with an automobile ride by the citizens of Clanton, who are owners of autos. The party went several miles over the roads of the county. ty.

Wednesday night the party was carried by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Callen to the drug stores, where they were the recipients of a course of the most delightful refreshments.

Thursday, June 29.

Thursday morning began with a model club meeting, conducted by Miss Leo Zeigler of Autauga county. From the splendid conduct, which Miss Zeigler exemplified in this model meeting the girls were given a tangible example of how to conduct their own club meetings, when they return to their homes over the county.

Each Tomato Club girl will be given a record book, on which to keep an accurat account of her individual work. The record book and its keeping were fully explained to the girls by Miss Paxton.

A demonstration on the canning of beans was made just before noon on Thursday by Mrs. Jones and Miss Paxton.

This coming together of girls representing the various clubs from over the county is an innovation with us in this county, and the good that it is bound to produce is incalculable.

Under the speldid and efficient organization that has been perfected by Mrs. Jones, our county agent, we are bound to reap dividends of great good to our girls, our fathers and mothers, our homes, our farms and our morality. We highly commend the girls for the splendid showing they have made here, and we sincerely hope that their efforts are only in the beginning. Our hope is for much lasting good to come from this splendid meeting of our lovely girls with the white caps and red badges.

LETTER FROM STATE DEPT. OF AGRICULTURE AND ECONOMICS

Things necessary to be done for the Next thirty days to Cotton.

CULTIVATION—All cotton should be cultivated intensively with implements that will keep down all vegetation and form a good dust mulch without cutting or interfering with the lateral roots of the plant. You can't go over it too often. Do this weekly if possible.

COTNROL OF THE WEEVIL—All punctured cotton forms should be picked and burned. Don't let them lie on the surface untli the adult weevil emerges. Nor will it do to plow them under. To plow them under the average depth of cultivation, will only serve to furnish a sufficiency of moisture for the rapid development of the weevil, which will work his way to the surface. The destruction of the punctured forms with thoroughness is the only means of control that is applicable to the present period. To half do this work is just equivalent to not doing it. For example, two punctured forms left undisturbed would develop two adult weevils in fifteen days. Assuming the two to be a pair, male and female, under favorable conditions, they could raise over six hundred thousand weevils in ninety days. A form left undisturbed will develop an adult in fifteen days. Assuming it to be a female, she would deposit in forms an average of one hundren and fifty eggs, besides she would destroy more forms in feeding. So by neglecting the destruction of one form, You soon have one hundred and fifty adult weevils puncturing forms. A hand ful of punctured forms destroyed now is the equivalent to the destruction of barrels of them on August first.

Your success in control of the weevil will depend on the thoroughness with which you do this work. The over-wintered weevil emerges from hybernating quarters and alights on the cotton. At this period she does not travel. She will not cross a turn row from one cut to another, but confines her feeding to within the space of a few feet. She will soon live her average period of life and die, and is dependent on the eggs she lays to develop weevils and thus perpetuate her colony. You break up her nest. Destroy all punctured forms. Results: No young ones raised. The old weevil dies. They do not come from other fields to yours. The over winter weevils are about finished emerging and your losses from the weevils are hardly equal to the natural shedding of the cotton until the migratory period about August 10th.

Special Agent.

CANNING CLUB GIRLS

The girls of the Canning Club from all over the county are here this week and under the care and direction of Mrs. Lida Jones, they are having a splendid time. Tuesday evening they were treated to an auto ride out over the highway, and Tuesday night they enjoyed a visit to the picture show.

But all is not fun and frolic with them. That comes only after the performance of the graver duties of their work.

At the county high school building in the days they are engaged in the work and practice of their canning profession. And here as elsewhere, the kindness and efficiency of Mrs. Jones brings valuable teaching to the girls.

Of course, when the farmer is visited by the Free-Trade candidate for office, who will ask him to vote for the "immortal principles of Free-Trade," the candidate will take delight in dispelling the frown that beclouds the inquiring farmer's wife's brow with a satisfactory explanation of why our Free-Trade Congress took off the duty of five cents a dozen on eggs and allowed China in the year 1914 to ship into this country six million dozen stale, unwholesome hen fruit. Of course it will—not.

UNREST EVEN AMONG DEMOCRATS OF SOUTH EVERYWHERE

From Montgomery Journal—

The observant Ozark Herald, which may be somewhat of an alarmist, yet it makes mention of what is apparent within the democratic lines in Alabama, and no doubt throughout the south.

Referring to the necessity of harmony in the party and that in view of the fact that Wilson is in minority president that we must draw from "peace republicans," the Herald says relative to local conditions:

"We don't know how it is going to be in other sections of the state and in other states of the south, but Dale county is going to poll the heaviest republican vote this fall that was ever polled in the history of the county. Of course this will have no effect on Alabama as a whole but it may be taken as an index of how things may probably go over the entire country; and in the doubtful states a heavier republican vote than usual will land the states in the republican column. We say this with all loyalty to the democratic party, as we have never voted any other ticket; but a fact is a fact, and facts are stubborn things."

There is unquestionably a growing feeling of unrest within the democratic party, whether it grows out of local or nation-wide conditions, we are not prepared to say; but there is a tendency to break away from the party and kick out of the traces.

There is no longer the "negro" scare crow in the south, and we are getting so far away from the days of the scallawag and the carpetbagger that we are almost ready to forgive both, if not forgive, forget his sins, rub out and begin over again.

In the last presidential election Taft got the usual republican vote and there were over a hundred and twenty-five democrats in city and county who voted for Roosevelt.

TO CLUB BOYS AND GIRLS

The other boys and girls of the county are interested in your work, and want to know what you are doing, so we have decided to have a "Club Corner" all your own. Each week we will publish your own letters if you will write us something interesting about your pigs, corn or tomatoes.

So, let's all see who will be the first to write and show their appreciation to our newspapers, by keeping the "Corner" filled with newsy letters. Tell us what you are doing and what you are planning to do.

Uncle Sam is doing a great deal for you boys and girls this year. Tell the others what you are doing for yourself and him.

Address letters to Editor "Club Corner," Clanton, Ala.

IN MEMORY

On June 18, the sad intelligence came that Miss Emma Hubbard was dead. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Hubbard.

The writer having known Miss Emma all her life can readily say she was one of the kindest hearted young ladies we ever met, it seemed as if her life was chiefly for the good of others. We can think of her when just a little Sunday school girl at Pleasant Grove back in the eighties, what a bright pupil she was, how well she filled her place then. We can think of her as she grew up to womanhood how useful she was in church and Sunday school work. She was devoted to sacred music, her service along that line in religous work was truly of much value. She had kind words for all. We recall certain instances in her record that were striking proofs of her great generosity and unbiased sincerity. Those in a position to know have said her salvation before baptism was certainly real. She is gone is a sad thought, but it is a pleasure to narrate those bright instances of her generous and noble life. But alas, fatal disease fastened its fangs in her mortal body. All was done for her that kind hearted parents and and physicians could do. Her suffer ing continued.

Oh what of all my suffering here,
If Lord thou canst me meet
With that enraptured host to appear
And worship at thy feet.

On the night of June 17th her suffering ended. The silver cord was loosed. Her pure spirit returned to God who gave it.

Her remains by loving hands were laid away in Macedonia cemetery near her childhoods happy home. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Honeycutt in the presence of a large gathering of her friends and relatives. The floral offerings were beautiful. The minister paid a nice tribute to her memory. The music was the songs of her childhood days, "Oh Think of The Home Over There."

She is sweetly sleeping in the grave waiting for the resurrection call. Sweet thought she will come back again, this hope is based on the sacrifice at calvary. We sympathize with the sorrowing relatives. If human sympathy is so abundant, how much more the sympathy of our creator. He is not angry but in the fruition of His great plan all will be right.

Emma now is resting, before her all the blessings of the triumphant morning.

"Give joy or grief give ease or pain take life or friends away, but let me find them all again in that eternal day."

HER FRIEND.

CORINTH

Health of this community is good at present; and everybody seems to be wearing broad smiles.

The singing at Mr. E. L. Jones' last Saturday night was enjoyed by all present.

Our Sunday School is good and our singing is improving nicely.

There is a question up about all day Sunday singings. I like them. We can praise God in singing as well as we can in church and Sunday School. You cannot keep the young folks at one place all the time. If you try it, you would soon see that everything would be a drag. I am sure that there are some who go to the all day singings for a good time, but while they do, you are not responsible for their acts if you go to serve God.

With best wishes to the Union-Banner.

PROF. McDONALD WRITES LETTTER FROM UNIVERSITY

Tuscaloosa, Ala., June 22, 1916.
Editor Union-Banner:

I am writing this letter for the benefit of our citizens. You know that I am this summer at the University of Alabama. We are having a fine summer school. The registration has already gone well beyond the high water mark of last year when 735 were enrolled.

Tuscaloosa has recently given to Alabama an object lesson setting forth the value of publicity and iniative in the matter of public health. Last fall following the development of a number of cases of fever the city health authorities, with the co-operation of President Denny of the University of Alabama, secured through the state board of health the direct aid of the federal government in making this community a model community from the point of view of sanitation and health. Nothing has been left undone to guarantee ideal health conditions. Not only has typhoid been eleminated, but the federal authorities have gone still further. They hav made complete malaria surveys with a view of giving to Alabama through this community an object lesson in the elimination of malaria. There is great satisfaction on all sides in view of these great achievements. Tuscaloosa invites the entire state to come and see what has been done and to rejoice in the fine results that publicity and initiative have brought to this community.

Every community in Alabama should carefully consider what has thus been accomplished in Tuscaloosa.

Yours very truly,
H. C. McONALD.

A PRECIOUS JEWEL

God came into the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Atkinson a few days past and took from them their little darling, Nannie Lake, and carried her to that celestial city where there is no grief nor suffering.

Little Lake was four years of age and was sick only a few days when God called her.

Yes, darling Lake, we all loved you and hearts were filled with sorrow to see you leave us, for no more we will hear your sweet voice, and see your foot prints and loving smiles. But still we should not grieve because God loved you best and wanted you out of this sinful world.

We know she went to Him with no blot of sin in her sweet little soul. She is there to greet her dear little sister which was taken from her about eight months ago, for she had often said she was so lonely since she was called from her. So we feel sure they are at rest together with Jesus. Oh if we all could live to have the same assurance with God as this precions jewel, what a happy meeting it would be to join hands together in that beautiful city.

May God give comfort to the bereaved father and mother.

Her remains were laid to rest in Pleasant Grove cemetery. Funeral services conducted by Bro. F. A. Gibson.

Good by precious darling
No more we hear your voice,
We will meet little darling
In the time of great rejoice.

Her aunt,
SALLYE E. POPWELL.

Clanton Failed to Score Eclectic Defeated Them

The closest baseball games of this season in Clant n was the series played Wednesday and Thursday with Eclectic, which resulted in three successive defeats for Clanton.

In the two games Thursday afternoon the result was in each case 1 to 0 in favor of the visitors. It was a close contest, both teams playing excellent ball.

The home boys jlayed exceedingly well, but a few slight errors in a pinch lost their controle and gave the advantage to Eclectic by the least bit.

The games Thursday were pitched by Willie Wilson and Albert Pyron for Clanton.

It is probable that the Clanton team will go to Eclectic some time soon and play another series.

CONCERNING DIPPING OF CATTLE FOR TICKS

To the People of Chilton County:

We the undersigned citizens of Elmore County would like to write you something about tick eradication as there has been some efforts made toward it down here. We think we are able to advise you that it is the worst thing that Elmore County has ever had. It is an injury to all cattle and a real graft to certain men. It has caused more disturbance in Elmore County than anything else ever has. There has been lots of cattle died down here caused from dipping, and if you people want milk and butter, you had better avoid such graft.

Men, don't sit still on election day as we did in Elmore, and have the wink pulled over your eyes as we did. We are obeliged to say that we were misled in this matter, as there have been some inquiry from your county. We are able to give you any information that you would like to get about this matter. We can say that Elmore County has spent several thousand dollars, and just think who has got it to pay.

On Labor Day the American workingman parades; on May 1, he takes stock of his wages, hours and conditions, and on November 7 he will go to the polls to vote to banish forever business-depressing Free-Trade from this country.

It is remarkable that the Democratic platform of 1916 omits the declaration made in 1912 that "our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as to be relied upon during the campaign." What a shout of laughter would have arisen all over the country if that assurance had been repeated in 1916.

A Little Blossom To Delight the Home

When it is known that in the near future the home is to be blessed with a new arrival the first thought should be "Mother's Friend." This is an external remedy gently applied over the stomach muscles. It makes them firm and pliant, they expand naturally without undue strain. It removes from the nerves those influences which are responsible for much of the pain incident to the period of expectancy. It is for this reason that much of the distress such as morning sickness is avoided. All prospective fathers should see to it that the expectant mother is provided with a bottle of "Mother's Friend."

If more convenient get a bottle on your way home. Remember that many of our most valuable aids to health and comfort and safety are only such when our knowledge of them is put into action. Begin early to suggest its use and "Mother's Friend" will soon become one of the most helpful influences ever devised for avoiding much of the distress incident to coming motherhood.

The directions are simple. Get it at any drug store It is applied by the expectant mother herself, it penetrates deeply and affords quick and splendid relief in a most gratifying manner and reflects a physical betterment to the nervous disposition of the baby. Don't fail to get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today and then write Bradfield Regulator Co., 713 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a pretty little book brimful of information for expectant mothers. It is a delight to read it.

SAVED FROM SLOW AND HORRIBLE DEATH

"'Ferraline' Stepped Between The Unexplained Feelings Of Indigestion and Myself, and Saved Me From a Slow and Horrible Death."

Mr. F. W. Dougherty, bookkeeper and store manager for Mr. J. W. Doggett, merchant at Souwilpa, Ala., writes the Franklin Medicine Company Inc., that had it not been for 'Ferraline' he would have died.

Mr. Dougherty who is well known in his comunity was until recently a very sick man. He had lost weight until he had run down to merely a shadow. Mr. Dougherty says:

"Had it not been for 'Ferraline' I would have died. I was slowly starving to death. My stomach would retain nothing I could eat; my liver would not do its duty, and I had lost all the strength energy and flesh that my body possessed. I only existed and taht was all.

"My condition had been growing worse for a long time. I had not been able to find anything that the physicians prescribed for me that gave me any benefit. I seemed to be a puzzle to them and the patent medicines I bought were intended evidently for the 'other fellow' as it was like pouring water in a rat hole for all the god they did me.

"Through the influence of a friend who told me what 'Ferraline' had done for him I began taking the great Tonic. From the first dose I obtained benefit, and before I had taken one small bottle I had gained 9 pounds.

"I now feel like a different person, though I have not yet taken the second bottle. My appetite has improved. My food is being digested, and I am not troubled with any liver complaint.

" 'Ferraline' is certainly in my opinion the greatest medicine in the world. There is no question about it. It certainly saved my life, and there is nothing I can say or do that will repay the gratitude I owe to the friendw ho gave me the first information about this wonderful Tonic.

"Mr. J. W. Doggett now keeps 'Ferraline' in stock, and I am a living example to those who wish to know if it really will do what they have heard about it.

"I have bought and sent 'Ferraline' to more than one of my friends and relatives who live in another state, and the reports I get from them is that it's giving them relief the same as it will do for any case of stomach trouble on top of earth. If it will do for me what it has, it will be a benefit to any run down system."

Federal Inquiry or Railroad Strike?

Faced by demands from the conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen that would impose on the country an additional burden in transportation costs of $100,000,000 a year, the railroads propose that this wage problem be settled by reference to an impartial Federal tribunal.

With these employes, whose efficient service is acknowledged, the railroads have no differences that could not be considered fairly and decided justly by such a public body.

Railroads Urge Public Inquiry and Arbitration

The formal proposal of the railroads to the employes for the settlement of the controversy is as follows:

"Our conferences have demonstrated that we cannot harmonize our differences of opinion and that eventually the matters in controversy must be passed upon by other and disinterested agencies. Therefore, we propose that your proposals and the proposition of the railways be disposed of by one or the other of the following methods:

1. Preferably by submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the only tribunal which, by reason of its accumulated information bearing on railway conditions and its control of the revenue of the railways, is in a position to consider and protect the rights and equities of all the interests affected, and to provide additional revenue necessary to meet the added cost of operation in case your proposals are found by the Commission to be just and reasonable; or, in the event the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot, under existing laws, act in the premises, that we jointly request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to enable the Commission to consider and promptly dispose of the questions involved; or

2. By arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Federal law" (The Newlands Act).

Leaders Refuse Offer and Take Strike Vote

Leaders of the train service brotherhoods, at the joint conference held in New York, June 1-15, refused the offer of the railroads to submit the issue to arbitration or Federal review, and the employes are now voting on the question whether authority shall be given these leaders to declare a nation-wide strike.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is proposed by the railroads as the public body to which this issue ought to be referred for these reasons:

No other body with such an intimate knowledge of railroad conditions has such an unquestioned position in the public confidence.

The rates the railroads may charge the public for transportation are now largely fixed by this Government board.

Out of every dollar received by the railroads from the public nearly one-half is paid directly to the employes as wages; and the money to pay increased wages can come from no other source than the rates paid by the public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, with its control over rates, is in a position to make a complete investigation and render such decision as would protect the interests of the railroad employes, the owners of the railroads, and the public.

A Question For the Public to Decide

The railroads feel that they have no right to grant a wage preferment of $100,000,000 a year to these employes, now highly paid and constituting only one-fifth of all the employes, without a clear mandate from a public tribunal that shall determine the merits of the case after a review of all the facts.

The single issue before the country is whether this controversy is to be settled by an impartial Government inquiry or by industrial warfare.

HAD PLENTY TO EAT BUT NO APPETITE

Tennessee farmer had spells of nervous indigestion and went from 160 to 135 pounds.

"It may sound unreasonable, and you may believe me or not, but after taking four bottles of Tanlac I have actually gained twenty-five pounds," said J. B. Williams, a well-known and prosperous farmer who resides at Greenbrier, Tenn., near Nashville.

"I had a case of stomach trouble last summer and it came pretty near knocking me out," continued Mr. Williams. "It was something like nervous indigestion. I began to go down hill and it looked like the more medicine I tok and the harder I tried to get well the worse I would get. We had pretty near everything to eat but nothing tasted right and I got so weak and nervous I couldn't do anything-in fact, I was just completely knocked out.

"Before I had this spell I weighed 160 pounds and kept falling off until I got down to where I only weighed 135 pounds.

"I am now back to my regular weight again and feel strong and well. My appetite is simply fine now and I don't mind my work. This medicine just took right hold of me and put me on my feet.

"Well, sir, the second day after I began taking it I got hungry and oh how good that ham did taste! I sleep fine now, too, and am not nervous like I was. Even the barking of the dogs at night does not wake me up.

"I never believed that a medicine could be made that would do anybody as much good as Tanlac has done me, and I want to recommend it to anybody suffering with the same troublies I had."

Tanlac is sold in Clanton exclusively by Upchurch Drug Co.

IN MEMORY

Last Friday night at 9 o'clock the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Gables and took from them their darling babe. She had been sick for only one week and everything possible was done for her, But God saw fit to carry her away. Sybil was only six months old and was dearly loved by everyone that saw her. But weep not, dear friends, for she is at rest.

Her remains were laid to rest in Union Grove cemetery Saturday evening.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Baker, prosperous farmer and citizen, who lived about ten or twelve miles northeast of Clanton, occurred as he was walking across his field near his home. Mr. Baker was about forty-five years old and leaves a family. He was well known in the county.

ECLECTIC TEAM WALKS AWAY WITH LOCALS

Eclectic took the first game of the series to be played here from Clanton in one of the best games played on the local diamond.

Ramsey went on the mound for Clanton, and pitched good ball during the entire game, holding the visitors down to six hits and striking out eight men, while Mason for Eclectic gave up only three hits and struck out eight men.

In the first inning Woodall for Eclectic hit the pill over center field fence for a home run, and Shaw for Clanton hit the ball for a homerun. At the end of the first inning the score stood 1 and 1.

For the next eight innings both teams played shut out ball, making the end of the ninth 1 to 1.

The eleventh inning decided the game, when Eclectic with two men on bases, Collins hit to 1 field, and a wild pitch by Marcus to Wilson, Eclectic scored two runs. Clanton was shut out in the eleventh inning which ended 4 to 1, in favor of Eclectic.

The features of the game were the batting of Woodall for Eclectic, but for Clanton Shaw starred at the bat, securing two hits and one run out of five times to the bat, and the pitching of Ramsey was a feature.

MAPLESVILLE DEFEATS THORSBY IN TWO GAMES

The fast going Maplesville team showed quite plainly today that their winning streak is no flash in the pan as they took the Thorsby team into camp on the local grounds to the tune of 6 to 3 and 6 to 1. Both games were cleanly played and the attendance was large. Rain interfered with the game and delayed it about thirty minutes thereby allowing only seven and five innings to be played. Both Burkhalter and Houldritch pitched good games and were strong in the pinches. Up to today the Maplesville team has played ten games winnig seven.

ENTERPRISE

The Enterprise singing society turned out very well Sunday, the 25th. Directors for the day were:

O. B. Deloach, T. D. Huett, J. M. Taylor, Edward Taylor and J. W. Cagle. A talk by Rev. J. A. Raines. Society was dismisssed for 15 minuts recess, and at 11 o'clock a good sermon was preached by Rev. Raines. His text is found in Romans 8:1.

Health if this community is very good at present.

Boll weevilis are doing something we don't know what, guess we will find out this fall. But I don't believe that the boll weevils are as big a slam on the south as this dipping vat business. Gentlemen of Chilton county I wish evey man in the county would visit Autauga county and ask about the dipping business. Peoples cows are leaving home going for ten miles just scared to death afraid peoare going to catch them and dip them. People of Autauga say it is killing cows. A man's milk cow came to my neighbor's house from down near Haines, near 10 miles from here. He said she ran away every time he dipped her, so I am not in favor of the law, and I don't intend to help elect a man to help rule the county's business that is in favor of the rotten law. I have been told that we had a man in the race and a man that I trusted, that was digging him one of his own. I think if he will come down and look about he will back out and not dig the vat.

Mr. Beaird we would like to know what about that singing. We would like to eat chicken with you all.

Yours respectfully,
J. W. CAGLE.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOLUME V. CLANTON, ALABAMA, JULY 6, 1916. NUMBER 14.

WHAT THE REPUBLICAN PARTY HAS ACHIEVED

From the National Republican.

The Republicans established once and for all the principle that the United States is a nation, an indissoluble Union, and not a loose confederacy of petty states.

It suppressed the most gigantic rebellion in history, and overthrew human slavery; made American democracy a reality rather than a theory.

It elected Abraham Lincoln President of the United States, and upheld his hands through the four long bloody years which made his name immortal and the Union eternal.

It paid the gigantic debt created by the nation's greatest war, preserved the national credit, created a banking system under which the Amrican pople achieved a prosperity unexampled in human history, resumed specie payment, and defeated repeated efforts to debase the national currncy.

It threw open the great West to development through the homestead policy of free land for the landless, the pacification of savage tribes the encouragement of transcontinental railroads, and the policy of nternal improvement which has brought the strength of the nation to the accomplishment of tasks beyond the power of individual effort to perform.

It established and maintained almost uninterruptedly for more than half a century the American policy of protection, under which the American standard of wages and living was kept at the highest level known in history; under which the domestic and foreign trade of the United States attained proportions unprecedented in this or any other nation, and made this country the richest of this or any other period in history; under which the American masses enjoyed a diffused prosperity, a range of opportunity, an intelligence and an initiative prevalent among "the common people" of no other nation that ever existed; under which labor ceased to the chief function of a caste or class, under which there was no slave, no peon, no peasant, no coolie; a nation which became to such a degree the hope and admiration of the world that there rushed into it during the half century of Republican control the greatest current of immigration that ever swept upon a nation's shores; under Republican policies and Republican commercial prosperity and political stability this mighty arm of aliens was absorbed into the great body of American people without conflict or disturbance; the alien being lifted up toward the American level rather than the American being leveled down to the alien standard.

It fulfiled the pledge of Lincoln to the volunteer soldier of the republic, his widow and orphan, with a generosity unparalleled in the history of governments.

It made the Monroe doctrine, safeguarding the affairs of this hemisphere from European entanglements, an international rather than an American tenet; it drove France from the soil of Mexico; it drove Spain from Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines; it bought Alaska; it peacefully settled questions of difference in our relations with Canada; it made the dominance of the United States in the affairs of the new world unchallenged, and its influence in the affairs of the whole world unquestioned.

It forced reparation from England for the depredations of the British built cruisers during the rebellion; it maintained everywhere and always throughout the world the dignity and security of American citizenship.

In the Orient America gave the world, through its Philippine policy, the example of a colonial program inspired by altruism, in a government which has given to the Philippine people more of progress and prosperity than they had known in all thec enturies of European controle. It prevented the partition of China by the powers and earned through its disinterested conduct the confidence and admiration of a people who have now established a republic in imitation of the United States, comprising within its borders nearly one-third of the world's population.

It planned and pushed near to completion the construction of the Panamac anal, the greatest engineering feat of history. In Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines it exemplified the possibilities of modern sanitation in the supprssion of plague spots.

In Cuba it fulfilled a solemn pledge to the world by surrendering control when orderly government had been established, retaining only that degree of suzeranity, by treaty, essential to the permanence of Republican government in the island.

It prohibited the immigration of oriental coolies maintaining standards of living hopelessly below the American level, and of the criminal the insane or the pauperized from any land.

It created the department of agriculture, and brought it to a high state of usefulness as a factor in agricultlral development; it established free delivery of mail in the smaller cities and towns and in rural districts; it created the parcel post and the postal savings banks; it vastly increased the scope and efficiency of the postal service of the United States.

It created the department of commerce and labor; now two departments. Through its naval construction program, it brought the United States to the fourth place among the world's naval powers, and sent the American fleet on a trip around the world which immeasurably increased American prestige abroad.

It originated the conservation movement, and inaugurated the irrigation project on the arid lands of the West.

It gave statehood to more than one-fourth of the states of the union —West Virginia, Nevada, Colorado. North Dakota, Montana. Washington. Idaho, Wyoming, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona.

it raised the American flag in the Hawaiian and Samoan islands, providing naval basis essentil to the preservation of American prestige in the Pacific.

It passed the Sherman anti-trust law, the most effective statute for the prevention of monopolistic combinations in restraint of trade yet enacted in the United States, and enforced it in the dissolution of many such combinations; it passed the interstate commerce act, the railway rate bill, the pure food law; it created the commerce court and the tariff commission abolished by the present national administration.

It established the system of promotion for efficiency in the diplomatic and consular service, improving greatly the character and broadening the usefulness of both.

It brought about through the mediation of a Republican President, the termination of the Russian-Japanese war; and it took the first step toward international peace through the formulation of treaties of peace and arbitration with the great powers of Europe.

Through postal subventions, under the Harrison administration, it brought into being the only trans-Atlantic steamship line operating under the American flag, and was defeated in repeated efforts to restore the American merchant marine only by persistent Democratic opposition.

It proposed the amendments to the Constitution providing for the direct election of United States senators, and making lawful the income tax as a method of federal taxation.

It suppressed the Louisiana and other lotteries, and enacted and enforced legislation prohibiting the use of the mails for fradulent purposes.

It established the gold standard, making and keeping every dollar of American money equal to the best known in the world.

It established so firmly the nation's credit, that its securities have become the most desirable in the world, and bear the smallest rate of interest.

It gave to the nation in fifty years the leadership of ten Presidents, no one of whom was of doubtful patriotism or ability, and each one of whom gave to the country an administration signalized by some notable public service,—Lincoln, Johnson, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Harrison, McKinley Roosevelt and Taft; gave to American public life such names as Seward, Stanton, Chase, Morton, Blaine, Conkling, Shurx, Curtis, Greeley, Reed, Hay and a host of others whose biographies are a part of the creditable history of the republic.

These are a few of the enduring achievments of the Republican party; achievements the lasting value of which is not a mere subject for academic speculation, but which has borne the test of time; deeds of the past which give weight to the party's pledges for the future. It is a glorious record which should inspire every Republican, and particular every young Republican, to do his best to make the future of so great a party worthy of its mighty part.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM THE DEPT. OF EDUCATION

The Tuscallosa County grand jury, recently in session, made its usual report and the following statement with reference to the school facilities of the county was embodied.

"Tuscaloosa County is fortunate in that it possesses one of the best school systems in the state. However, we feel that the school term of five months in the rural districts should be improved. Compulsory education will become effective in October, 1917. This will greatly increase the number of children in school, and the needs will be correspondingly great.

There will be submitted to the qualified voters of the state at the general election in November an amendment to the Constitution of the state for the purpose of authorizing the several counties of the state to levy and collect a special tax for school purposes.

Our body was unanimously endorsed this proposition and we ask the electors of the county to vote for its passage."

Counsel from a Church Paper

The church that through its ministry, especially in the country, which is always the hope of the nation, lays the hand of encouragement and benediction on the public schools, sees that they are improved where they already exist, sees that they are established where they are not, and teaches the people that they can make no richer investment than in the education of their youth, that no taxes should be more cheerfully paid than those which go to the education of the children, and that no sacrifices are too great that this end be reached, namely, a thorough education for every child in this broad land—that is the church of the years to come.

Illiteracy Movement in Mobile Co.

During the school term at Downs the teacher conducted an adult school. There were 27 enrolled at ages varying from 17 to 73.

At first the idea of attending school was not taken kindly by a majority of the patrons, as they seemed to fear that other people would make fun of their efforts. The trustees became interested in the movement and aided in the enrollment of the pupils.

The oldest pupil was 73 years of age, a woman who had little chance when young but she can now read newspapers, write letters and work problems in addition and subtraction. Some of the pupils went as high as the fifth grade during the term. The school lasted for several months and was conducted three nights a week from 6:00 to 10:30 P. M.

As a result of this work, the teacher in charge states that even the farming and live stock of the community show improvement.

When Will We Fulfill our Obligation?

The state will do its duty when it makes possible for every child within its limits to attend, free of expense, a common school, and a high school, taught by capable teachers, administered by competent officials, and fostered and sustained by the dignity and influence of the Commonwealth.

ACTIVITIES IN CLANTON IMPEDED BY RAINSTORM

Good Roads Meeting and Methodist Conference Short in attendance.

ALL ROADS ARE FLOODED

The greatest rain storm that ever visited this section of Alabama commenced with great severity at 9:00 o'clock on Wednesday night and continued until 3:00 P. M. Thursday.

Roads were made impassible, the streets of Clanton were flooded and small streams all over Chilton county were filled to such an extent that rural carriers served their routes with much difficulty.

Two meetings had been, for weeks scheduled to ccur in this city.

Owing to the storm no delegates south of Montgomery could reach Clanton over the railroads, and those who tried to make the run in autos were tied up and failed to reach here.

The Methodist Conference to be held in the Methodist church was, to some extent, short in attendance, owing to condition of the road and the storm, but, the number who did reach the city were met by Rev. I. F. Bilbro and a committee and escorted to private homes for entertainment during the three days that the conference will be in session.

But little regular business was attended to on the first day. There were 14 ministers, or delegates, present at the first meeting. Was adjourned until Friday morning when the real work of the conference will be commenced.

The Good Road meeting was thinly attended, this non-attendance like that of the conference referred to was owing to the severity of the storm.

Mayor E. M. Pinckard, Hon. F. A. Gulledge and other Clanton and Chilton county citizens met the few delegates who succeeded in reaching Clanton and welcomed them.

A large party of gentlemen from the south were "hung up" near Evergreen and failed to reach Clanton as were another large party who attempted to come from Birmingham and northern Alabama water-bound south of Calera.

Streets are Flooded

Several places in the streets of Clanton were so flooded Thursday that they were impassable. One or two stores, a black smith shop and a livery stable on seventh street were flooded.

Mail Routes Cut Off

None of the mail carriers out of Clanton were able to complete their rounds on Thursday. Some of them started and only got a few miles out when they had to turn back on account of flooded streams or washouts. Some carriers after turning back, found that washouts had happened after them and they were unable to return to town.

Train Delayed Here

Fast north bound train No. 2 was delayed for hours just above town Thursday on account of high water at the trestle over the creek.

Great Damage to Roads

The roads over the county have suffered much from washouts. The big fill on the Kincheon road a mile west of Clanton is reported to be washed away. It is probable that it will be several days before traffic can be fully restored over the country districts.

Paper May be Late

The Union-Banner is being printed on its usual time Thursday, but it is probable that it will be late in reaching portions of the county owing to the delay caused in the mail service.

Only One Road

Thursday there was only one road leading out of Clanton over which passage could be made for any distance, that was the road toward Maplesville. All the other roads out, cross creeks about a mile from town, and the streams were up so that they were impassable.

Steel Bridge Washed Out

Thursday afternoon the waters of the creek just east of Clanton became so high that the steel bridge on the Lock 12 road at the corporation limits of Clanton was carried away. Other bridges over the county have been torn out by the great amount of water, and the damage that will be suffered by the roads will be enormous.

GIRLS' CLUB WORK

We wish to call the attention of the girls and housekeepers to the large quantities of beans and other vegetables that are now so plentiful in the county. No doubt a large quantity will go to waste, so why not have a community canning day, in every neighborhood in the county. Let them bring their vegetables to some home that is centrally located and all work together for one day. In this way a large number can be canned with greater ease than just one working alone.

This will bring about community co-operation and create a frindly rivalry as to which one will can the greater quantity or variety.

Now, club girls and housekeepers, lets try this and see if we can make Chilton county furnish her own canned products.

If the communities that desire my help will notify me I will be glad to meet with them and give them all the assistance I can.

The tomato crop is late on account of the dry weather, but do not wait for them, save the surplus of every product on the farm.

MRS. LIDA JONES
County Home Demonstration Agent, Clanton, Ala.

We desire to return our sincere thanks to the citizens of Clanton for their kind hospitality and hearty co-operation in making the Short Course such a grand success.

HUGHES WELCOMES SUPPORT OF PROGRESSIVES

Expresses Appreciation of Aid Volunteered. Thanks Roosevelt for his attitude Toward his candidacy.

New York, June 26.—Charles E. Hughes, Republican nominee for President, sent a telegram to O. K. Davis, secretary of the Progressive national committee, tonight, welcoming the support of the Progressive party and arrainging the present administration for its "weakness and incertitude."

In making public the contents of the telegram Mr. Hughes also gave out a letter he had written to Col. Roosevelt in which he declared that the nation was indebted to the colonel "for the quickening of the national spirit and for the demand for an ont-and-out 100 per cent Americanism."

The candidate told Col. Roosevelt that he had "sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat, and I want you to feel that I wish to have all the aid you are able and willing to give." The letter closed with an expression of a wish by Mr. Hughes to see the colonel soon.

Responds to Message

The telegram to secretary Davis was in response to a telegram from the secretary notifying Mr. Hughes that the Progressives had indorsed him.

"I welcome the support of the Progressives," Mr. Hughes' message read. We make common cause in the interest of national honor, of national security, of national efficiency. We unite in the demand for an undivided and unwavering loyalty to our country; for a whole-hearted patriotic devotion over-riding all social differences. We want a revival of the American spirit—a nation restored We insist upon prompt and adequate provision for the common defense; upon the steadfast maintenance of all the rights of our citizens and upon the integrity of international law.

"The most serious difficulties the present administration has encountered have been due to its own weakness and incertitude. I am profoundly convinced that by prompt and decisive action, when existing conditions manifestly called for, the Lusitania tradegy would have been prevented. We strongly denounce the use of our soil as a base for alien intrigues, for conspiracies and the fomenting of disorders in the interest of any foreign nation, but the responsibility lies at the door of the administration. The moment notice is admitted responsibility is affixed.

Can Not Evade Responsibility.

"For that sort of thing could not continue if the administration took proper measures to stop it. That responsibility the administration can not evade by condemning others. It was officially stated by the secretary of state in the Mexican not e of June 20, 1916, that "for three years the Mexican republic has been torn with civil strife; the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered non productive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through territory contiguous to the United States, and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempt at punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice.' What an indictment by the administration of its Mexican policy! And still we are unprepared in the midst of perils, and after the experience of three years, is a demonstration of an administration is responsible.

"The government now has, and must have most emphatically the unstinted and patriotic support of every citizen in the existing exigency. But unquestioning loyal and patriotic support of the government is one thing; approval of the fatuous course which the administration has followed is quite another. I can not in this message adequately review that course; that I shall do later.

No Man Is Deceived.

"No intelligent man is deceived by the temporary prosperity due to abnormal conditions and no one can fail to appreciate the gravity of the problems with which we shall be faced when the war ends. We are alive to the imperative necessity of assuring the basis of honest business. I am in deep sympathy with the effort to improve the conditions of labor, to prevent exploitation, to safeguard the future of the nation by protecting our women and children. I believe in workman's compensation laws, in the wise conservation of our natioinal resources so that they may be protected, developed and used to the utmost public advantage. But underlying every endeavor to promote to promote social justice is the indispensisable condition that there shall a stable foundation for honorable nterprise. American industry must have proper protection if labor is to be safeguarded. We must rescue our instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce, our transportation facilities from uncertainty and confusion. We must show that we know how to protect the public without destroying or crippling our productive energies.

Democrats offer no Hope.

"To what energy shall we look for the essential constructive program on which our security and prosperity must depend? It is vain to expect it from the Democratic party. That party has not the national outlook. Both its traditional and dominating influences are fatal handicaps. I ave no sectional word to utter. We are to elect a president of the whole country, not a part. The South as well as the North, East and West, will be the gainers from our endeavors. But it is sober truth, as I see it, that as we go forward we must make the Republican party the instrument of our advance. We want deeds, not words; far-reaching national policies. The Progressives have insisted on responsible not invissible government; on efficient administration. I yield to no one in that demand. I am eager to call the best ability of the country to our aid. For the conduct of the great departments the executive is directly responsible and there is no excuse whatever for the toleration of incompetence in order to satisfy partisan obligations.

I am deeply appreciative of your indorsement. I find no difference in platform or in aim which precludes the most hearty cooperation and the most unity. It is within the party that the liberalizing spirit you invoke can have the widest and most effective influence. I solicit your earnest effort for the common cause."

Thanks Col. Roosevelt.

The letter to Col. Roosevelt was as follows:

"I warmly appreciate the cordial letter of indorsement which you have sent to the Progressive committee. No one is more sensible than I of the lasting indebtedness of the nation to you for the quickening of the national spirit, for the demand for an out and out 100 per cent. Americanism and for the insistence upon an immediate necessity of a thorough going preparedness, spiritual military and economic.

"I am in this campaign because of my conviction that we must not only frame, but execute a broad, effective program, and for that purpose we must have a united party, a party inspired by its great traditions and reconsecrated to its loftiest ideals. I know that you have been guided in this emergency by the sole desire to be of the largest service to the United States. You have sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat. And I want you to feel that I wish to have all the aid that you are able and willing to give. I want the most effective cooperation with all those who have been fighting by your side. Let us work together for our national security and for the peace of righteousness and justice.

"I indorse a copy of my telegram to the committee on which I have set forth my attitude. I shall later undertake a full discussion of the issues of the campaign.

"Hoping that I may have the pleasure of seeing you at an early day, I am, my dear Col. Roosevelt, with cordial regards, faithfully yours,

"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

A Great Day Coming

Saturday, July 15th, is to be a great day in Clanton. It is to be a mighty rehersal of erstwhile political figures who have lost their color and recently faded away.

On that day the Democrats will sift out the chaff of their dusty and decayed remains, in search of a candidate for Probate Judge. They have so far failed to find a man who has brass enough in the countenance to face our people on the record of the last administration.

And on that same day there is to be another mass meeting composed of the here and yonder sort of fellows who would be dissatisfied with heaven (if they should ever get there) who intend to nominate a county ticket to be voted on in November. For this last mentioned assembly, it is sufficient to say that it is engineered by that conspicuous character Hon. L. B. Pounds.

What kind of a combination do you reckon they will try to work here on that day? The Democrats on one hand rapidly sinkink into oblivion, with the weight of their past administration record, like unto millstone swung around their neck. On the other hand Pounds and his little crowd of dissatisfied Socialists proclaiming themselves the truth and the light, and offering a solution for the whole mess.

It is a fact universally known that the Democrats did not keep nor abide by the principles of the Baltimore platform of 1912. Now within 30 after its adoption they have repudiated one of the planks in the St. Louis platform, namely, the one wherein they deplored any action that would mean intervention in Mexico, and promised the American people that such action would come only as the last resort.

DECLARES ALABAMA ROADS ARE BEST IN UNITED STATES

Highway Commission Makes 3,500-Mile trip In Auto

After a thirty-five hundred mile automobile trip through Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana, J. B. Rylance of Dadeville, state highway commissioner, has reached the conclusion that the best strip of road along his route is that between Calera and Clanton in Alabama. Mr. Rylance was in Montgomery yesterday on his return from the trip and stated that he was firmly convinced that Alabama's roads as a whole are second only to those of Indiana and that nothing in Indiana can be compared with the Calera-Clanton strip.

Mr. Rylance went north by the route of the Dixie highway and returned south by the Jackson highway. He made the trip in order that he might know what other states are doing for their roads and to convince himselfe as to the relative value of Alabama's work when compared with other states.

"Our roads are far superior to those of Tennessee and Kentucky," said Mr. Rylance. "Of course, I found some good roads but they do not seem to be keeping them in good condition. They are not maintaining the roads as they should be maintained. In many sections I found toll gates in heavy number. Ohio has a system of macadam roads, but they too are umpy. I am told the cost of maintaining these roads as they should be maintained is heavy."

IN MEMORY

On the evening of June 29th the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Duke and wafted to the sweet beyond the most precious and only jewel of the home. She was fifteen months old and was ill almost two weeks when God in his great wisdom saw fit to call her from this sinful world to the beautiful mansion not made with hands.

Weep not dear mother and father for we know that little Mary is peacefully resting in the arms of the one who gave her, and where there is no more pain nor sorrow to bear.

We feel that she was nursed with the tenderest hands on earth, and it's hard for us to picture why we had to give her up.

Little Mary was loved and admired by everyone who saw her. She was numbered among the most precious jewels on earth, still we have one consolation for we know if we live and obey God's word we shall meet her some day where no parting will ever come. We know we can go to little Mary, but she canot come back to us.

Her remains were laid to rest in Walnut Creek cemetery. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Messer.

The lonely voice of evening
In silence still rings on,
The darling child we shall remember
Is gone forever gone.
The one we once loved dearly
Has left the old homestead,
She's gone to dwell in safety
With loved ones on ahead.

Life's evening time is blending
The shadows come and go
And restless thus life floweth
We wonder to and fro.
When the weary days are over
And the sun sinks in the west
Do not worry mother or father
For we know little Mary's at rest.

Then again at sunny noon time
Comes a word of pure delight
From across the Jordan River
And it seems she's most in sight.
Pray tell me why this life is lonely
Why do friends once more forsake,
Why do shadows fill our pathway
That golden sunlight ought to break?

Her counsin,
ELLEN MIMS.

THE FOURTH CELEBRATED

There was a settlement picnic at Mr. W. H. Jones three miles southwest of Clanton. There were eleven families represented and about fifty persons present to hallow, sing and talk, and same amount of mouths to fill with something to eat and drink, but we had plenty to eat and plenty to drink, and everybody seemed to be merry. Everything went off nice and everyone enjoyed themselves splendid, especially Mr. Walt Jones. I don't think I ever saw anyone that seemed to enjoy anything so well.

I want to say for the settlement that we thank Mr. Jones for giving us the invitation to have the picnic at his place, and for making all conveniences for the day and we hope to celebrate the Fouth again. I think some of the boys would like for it to come again next week.

the national joy smoke

YOU'LL find a cheery howdy-do on tap no matter how much of a stranger you are in the neck of the woods you drop into. For, Prince Albert is right there—at the first place you pass that sells tobacco! The toppy red bag sells for a nickel and the tidy red tin for a dime; then there's the handsome pound and half-pound tin humidors and the pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such bang-up trim all-the-time!

in goodness and in pipe satisfaction
is all we or its enthusiastic friends ever claimed for it!

It answers every smoke desire you or any other man ever had! It is so cool and fragrant and appealing to your smokeappetite that you will get chummy with it in a mighty short time!

Will you invest 5c or 10c to prove out our say-so on the national joy smoke?

Perhaps the Navy league seeks to humiliate Henry Ford by suing for a trifling $1000.00.

During the last census year the American hens produced about twenty billion eggs. And so far as we can learn not a single one of them crowed about it.

As a feature of naval equipment the "dreadnought" is no longer accorded the deference that its impressive title suggests.

HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE UNCLE SAM TO LICK MEXICO?

It Took Him Two Years, Two Months and Ten Days, In the Forties, To Accomplish It. Can He Do It In Less Time Now?

No matter how long it takes the United States to master Carranza and his men, every man, woman and child in Alabama is going to want to know every detail leading up to that result. The very best way to keep in touch with every phase of the situation, to know everything this Government is doing to meet the emergency, to know just how our Alabama boys are faring is to read The Birmingham News, "The South's Greatest Newspaper," every day for the next few months.

The News will print more real, vital, accurate information about the fighting in Mexico than any other newspaper in Alabama. It is equipped to give its readers the very best that money can buy. Its columns every day will contain the full report of the Associated Press, by far the greatest news-gathering agency the world has ever seen. On Sunday it will have the full report of the United Press, another great news service, and to supplement that will have the International News Service, with all of its extended corps of special correspondents on the border and in Mexico.

In addition The News will print from time to time special articles by the most brilliant writers that visit the blood-ridden Republic to the south. Its own staff correspondent, LeRoy R. Jacobs, is now with the Alabama boys and will stay with them, to report for News readers everything that happens to them, grave and gay, every day.

The News pledges to its readers the fullest, most accurate, most interesting accounts of the Mexican situation to be found anywhere in the South.

But the Mexican situation is not going to be the only thing The News will offer its readers during the next few months. Its columns every day will be crammed full of entertainment and instruction. The News tries to see that there is something in it every day to interest every possible reader of a newspaper.

The Market Page every day is a necessity to the farmer and the business man. Full wire market reports are carried from every important market center in the world; accurate local market news is given; the best authorities in the country write for The News reviews and forecasts on cotton, grain, stocks and money. Every effort is made to make this page of real service to every man, and especial attention is paid to accuracy.

Its society and woman's pages every day appeal particularly to the women in the home. Social news of all Alabama is printed there, the best household helps—the kind that teach women how to make one dollar buy what two bought before—beauty hints, advice to girls, stories for the tiny tots in the home, and a daily serial story of married life that now has thousands of women in Alabama reading it every day. Mary Pickford, the highest paid woman in the world, writes for the woman's page every day, and Anne Rittenhouse, the leading authority on woman's clothes and fashions in the country, has an illustrated column every day, with a full page on Sunday.

It has the two best newspaper comics in America, Goldberg and Polly, in the paper every day and on Sunday four full funny pages in colors for children and grown-ups alike.

On its editorial page, besides the regular editorial columns, which are filled with ably written, carefully prepared matter, there is Dr. Hirshberg, one of the leading physicians in America, with a daily health talk and answers to questions on health asked by News readers; Dr. Crane with a little daily sermon on right living and right thinking; George Miner, who has has interviewed more distinguished people than any living man; Savoyard, who knows more of American political history than any other person; a daily poem by John Kendrick Bangs.

Its sporting pages are well conducted, and on them are printed contributions from the best sporting writers in America, including Grantland Rice and Henry C. Vance. Amateur baseball games are the specialty of this department, full reports being printed from all over Alabama.

The Magazine Section of The News on Sunday is just simply filled with information written in entertaining style. Some of the greatest writers in America contribute to this every Sunday; fresh, new stories from men like Montague Glass, the creator of the famous Potash and Perlmutter stories in the Saturday Evening Post, who get as much as $2,000 apiece for the stories they write for the magazines. Two full pages are devoted every week to schools and the school children of Alabama.

Pictures are among the big features of The News. The News has its own staff photographers, its own artists, its own engraving plant, and besides this buys thousands of pictures of big events and prominent people in America and abroad every year. Hundreds of dollars are represented in pictures alone in the Sunday paper every week. Watch for the pictures of Alabama boys at the front in Mexico!

You owe it to yourself to read this great newspaper every day. It doesn't cost much, though it would be a bargain at most any price within reach of the average man. Perhaps the Navy league seeks to humiliate Henry Ford by suing for a trifling $1000.00.

During the last census year the American hens produced about twenty billion eggs. And so far as we can learn not a single one of them crowed about it.

As a feature of naval equipment the "dreadnought" is no longer accorded the deference that its impressive title suggests.

The News will print more real, vital, accurate information about the fighting in Mexico than any other newspaper in Alabama. It is equipped to give its readers the very best that money can buy. Its columns every day will contain the full report of the Associated Press, by far the greatest news-gathering agency the world has ever seen. On Sunday it will have the full report of the United Press, another great news service, and to supplement that will have the International News Service, with all of its extended corps of special correspondents on the border and in Mexico.

In addition The News will print from time to time special articles by the most brilliant writers that visit the blood-ridden Republic to the south. Its own staff correspondent, LeRoy R. Jacobs, is now with the Alabama boys and will stay with them, to report for News readers everything that happens to them, grave and gay, every day.

The News pledges to its readers the fullest, most accurate, most interesting accounts of the Mexican situation to be found anywhere in the South.

But the Mexican situation is not going to be the only thing The News will offer its readers during the next few months. Its columns every day will be crammed full of entertainment and instruction. The News tries to see that there is something in it every day to interest every possible reader of a newspaper.

The Market Page every day is a necessity to the farmer and the business man. Full wire market reports are carried from every important market center in the world; accurate local market news is given; the best authorities in the country write for The News reviews and forecasts on cotton, grain, stocks and money. Every effort is made to make this page of real service to every man, and especial attention is paid to accuracy.

Its society and woman's pages every day appeal particularly to the women in the home. Social news of all Alabama is printed there, the best household helps—the kind that teach women how to make one dollar buy what two bought before—beauty hints, advice to girls, stories for the tiny tots in the home, and a daily serial story of married life that now has thousands of women in Alabama reading it every day. Mary Pickford, the highest paid woman in the world, writes for the woman's page every day, and Anne Rittenhouse, the leading authority on woman's clothes and fashions in the country, has an illustrated column every day, with a full page on Sunday.

It has the two best newspaper comics in America, Goldberg and Polly, in the paper every day and on Sunday four full funny pages in colors for children and grown-ups alike.

On its editorial page, besides the regular editorial columns, which are filled with ably written, carefully prepared matter, there is Dr. Hirshberg, one of the leading physicians in America, with a daily health talk and answers to questions on health asked by News readers; Dr. Crane with a little daily sermon on right living and right thinking; George Miner, who has has interviewed more distinguished people than any living man; Savoyard, who knows more of American political history than any other person; a daily poem by John Kendrick Bangs.

Its sporting pages are well conducted, and on them are printed contributions from the best sporting writers in America, including Grantland Rice and Henry C. Vance. Amateur baseball games are the specialty of this department, full reports being printed from all over Alabama.

The Magazine Section of The News on Sunday is just simply filled with information written in entertaining style. Some of the greatest writers in America contribute to this every Sunday; fresh, new stories from men like Montague Glass, the creator of the famous Potash and Perlmutter stories in the Saturday Evening Post, who get as much as $2,000 apiece for the stories they write for the magazines. Two full pages are devoted every week to schools and the school children of Alabama.

Pictures are among the big features of The News. The News has its own staff photographers, its own artists, its own engraving plant, and besides this buys thousands of pictures of big events and prominent people in America and abroad every year. Hundreds of dollars are represented in pictures alone in the Sunday paper every week. Watch for the pictures of Alabama boys at the front in Mexico!

You owe it to yourself to read this great newspaper every day. It doesn't cost much, though it would be a bargain at most any price within reach of the average man. The day was spent in making cream and singing, and the day was enjoyed by all, good cream and good singing are sure fine.

We are sure having the work done by the boll weevils, they cut off the squares and we come right in behind them and clean up for them.

We have had some nice rains for the last few days.

School meeting was called together this afternoon.

Arthur Beaird leaves next Saturday for Autauga county where he will take up his singing school.

J. M. Williams and Arthur Beaird went to Wadsworth to sing this afternoon.

To Prepare We Must Feed Ourselves

Can't Maintain An Army On Hungry Stomachs—Some Disagreeable Truths We Must Learn and Overcome

BY W. A. McRAE.
Commissioner of Agriculture of Florida

We are told that to maintain our exalted place at the front of the nations we must have a large army and navy, more and better guns and munitions, bigger and better battleships, ships to fly in the air and dive under water, a large reserve of trained men military schools for boys and a militia system enforced for all classes. Unless we do this on a large scale, as is argued, some other nation is going to come here and loot us and attach our country as a knot in the tail of its kite.

Without equal preparedness in all of our domestic occupations how can we hope to properly support a vast additional non-productive class Powerful military and naval forces cannot be maintained on hungry stomachs and poorly clad and badly sheltered bodies.

In the discussion of preparedness within we are brought face to face with some disagreeable facts.

An Unpleasant Truth.

The South, a natural agricultural region, is not producing enough food to feed her people It costs approximately $84 per capita to annually feed the people of the South Atlantic and Gulf States, the smallest proportion in any of the territorial divisions. Investigation also showed that only one of the fourteen Southern States—Oklahoma—is doing this. Florida stood eighth in this particular, producing $45 worth of this $84 worth consumed, making a total yearly shortage of some $30,000,000. This is a vast sum of money to send away every year to buy supplies for a State, one with twelve months of growing weather, and possessing as many or more kinds of products of use to man, than in any other part of our Republic. The total outgo of the South is placed at a billion dollars. This is a humiliating fact, but when we know the truth it will help to set us free—that is, if we prepare and act.

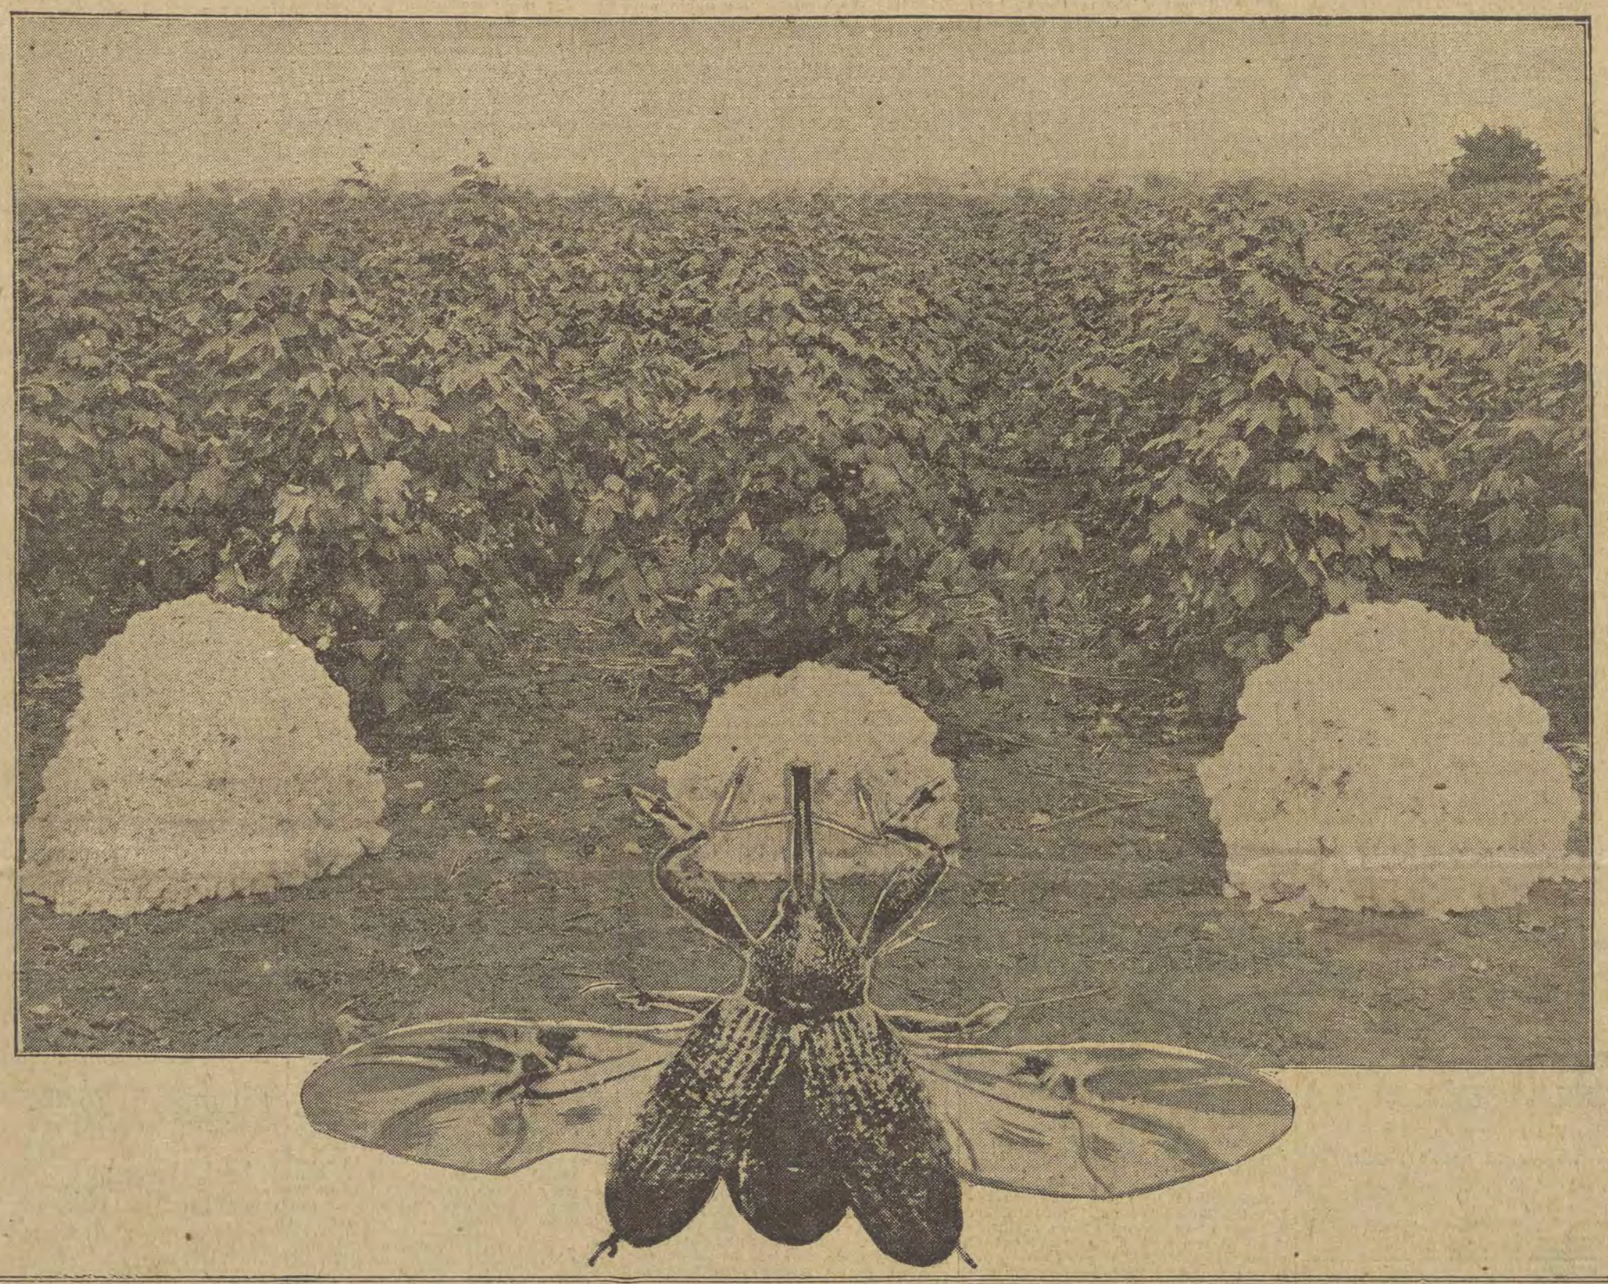
What I Found.

In support of this surrising condition let me give the result of what I found by a visit to a grocery store in Tallahassee, and the same truth applie to stores in every city, town and hamlet of the South. I found canned fish from the Pacific Coast; canned fish roe, tobacco and peanuts from Virginia; corn meal and grits from Indiana; rolled oats from Iowa; lemons from Italy; oranges and canned and dried peaches from California; canned pineapples from Hawaii; canned sweet potatoes from New Jersey; Irish potatoes and canned corn and beans from Maine; canned pumpkin and squash from Iowa; onions from Texas rice from Louisiana; canned meats, pork and beans, and bacon, ham, sausage and lard from Chicago, Omaha and Kansas City; butter from Minnesota; toasted corn flakes and navy beans from Michigan; canned milk and cream from Wisconsin; corn syrup—stuff labeled "Karo" from Ohio; canned okra from Maryland; canned strawberries and blackberries from Delaware; canned sauer kraut from New Jersey—at ten cents a can, and I have seen Florida heads of cabbage anyone big enough to fill a dozen cans—canned figs—sent in bulk from the South to be preserved, as they do not grow in the North—and jams and jellies and fruit juices, and the "57 varieties" from New York; saratoga chips from Philadelphia—and Hastings sends north train loads of Irish potatoes every spring, and maybe these self-same chips were made from our raw material and returned to us and sold at profits multiplied over and over again.

Real Preparedness.

Preparedness is a matter of individual effort no less than that of the State and nation when the people get together in active and harmonious cooperation for a common purpose.

The average yield of crops per acre on the American farm is much less than that on European farms. This plainly indicates that there is need of preparedness and action on the part of the American farmer for better plowing, seed selection, planting, cultivating and harvesting. There are thousands of underfed children in the large cities of the country. This means there is something wrong in our marketing system, or lack of system. Our natural resources are being scattered or wasted with such a prodigal hand that warnings of scarcity are already posted in many fields of endeavor. This means the need of preparedness for conserving and practically utilizing what is left of treasures of land and water so bountifully given by the Creator to our continent.



WHEAT

This past season's crop of wheat in the Central South territory was pretty good.

In sections where wheat is somewhat of a new crop the results were satisfactory. The heads were a little short, owing to dry weather, but the yields measured up well—in fact better than oats in most places. Wheat, you know, can stand more dry weather than oats.

Wheat furnishes winter pasture and is on the land only half a year, leaving the land for a soy bean or other legume planting in spring. Profits on wheat should always be calculated on the half-year basis

Boll Weevil Fight on to the Finish

Weevil Brings Diversification Wherever He Strikes

The next couple of weeks, at most, will tell the story of the fight on the boll weevil in the new boll weevil territory.

Whether the people have won or whether the boll weevil has won will be known before the first of August.

As you may remember, a violent storm from the Gulf of Mexico last year during the weevil migrating season scattered boll weevils to the four winds, carrying them to the Tennessee line on the north and far over into Georgia on the east. Today the boll weevil line pushes into Alabama from Mississippi through Lauderdale county and runs southeast into Georgia through Harlesgn and Polk counties, Ga., and then extends south through Georgia from fifty to a hundred miles east of the Alabama boundary line.

Late this summer, during the migrating season, the boll weevils will probably move their accustomed fifty miles, covering Alabama entirely and about one-third of Georgia. It will not be so very long until they will have covered all of Georgia and pushed over South Carolina and North Carolina. By that time they will have completely covered the Cotton Belt of America.

The spread of the boll weevil over nearly all of Alabama has meant fight. Nowhere have the people put up such a determined fight against the cotton destroyer. The Montgomery, Alabama, Chamber of Commerce set an example to other commercial bodies in Alabama and Georgia by employing two experienced Louisiana farmers to come into Alabama and help the people fight the weevil by methods that were successful in Louisiana. The Montgomery Chamber of Commerce employed "Boll Weevil" Burley and L. M. Calhoun, two practical Louisiana farmers to do this work, and the United States Department of Agriculture paid the traveling expenses of these men through J. T. Watt, U. S. Demonstration Agent for Alabama.

These two men have worked hard and we believe that wherever they have been and where the people have followed their down-to-hard-pan advice the weevil will be licked and a good crop will be made despite the destroyer.

The methods they have advocated have been constant cultivation, picking off the over-wintered weevils and later gathering and destroying all infested squares—and raising something to eat meanwhile. For this fall they have advocated picking the crop as soon as possible, plowing under the stalks, cleaning up the field around the fences and in ditches and putting a winter cover crop on the land to build up the soil—our greatest need

These methods, briefly stated, are the only ones that have ever succeeded in boll weevil territory and the only methods that will ever succeed under weevil infestation.

Some people have thought of "discovering" a "cure-all" for the weevil. If such a "discovery" were possible it would be most unfortunate. If there were some kind of cheap magic powder that would scare off all weevils from a field, such a powder would do more harm than it could possibly do good. It would mean careless cultivation, lack of proper preparation of the land, indifference to cover crops, diversification and soil building.

+ +

The spread of the boll weevil and its destructive powers means deeper plowing in the fall, the use of winter legumes to keep the land clean of weevils and to restore lost nitrogen and vegetable matter to the soil; the better selection of seed, more intense cultivation; and best of all, the raising of more foods and feedstuffs and getting more livestock on the land. The boll weevil brings more or less diversification whether we want it or not, and diversification is soil building.

The boll weevil breaks the shiftless or indifferent planter. But to the man who follows Nature's plan and begins to put fertility back into the soil and to work harder than ever on his crop, the boll weevil brings a better farm and better farming methods. This is a fact whether it sounds good to you or not.

The boll weevil makes people work harder and think more than anything that has ever visited the Central South. And we as a people have got to work harder and do more thinking and quit bothering so much about politics and the fortunes of various politicians if we are to progress very far.

The good Lord knows that Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi have had enough politics. While counties and communities have been torn up about whether Tom or Dick was to have this office or that, the boll weevil has spread his wings over the constituents of both Tom and Dick. People have put thought, energy and time on these political issues while they could have been preparing in advance against the cotton destroyer.

Now they are face to face with the weevil and it is all a matter of individual effort. No office holder or no law can help—it is what the man himself does that counts.

If he keeps on trying to make cotton without the use of winter cover crops; if he keeps on "hoping" that the boll weevil will not hit him too hard; if he does not turn to the raising of foodstuffs and canning the surplus; and providing more pasture land, the weevil will beat him.

The people as a whole will go on making a cotton crop despite the weevil. Those who lose out will drop out and their land will be taken over by others who have a will to work and who will be successful under weevil conditions. Plantation by plantation absentee landlordism will fall and owners of big farms will be found out on their farms directing their employes and their tenants and establishing some permanent pasture and raising more hogs, more cattle, more chickens, more sheep, building more fences, and building up the soil from season to season.

It took the Hessian fly and the chinch bug in wheat to drive a lot of people of the Northwest away from the one-crop system, and it is taking the boll weevil to drive us away from the same system with cotton.

Grown as the surplus money crop, cotton is the best paying staple crop known to man. There is not one that equals it—neither corn nor wheat nor coffee nor tobacco. But grown to the exclusion of other crops and the raising of livestock it is a dangerous crop and a poor payer. In 1914 cotton was the exclusive crop in many sections of the Belt, and, as you well know, the people in these sections found themselves without any money from their cotton and without very much to eat at the same time.

Individuals may again be caught in the same way, but we don't believe a large part of the Belt ever will. But as our wise forefathers said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." And that is true of economic liberty as well as political liberty. "Eternal vigilance" for economic liberty means a constant increase in pastures; a gradual and constant increase in the livestock business; the planting of legumes from summer to summer and from winter to winter; the building up of more dairy herds to supply our own selves with milk, cream and butter, and the building of more silos to make the dairy herds more profitable; more people having gardens in country and town; more people canning the surplus; and the realization that, as an agricultural people, we must put agriculture at the front rank of all professions and educate for farming just as we educate for the law or the ministry.

And so the boll weevil, which we must fight and keep on fighting, is a blessing and not one "in disguise" either.

TRUTHS

Remember, the fly carries typhoid.

Is your drinking water pure?

Some folks haven't found it out yet, but the greatest thing in this world is making an honest living.

Rural credits bill is coming.

There is a world of difference between taking out a mortgage to pay debts and giving one to make permanent improvements.

The best thing any man can own—next to a good wife——is a piece of good land.

About the most healthful thing to take in large quantities is work.

A farm is one thing that will never wear out if you treat it right

Brains and energy are the best fertilizers known.

Don't give the stock any kind of water but pure water.

Diversification is the only way.

CAN THEM

The canning season is on full blast, giving an opportunity for real "preparedness" for winter.

And then there are the preserves—figs, watermelon rinds, peaches, etc—things that make delicious preserves for home use and for sale as well. Sugar is high this season, and there is not much prospect of its being much lower for a couple of years to come. But sugar, even at its present price, is not too high to prevent more preserving this year than has ever been done before. In preserved figs we can have an asset whose value is not yet fully appreciated. Don't let this season go by without canning all the vegetables and preserving all the fruits you can. "Put up" your full share and a little more. Many housewives need no urging in these matters, but others do. Our country women know the value of canning and preserving but many town women do not realize it. Some town women have to buy their fruits and vegetables—even in the small towns—but why keep buying them all winter in somebody else's cans when you can buy them at a reasonable price now and can and preserve them yourself?

An Appeal to Mothers And Others

Stop Deaths from Typhoid by Cleaning Up Your Neighborhood Good and Proper

Is there typhoid fever in your community?

If so, some body is responsible for it. You may be one of those who is responsible. No we don't mean that you are consciously responsible, but we do mean that some of the folks in your community have not done away with the cause of typhoid.

The typhoid germ comes mostly through impure milk, impure water or flies. Is impure milk being sold in your community? Are you drinking or is your family drinking water that possibly is not pure? Are there any bad fly-breeding places in your neighborhood?

Any one of these three things may bring death into your home--death that could have been prevented by seeing that the milk and water were pure destroying the breeding places of flies and keeping flies out of your house.

The day is coming when somebody will be held responsible for deaths from typhoid. Right now in many communities the lack of public consciousness of the public duty is responsible. But one of these days when people are rightly aroused, and the public conscience is awake, somebody in each community will be made responsible for impure water, impure milk and fly breeding places. Of course, milk can become impure after you get it into your own home. But if you get it pure and you yourself allow impurities to get into it the fault can be nobody's but your own.

+ +

In this country we go to a heap of trouble to elect public officers and we squabble and quarrel and write letters to the papers and otherwise get unnecessarily worked up over whether Mr. Brown or Mr. Jones is going to be mayor or judge or whatnot. But how much thought do we give to the question of whether the water we drink has typhoid germs in it or not? How much thought and discusion do we give to the question of impure milk or typhoid laden flies? The electing of a judge or a mayor is purely political at best. It doesn't effect anybody's health or happiness. But the other question is vital--very often one of life and death.

Every death from typhoid fever that has taken place in your community could have been prevented. Every person who has died of typhoid bears mute testimony to the lack of public conscience and public consciousness of duty.

Typhoid fever is nothing more or less than a community crime against the person who has the disease. And the very person who is down with the disease may be a party to the crime.

But surely we cannot hold little children accountable. Surely after all the pain and fear in bringing a child into the world, and the love poured out after the child comes among us--surely then we are guilty if we permit conditions that lead to the death of that child from typhoid.

+ +

Mothers, I make this appeal to you. We men are sometimes indifferent. With our foolish politics and all our big talk we sometimes do very little for really making our community a safe and healthful place to live in. Mothers, start the clean up and inspection work in your neighborhood. Make the men listen to you. They cannot be indifferent to your appeal for the babies and the children belong to them too. Get your preacher behind the movement. Give him something real to talk about from the pulpit--the health of the community in which you live and hope to rear your children.

Get after your public officials and make them do a little more than their duty. If any of them try to make light of your work--and some of them may--keep right at it. Women have cleaned up many communities and made them fairly moral and tolerably healthy.

Mothers--don't let your children or anybody else die of needless typhoid fever. Take the matter into your own hands and stop these useless deaths from typhoid.

Littell McClung.

Ladies--Figs Are Great In Ice-Cream

If you don't believe it, just try it. Talk about banana ice cream or peach ice cream or tutti-frutti ice cream or chocolate ice cream or any of the fifty-seven varieties of ice cream—just try mixing up a little preserved figs in ice cream. Then you will have ice cream that is ice cream.

Now the big point is to go a step further than simply using preserved figs in the ice cream that you have at your own table. If you live anywhere near a town the thing to do is to get the druggist in that town to serving ice cream with some preserved figs in it. It only takes a moment to do it—a dish of plain cream and then a fig or two with some of the syrup poured on top. The customer will do the mixing.

We know of one druggist who is serving fig sundaes and fig frappes and making a big hit with his customers. He uses figs preserved in the regular way and is highly pleased with the results. He is ordering more preserved figs from an Alabama grower so he can keep on serving fig sundaes and fig frappes.

Now if enough druggists and ice cream men get started on this we will have right at home a mighty big market for our preserved figs—just the biggest kind of market.

The preserved fig is the most delicious of all preserves. Nothing equals them and when you mix them with good ice cream, it is a dish for the gods.

Don't delay but try to get the ice cream man in your nearest town to start it. Then you put up the figs sell them to him right along through the fall and winter. You can do it—see if you can't.

Another thing—using preserved figs on ice cream or in ice cream means using something pure. Too many of these prepared syrups and extracts—ade from coal tar—are not above suspicion. But when a man puts nice, home-preserved figs in or on his ice cream he knows he is giving his patrons something that is not only delicious but pure and healthful.

Now, ladies, get busy won't you? Get a jar of figs to a man who sells ice cream and ask him to try it in making fig sundaes and frappes. Five ounces of figs are enough for about four sundaes or frappes. If you have to send the sample jar some distance do it and help make a market right here at home for all the figs that we can preserve.

We have got a great asset in the fig and preserving the fig seems the best way to realize on this asset. So don't delay but let us get druggists and ice cream makers in many towns making fig ice cream and serving fig sundaes and fig frappes.

MOVING TO TOWN

A good many town folks move out into the country, get them a farm and go to work and make a success. As time goes on, as time has a habit of doing, more city people are going to the country and get to growing things out of the ground.

But one of the saddest sights is to see farmers selling out their farms and moving to town. There used to a good deal of this kind of thing and there is still considerable of it. Sometimes the reasons for selling out and moving to town are good. But as a rule, it is a sad mistake.

The country, all things balanced up, is the natural place to live and the best place to live, and country people, on an average, lead more natural and more satisfactory lives than most folks in cities.

Hot Weather Rules For Your Horse

1. Load lightly, and drive slowly.
2. Stop in the shade if possible.
3. Water your horse as often as possible. So long as a horse is working, water in small quantities will not hurt him. But let him drink only a few swallows if he is going to stand still. Do not fail to water him at night after he has eaten his hay.
4. When he comes in after work, sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet but not his legs.
5. If the thermometer is 75 degrees or higher, wipe him all over with a damp sponge. Use vinegar water if possible. Do not turn the hose on him.
6. Saturday night, give a bran mash, lukewarm; and add a tablespoonful of saltpetre.
7. Do not use a horse-hat, unless it is a canopy-top hat. The ordinary bell shaped hat does more harm than good.
8. A sponge on top of the head, or even a cloth, is good if kept wet. If dry it is worse than nothing.
9. If the horse is overcome by heat, get him into the shade, remove harness and bridle, wash out his mouth, sponge him all over, shower his legs, and give him two ounces of aromatic spirits of ammonia, or two ounces of sweet spirits of nitre, in a pint of water; or give him a pint of coffee warm. Cool his head at once, using cold water, or, if necessary, chopped ice, wrapped in a cloth.
10. If the horse is off his feed, try him with two quarts of oats mixed with bran, and a little water; and add a little salt or sugar. Or give him oatmeal gruel or barley water to drink.
11. Watch your horse. If he stops sweating suddenly, or if he breathes short and quick, or if his ears droop, or if he stands with his legs braced sideways, he is in danger of a heat or sun stroke and needs attention at once.
12. If it is so hat that the horse sweats in the stable at night, tie him outside, with bedding under him. Unless he cools off during the night, he cannot well stand the next day's heat.

Tobacco as New Cash Crop In Southeastern Alabama

Scenes in the New Tobacco Sections of the South.

In southeast Alabama there have been some consistent experiments in tobacco culture which may be of interest to a good many folks.

These tests in growing tobacco have been made for the past two years and more by the farmers working under the cultural directions of J. A. Winslow, tobacco culturists of the Central of Georgia railroad.

This work has been handicapped to some extent in that it was started at the beginning of the European war, one of the most unfortunate periods in the history of the tobacco market. Both the 1914 and the 1915 crops had to go on the market at a time when the tobacco market was about in the same condition as the cotton market was in at a corresponding time. And so cotton growers can appreciate what the tobacco growers were up against.

Still, in 1914 eleven farmers between Columbia and Lockhart, Ala., transplanted the crop and despite unfavorable weather conditions and a low price for the leaf, they made about $35 per acre profit. The tobacco was of a satisfactory grade.

In 1915 the weather was again unfavorable, the spring being late and cold, and the crop was late. But the farmers around Gantt, Alabama, were still enthusiastic and there and in the other sections where tobacco raising had been started a total of seventy-three and a half acres was planted. Even with the lack of potash and the prices not favorable some of these planters made from $35 to $40 per acre.

This year the acreage is upwards of 100 acres and success is looked for even if no potash could be secured. This acreage is mostly in the vicinity of Columbia, Samson and Gantt, Alabama, and Fort Gaines, Georgia. While this tobacco suffered some from the dry spell the latter part of May and the first part of June, the outlook now is good owing to the rains that came later on.

The idea of Mr. Winslow in getting tobacco culture started was to provide another satisfactory cash crop to help out in heavily infested boll weevil sections. The land in this territory is "fresh" to tobacco, of course, and with the close of the European war and the importation of potash again from Germany the culture of tobacco is expected to gain stimulus.

Mr. Winslow, convinced that the climate and soil were both satisfactory to tobacco culture, now firmly believes that a considerably larger acreage will be planted next season if a fair price for the leaf is secured this season.

His idea, of course, is not to lessen the acreage in velvet beans, peas or any other legume or in any way offset the movement for a greater diversification of crops. But he does believe that tobacco culture throughout this territory is profitable under normal conditions and can be made to take the place of cotton as a cash crop where boll weevil infestation has done most damage.

His work has been confined to small acreages until tobacco culture is better understood and has been thoroughly tried out. But with conditions in this territory approximately those in the tobacco growing sections of South Carolina, he has good hopes of seeing the new industry increase and prosper.

Fireless Cooker, Iceless Refrigerator And Home Made Shower Bath

It is remarkable how many useful things can be made right in the home by anybody who is handy with a square and a saw. Some country homes have been almost entirely fitted out by somebody in the home handy with tools.

Now up in Virginia some of the women workers have perfected a satisfactory home-made fireless cooker and an ice-less refrigerator. While the summer days are considerably warmer in this territory than in Virginia it is possible that this ice-less refrigerator would do almost as well here as in Virginia. Surely the fireless cooker is as good in one place as another. Fireless cookers save the country, and town woman, too a good deal of time and work and help make things easier in the home.

Homemade Fireless Cooker.

A wooden or tin lard pail, lined with two thicknesses of paper and provided with a close-fitting cover, may be used for the outside container of the cooker. Allow for 3 inches of packing on all sides and at the bottom of the pail. A gallon oyster can will serve very well for the nest, which should be wrapped on the outside next to the packing with asbestos and a piece of asbestos placed under the bottom to prevent the scorching of the packing when hot soapstones are used. Shredded newspaper and excelsior make a good packing. Pack this very tightly around and to the top of the nest the top of which should be about 3 inches below the lid of the outside container. A piece of cardboard cut to fit inside the lard can with a circle cut out of the center around the top of the oyster can or nest will hide the packing and make a neat finish. Place a 3-inch cushion of unbleached muslin, stuffed tightly with excelsior, on top of the lid of the nest. When the top of the outside container is placed on and hooked down, it will be tight enough to cause a pressure. If a tin pail is used for the outside container, it may be enameled white, or a wooden pail stained brown, making a neat looking appliance for any kitchen. Regular aluminum fireless-cooker utensils may be used for cooking the food in the nest, but any kind of a vessel with a close-fitting top and one that fits closely in the nest is suitable.

A fireless cooker similar to this, together with other labor-saving conveniences, were built and successfully demonstrated by the members of a woman's home demonstration club in Covington, Alleghany County, Va. The cost of this fireless cooker was estimated at 25 cents.

The Iceless Refrigerator.

A companion convenience to the fireless cooker for the hot summer days is the iceless refrigerator, or milk cooler. This consits of a wooden frame, covered with canton flannel or some similar material. It is desirable that the frame be screened, although this is not absolutely necessary. Wicks made of the same material as the covering rest in a pan of water on top of the refrigerator, allowing the water to seep down the sides. When evaporation takes place the heat is taken from the inside, with a consequent lowering of the temperature. On dry, hot days a temperature of 50 degrees can be obtained in this refrigerator. The following description will aid in the construction of this device:

Make a screened case 3 1-2 feet high with the other dimensions 12 by 15 inches. If a solid top is used, simply place the water pan on this. Otherwise fit the pan closely into the opening of the top frame and support it by 1-inch cleats fastened to the inside of the frame. Place two movable shelves in the frame, 12 to 15 inches apart. Use a biscuit pan 12 inches square on the top to hold the water, and where the refrigerator is to be used indoors have the whole thing standing in a large pan to catch any drip. The pans and case may be painted white, allowed to dry, and then enameled. A covering of white canton flannel should be made to fit the frame. Have the smooth side out and button the covering on the frame with buggy or automobile curtain hooks and eyes, arranged so that the door may be opened without unfastening these hooks. This can easily be done by putting one row of hooks on the edge of the door near the latch and the other just opposite the opening with the hem on each side extended far enough to cover the crack at the edge of the door, so as to keep out the warm, outside air and retain the cooled air. This dress or covering will have to be hooked around the top edge also. Two double strips one-half the width of each side should be sewed on the top of each side and allowed to extend over about 2 1-2 or 3 inches in the pan of water. The bottom of the covering should extend to the lower edge of the case.

Place the refrigerator in a shady place where air will circulate around it freely. If buttons and buttonholes are used on the canton flannel instead of buggy hooks, the cost should not exceed 85 cents.

Homemade Shower Bath.

A very simple, convenient ,and cheap arrangement for a homemade shower bath has been built by this Virginia club, and is considered especially useful in homes where there are many children. This device was made by using a 2 or 4 gallon tin bucket. A hole was punched in the bottom and a piece of pipe about 1 1-2 to 2 inches long soldered in the opening. A piece of rubber hose 4 to 6 feet long was attached to this and a sprayer from the watering can or a nozzle placed on the end. A rope was tied to the handle of the bucket and run through a staple which was driven in the joist beside the window sash, making a pulley by which the bucket could be raised or lowered to suit the convenience of the person taking the shower. A hook was placed below this staple so that the rope could be fastened to hold the bucket in place, and a clothespin used over the rubber tube to cut off the water. A large tin tub was placed underneath to stand in. Estimated cost of this convenience was as follows:

A 2-gallon tin bucket	$0.15
Medium-sized zinc bucket	.75
12 feet of rope	.07
Nozzle and rubber tubing	.65
Pulley	.10
Piece of piping	.10
Clothespin	.01
White paint	.15
Total	$1.98

The Ideal Southern Farm Home

By Dr. J. W. Beeson

BY DR. J. W. BEESON

An ideal Southern home should haee a beautiful location on a hill or elevated plane. If it overlooks a stream or lake, so much the better. The house should be commodious and comfortable with plenty of porch or veranda. The house should be planned with taste. The aid of an experienced architect is desirable.

A country home should be fitted up with water works and electric lights, toilets, hot and cold baths, with water in each room. A small light plant with storage battery can be installed at moderate cost. They have them now so arranged that when the current gets low the engine starts automatically and runs till the batteries are charged again and then the engine stops automatically. Or the gasoline engine that pumps the water can generate enough electricity by running once or twice a week to keep current for lights for house and barn and to run a motor for sewing machine, washing machine, cream separator, grindstone, churn, etc. The same engine can saw and split wood, grind the feed, run the ensilage cutter and if it is a tractor engine it can do the heavy plowing, hauling, run mowers thresher, pull stumps, etc.

The country home should have every thing conveniently arranged to save labor and unnecessary steps. The wood should be at hand the barn built on a modern plan close by.

The house and barn should be carefully screened and eerything kept clean and sanitary. The manure should be loaded each day into the spreader and put on the farm as it is made and thus prevent odor and breeding of flies and waste of fertilizer.

A piano, phonograph and a good selection of books will add to the attractiveness of a country home. A good orchard, a garden with a large variety of fresh vegetables the year round, with plenty of canned fruits and vegetables put up for winter such as will not grow in cold weather, will be necessary to make the home complete. A beautiful flock of thorough-bred chickens, turkeys and other fowls will be needed. Some pure bred cows, hogs, sheep, goats and other live stock will be found on every ideal farm. The owner will generally raise his own horses and mules, and plenty of food for man nad beast on the farm and will not sell the feed but feed it to live stock and market them, instead of the feed, and thus gain the increase and save the fertility.

The farm will be divided into different fields properly arranged for rotation of crops. Legumes will follow every crop that robs the soil and the vines and stalks plowed under to all nitrogen and humus and thus build up the soil. Water will be piped to every field if no water is furnished naturally. They will be so laid off that all fields will have a corner extending up to the barn if possible. Modern farm machinery such as riding plows and cultivators, disc harrows, grain drills, corn harvesters, reapers, mowers, hay loaders, etc., will make farm work easier and more interesting.

The study of soils of the various fields on the farm, and the needs of these soils, the drainage and terracing problems, improved methods of farming, furnish the ideal farmer with plenty of mental recreation and development.

An automobile will make the ideal country home a neighbor for twenty miles around. Provision will be made for social life for young and old. Parties, games, dinners, or suppers, clubs, societies, etc. will add to the pleasures of the country home.

The ideal farm in the South will raise practically everything on it that is needed and its money crop will be a surplus, It will have practically all its land green in winter with some cover crop for pasture, soil building, or to prevent the land from washing leaching out its fertility. The hills and fields will be dotted with blooded live stock of various kinds grazing in green pastures winter and summer. A good silo or more will furnish succulent feed at times when pasturage is low. On an ideal farm the live stock will be made to do half the farming and thus save half the labor and add greatly to the profit and pleasure of farming.

To make the ideal farm home complete it must have a good school and a good church sufficiently near and a good road to town and to the neighbors homes. One cannot be happy and live unto himself. He must have social and religious life. The monotony of the daily routine must be broken.

While this country home is an ideal one, it is not out of the reach of many people. It is something all may work to obtain, with reasonable hope of possession. Many already exist, and when he have more of them country life will be more attractive. Our country boys and girls will not be flocking to the town, but our town people will be longing for country life.

Club Boys Use Forage Crops to Cheapen Pork

Not only the cheapest hog but the best hog for pig club boys, and farmers, is the one produced on home grown feeds. This is the opinion of P. H. Sanders, Assistant Boy's Pig Club agent in Mississippi who has just issued a series of suggestions on forage crops to the pig club members.

Among the forage crops which reduce the cost of pork, Mr. Sanders recommends soy beans, sorghum, Spanish peanuts, corn and velvet beans and crimson clover. These crops are to be grown in rotation in small plots divided by hog proof fence, in order that the pigs can be pastured continuously on the succession of ripening crops. The beets and sorghum are soiled, that is, harvested and fed to the pigs.

To balance the ration it is best to feet a little corn and shorts mixed in equal parts when the beets and sorghum are fed and corn alone when beans and peanuts are being pastured. "Finish" the hogs by allowing them to "hog down" the corn and velvet beans.

Mr. Sanders suggests that some of the club members will find it profitable to buy one or two more pigs to grow and finish, as, if crops are good, the acre planted to the forage crops will support these extra pigs without additional cost.

WHITE FARMERS ON SMALL FARMS

Have Made Covington County the Most Progressive In Alabama

The farmers in Covington County have gotten out of debt. White farmers raising corn, cattle and hogs on small farms are the answer. Covington County not only raises enough to feed itself, but ships out thousands of dollars worth. Of course Covington County has grown faster than any county in Alabama. Things are going to be even better. The most modern packing plant in the South is just being completed at Andalusia, which will take care of all the cattle, hogs and poultry that can be produced.

All we need now in Covington County is more people. That's why we want you. That's why we will sell you 20 to 40 acres of cut over land and give you

Success With Hogs In Crenshaw County

By R. C. Carlisle, Demonstration Agent

You asked how we have increased the production of hogs in this county.

It is hard to answer in full, and easy to say that we are waking up. Two years ago we were afraid to put much money into hogs, as we had not learned how to combat the cholera, and it was not very pleasant to have die a pen of hogs about ready to kill, but thanks to the serum treatment, and persistent use of it by some of the most progressive men, and the adoption of more sanitary methods in hog raising we have practically stamped out this pest. As we were afraid of loss from cholera we were also afraid that we could not sell profitably. As most of the hogs were raised by small farmers, getting sufficient to ship was a problem. The packing plant at Andalusia has dispelled this so we are in the hog business, not just a few of us, but practically every farmer in the county has increased his hogs from one "old sow" to from two to eight. The cattle vats have taught us the advantage of keeping the hogs clean, with the result that we have about 50 hog vats in operation now with about this many more to build this season.

The question of hog feeding has never bothered the sandy land people here except in the summer, as the velvet beans and peanuts were sufficient to carry hogs from September until killing time. Now we are realizing that we must have more pasturage to help carry the sows and young pigs over summer. Oats, then rape, followed by a bermuda pasture make it very cheap to carry hogs until early peas get ripe, or at least ready to turn in on in July. With the non-leguminous pasture the best men feed about a quarter ration of beans and corn, about equal parts. After we get a summer crop a succession of crops carries the hogs until peanuts which puts them ready for market.

Do not try to overstock the farm with hogs.

Keep hogs clean, without by spraying and dipping, within with charcoal.

Have a pasture ready for the hogs all the year, and keep them growing.

Last and most important of all, holler loud and long when a hog gets sick, and get some one who knows to see it.

Has The South A Future As A Cattle Country

By John M. Hazelton, Editor Hereford Journal.

I don't see how they are ever going to make a cattle country out of this; they haven't any grass," said a Kentucky cattleman as he looked from the window of a Pullman car speeding across Georgia. There were a bunch of breeders in the car—breeders from Kansas and Missouri and Iowa and Indiana and Illinois and Kentucky and it was soon evident that several of them agreed with the speaker. To them growing cattle without grass, and plenty of it, was like making bricks without straw, and they were of the opinion from their observations that the men who were trying to grow cattle in the South were up against about the same kind of proposition that confronted the Children of Israel in their brick-making operations while in bondage in Egypt. Some of these men had made several trips through the South, too, and flattered themselves that their opportunities for making observations of the situation in that section had been pretty good.

Now the window of a Pullman—even a Pullman on a local train that isnt trying to break any speed records—isnt the best position imaginable from which to get correct impressions of the country, through which one is traveling. The man who imagines that he is going to get a correct idea of agricultural conditions in the South by confining his observations to the smoking room of a Pullman car is fooling himself mightily. And still many men have studied Southern conditions with one eye on the passing scenery and the other in a railway guide and have gone back North and talked very learnedly and very emphatically about the folly of trying to make a cattle-growing country out of that section. And some of them, back home were reputed to be pretty levelheaded fellows, too, and were credited with knowing something about the cattle business—in their own country.

Few Cattle Seen from Trains.

One gets an even less reliable idea of livestock conditions in the South from a railroad train than he does in any other section of the country. Up north or out west if there are any cattle in the country they are pretty sure to be visible from a railroad train One can ride across Kansas or Texas or Colorado and never be out of sight of a bunch of Whitefaces. The western railroads fence their rights otway, and the farmers don't have to worry about their cattle getting on the railroad track. Down South it is a rare thing to see a railroad rightof-way fenced. In the early days fence wire was expensive and the men who built railroads in the South were economical. So they saw to it that the statute books of the Southern states were not encumbered with laws requiring them to fence their rights-ofway. Then there were a good many thrifty planters who cast covetuous eye on that 50-foot strip of land alongside the railroad track and they didn't clamor to have the right-ofway fenced. For years they have been growing cotton right up to the ends of the ties, while the railway companies thave been compelled in order to protect their rights to put up markers away out in the cotton fields to define the boundaries of their right of-way.

Because of this absence of the fences the farmers pasture their cattle as far back from the railroads as possible and it is only when a bunch of them wander away that they are visible from a railroad train. Usually when this occurs they are very much in evidence, for the railroad track appears to have about the same attraction for them that the magnetic pole has for the magnetic needle. It would be an easy matter for the average Southern railway to shorten its schedules materially if it were to fence its right-of-way. Besides it would lesseen the nervous strain on the trainmen.

Permanent Pastures in South.

Of course, to the breeder who is accustomed to seeing his cattle waddling about in the blue grass up to their bellies, the average Southern landscape does not make a very strong appeal. But a conscientious investigation of conditions in the South will convince any man who is convinceable that the South has a future—and a bright one—as a beef producing section. It is true that there is a scarcity of native tame-grass pastures but this is not because such pastures cannot be had and maintained, but because little effort has been expended in the production of pastures. Grass is persona non grata to the cotton grower. He has been fighting it for years and the grass has gotten the worst of the struggle. Not only will pastures grasses grow in the South, but, with the proper effort, as good tame-grass pastures can be had there as in any section of the country, and they will yield good grazing for from two to three months longer each year than do the pastures of the north. The writer saw cattle grazing on white clover and Bermuda grass the middle of March in Louisiana, and he was assured that cattle had been grazing on those same pastures as late as Christmas last year. At the Enochs and Wortman farm near Jackson, Miss on March 27, cattle were grazing on bur clover and Bermuda grass, the clover being easily six inches tall. At the plantation of the N. J. Bell estate at Calhoun, Ala. April 1 cattle were fairly reveling in the bur clover pasture, and the Bermuda grass was making a good start. At the Anderson Farms near Marietta, Ga., about the same time, the Hereford cows were getting a good fill of Bermuda grass. The above cover practically all the conditions to be found in the South. What these men have done in the way of building up pastures others can do.

Cattle Help Build Pastures

Some tell us that the people in the South have the cart before the horse—that they have started in to stock up with cattle before they have the pasture for them—that they ought to have gotten the pastures first and the cattle afterwards, Well, there are some forehanded individuals who postpone matrimony until they they have the house all completed and furnished and ready for occupancy; more of them get the wife first and let her help fix up the home. The farmres of the South have shown good judgment in not waiting, because the cattle are proving a material assistance in building up the pastures. In the meantime there is no difficulty in getting plenty of green stuff for the cattle. In almost any part of the South oats can be sown in October and pastured from December 1 to late winter and then produce a good yield. Rye makes an excellent winter pasture, so does wheat For summer grazing the clovers—white, crimson, alsike, bur—lespedeza alfalfa Bermuda, vetch and other plant are available. E. T. Boswell, Jr., of Siloam, Ga., says cattle in that section graze all winter on honeysuckle and not only do well on it but relish it. There is a wild honeysuckle which keeps green all winter. Mr. Boswell is planting it in his pastures for the double purpose of preventing erosion and furnishing winter as well as summer grazing.

Humus Needed.

Much of the soil in the South is sandy, and washes easily. The cotton farmers terrace the hillsides and lay out the cotton rows at right angles to the slope of the ground. Where the land slopes in several directions, as is often the case, the negroes show much ingenuity in laying out the cotton rows, some fields resembling a labyrinthian puzzle. When a sufficient amount of humus is introduced into the soil this tendency to erode ceases and this can be done by growing clovers and legumes. On the Anderson farms at Marietta, Ga., for instance, the necessity for terracing has been done away with by a system of crop rotation, and the soil in the hillside pastures holds as well as it does in the north. Building up pastures in the South is simply a matter of intelligent work. In this work cattle play an important part because of the fertility they return to the soil.

No Limit To Forage.

As for forage, there is simply no end to the amount and variety of it that can be produced in the South. The writer saw as fine fields of alfalfa in the "black belt" through Central Alabama, in Central and Southern Georgia, around Atlanta and across Mississippi as he ever saw in Kansas.

Perhaps the greatest of all forage crops in the South at present is lespedeza, or Japan clover, which has done more than any other one crop so far to promote livestock farming in that section. Both as a pasture crop and as a forage crop lespedeza has been to the South what alfalfa has been to the Central West. Johnson grass, once denounced and despised as a troublesome weed, is looked upon with much favor in many sections as a forage crop, and Johnson grass hay is the chief dependence for roughness in these sections. Velvet beans and cowpeas can be grown almost anywhere, and they afford excellent pasturage as well as good forage. Velvet beans are rapidly growing in favor.

Then the Silo.

The South is taking to the silo like a duck to water. The boundaries of the cornbelt must be revised, for the entire South is growing corn, and some of the corn growers down there are making records that place the laurels of the cornbelt farmers in jeopardy. Down there they sow their oats in the fall, and after harvesting the crop, plant the same land in corn for silage. Heretofore they have been filling their silos for winter use, but now they are beginning to realize the value of having a silo or two in reserve to help out when the summer pastures get short.

Building Up Soil.

And when it comes to grain, they can grow corn and oats and rye and barley and sorghums ,and in fact anything that can be grown in the cornbelt. Besides they have an abundance of cottonseed products—meal and hulls—and now that the peanut industry is on the boom, and every cotton oil mill is putting in peanut crushers, a valuable cattle feed is being produced from the residue of the peanuts. Instead of commiserating the South for its lack of feed, the cattle growers of the cornbelt need to envy it for the prodigality with which Nature has provided for it in this regard. The more cattle the South grows the more grass and forage and grains it will grow, because the cattle will not impoverish the soil, but will hand back to it a large per centage of the fertility that goes into the production of these grasses, forage and grains.

Not All Boosters for Livestock.

Some people up North have conceived the idea, from the newspaper reports, that the pathway of the cattleman in the South is strewn with roses—that everybody is boosting for him, lending him a helping hand, cheering him on his victorious way—that the banks are eager to loan him money, the merchants to provide him with feed, and the railroads to haul his cattle for him free of charge. This is not strictly in line with the truth. The knockers against the cattle business in the South do not all live above the Mason and Dixon's line. It is true that the progressive, wide-awake business men in the South realize the importance to the material wealth of the country of more diversified farming, and especially of livestock farming. They are encouraging the development of the livestock industry on a sound, safe and sane basis. They are not, however, advocating that everybody quit growing cotton and go into cattle. So long as cotton is a staple article of commerce the South will grow it, if it can grow it profitably. The boll weevil has made it unprofitable to grow it on a large scale in many sections. The exhaustion of the soil, and the necessity for using a large amount of fertilizer in order to produce a crop has made it unprofitable in other sections. The war has not only reduced the price of cotton, but it has largely increased the price of certain fertilizers necessary in cotton growing, notably nitrate of soda. But the South has no idea of going out of the business of growing cotton. It sees in castile growing an industry that will not only yield a profit on land that cannot longer be used profitably for cotton culture, but will build this land up, bring back its fertility, and make it available for cotton growing again.

One of the Knocks.

There are bankers and business men in the South who profess not to have any faith in the future of the business of beef production in that section. But the knocker, like the poor, is ever with us, and the South is going ahead and developing the beef producing industry in spite of him. One of the favorite "knocks" is that beef cattle will not flourish in the South because of a lack of lime necessary to be used on the soil and that cattle deteriorate in size and bone because the necessary bone-building element is not present in sufficient quantity in the feed produced. They point to the large amount of lime necessary to be used on the soil as proof of their argument. So far as the writer was able to learn there is little or nothing to this argument. J. T. Anderson of Marietta, Ga., has been breeding Herefords for six or seven years, and there is no evidence of deterioration in the bone of the cattle that he is growing—cattle whose ancestors were grown on feeds produced in Georgia.

The undersized scrub native cattle of the South cannot be charged up to the lack of the bone-building element in the feed—the rather they have dwindled from generation to generation because of lack of a sufficient quantity of that feed. As for the climate, the Herefords do not appear to mind it in the least. In fact the climate never does appear to bother the Herefords, which are as much at home at the equator as they are at the Arctic Circle and all the way between.

End of Tick in Sight.

As for the tick, he is on the run. They used to fight tick eradication and dynamite dipping vats, and that sort of thing, but the man who objects to tick eradication now finds himself so unpopular among his neighbors that he either gets in the band wagon or subsides. Vigorous tick eradication campaigns are on in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia and Alabama. January 1, next, all of Mississippi will be under the tick eradication law, and dipping will be compulsory in every county in the state. Large areas in Alabama and Georgia have been cleared. The next generation will have to get its information about ticks out of books. The banishment of the tick will add 33 per cent to the efficiency of the feed produced in the South, for the tick has been getting a third of the feed consumed by the cattle.

Depends On the Men.

If beef production is not a success in the South it will not be because not enough feed can be raised there, nor because feed cannot be raised cheaply enough, nor will it be because land values are so high that the interest on the investment will add too greatly to the cost of production. Comparatively speaking, land—good land—is cheap in the South. Productiveness and distance from market considered, land suitable for cattle growing in that section can be purchased for from one-third to one-half what it can be in the Central West. In the celebrated "black belt" of Alabama—the ferm "black belt" referring to the color of the soil and not to the complexion of the population—land that will rival that of Iowa for productiveness—land that will grow as fine alfalfa as ever adorned a Kansas prairie, and will yield as much corn to the acre as the average cornbelt farm—and within a radius of 20 miles of a city of $30,000 to 40,000 people—can be bought for $40 an acre. This land is ideal for livestock farming. With cheap land, soil that will produce all kinds of feeds, and a climate that reduces the winter care and feeding of stock to a minimum, the future of the livestock business in the South depends upon the men who engage in it.

PROTECT CATTLE FROM HORN FLIES

In answer to the many inquiries coming into the Mississipi A. and M College for a remedy against the hornfly of cattle, which is especially prevalent at this time of the year, R. W. Harned entomologist states that the injury caused by this pest is principally from irritation causing a loss of vitality and consequent decrease of mil kflow. Mr. Harned offers the following suggestions for controlling the flies:

When the insect appears in large numbers, the best method of combatting them is to apply preventives, which are so distasteful to the flies that they will not come near them, but at the same time are not injurious to the cows. The following mixtures are recommended for this purpose:

1. Two parts crude cottonseed oil and one part pine tar. This is best applied with a large paint brush and may be used at milking time if dairy cattle are to be treated. Fish oil may be substituted for cottonseedoil One application will last about five days.

2. One ounce of carbolic acid, three fourths ounce of pennyroyal and one fourth pound of sulphur, mixed with one gallon of crude cottonseed oil. This may be applied in the same manner as the first mixture.

Early in the season one of the most satisfactory remedies for the pest is to destroy the eggs, which are laid in fresh cow manure by applications of lime to the manure pile. This is practical only where the cattle are confined in a small enclosure but the manure which is dropped in the open pasture will be baked by the sun and the maggots will be killed. The manure in the heap may be spread out and baked in the sun with satisfactory results. In this manner the number of flies may be materially reduced by midsummer.

Dear Sirs:

Your letter of the 18th to hand and in reply will say that since putting in one of your No. 0 snapped corn grinders about eight months ago we have been operating this mill steadily, turning out at the rate of 60,000 pounds of feed daily, and it gives me much pleasure to say to you that our troubles with the mill have been so little that they are not worth mentioning, and we can recommend your mill to be just exactly what you claim for it and we are delighted with our purchase, and will say that the upkeep of the mill is very small indeed. Yours very truly,

C. S. MATHEWS,
Supt. Feed Mill.

As previously stated these outfits are made in various sizes to suit individual requirements and are sold on trial to all responsible parties.

When writing specify materials you wish to grind, fineness desired, and quantity per hour, preferably in pounds. Bulletin MF-99 gives additional data.

Building Farrowing Pens

By W. A. Wadsworth

It takes more sense to build a hog-pen right than appearances indicate. And if you do not know how, you are apt to spoil time and lumber.

Farrowing-pens are absolutely necessary if we save pigs in quantity. Where run together, pigs suck pregnant sows and bring them to their milk, and cause them to loose their pigs, and probably bring on milk-fever. And if pigs are are born alive will be very weak and may never get a suck, being pushed away by older pigs. I have had three year old barren sows brought to their milk by running with a sow that had pigs.

I have two sets of farrowing pens, one at the rape patch for winter and one at the bermuda lawn for summer. We will describe the one for summer. Select a good dry shady place with a tree on the east and one on the west. Build a pen 8 by 8 foot square with a protection railing all around on the inside. The protection rail should clear twelve inches from the ground and be twelve inches from the walls. The old sow in rooting will fill up a smaller place. It needs to be full high so when the pig is born it will drop under the railing and not get mashed during birth. A small sow should have smaller quarters, an extra large sow larger quarters. It is better to use heavy close mesh wire for wall to pen than wood. Wire lets in more breeze, so essential in the summer. Use eight inch boards top and bottom for braces.

The door should not be in a corner but fourteen inches from a corner. The door should come within six inches of the ground, so a heavy sow will have no trouble in entering. The old sow will move the protecting railing unless it is fastened very strong. This is an easy matter if gone at night. Otherwise it will not stay put.

How to place protection railing so the sow can not move it; get two pieces measured to fit square across the inside of the pen made from 1 by 8 inch boards. For posts use 2 by 4 inch nailed to the inside of the pen walls 12 inches from the corners. Nail inside pieces to these as posts. These two should be at right angles at the far side of the pen from sides of the pen. The third railing goes at the far side of the pen from the door and is somewhat shorter and held in position by battens nailed to the first two railings, so as to leave a 12-inch space between this and the back wall.

The space on the side of the doorway needs no protector, but is used for feed and watering trough. By using battens on the sides, for posts to nail the inside works to makes it stronger and gives a clear space all around on three sides. The trough side might have protection rail far enough from the wall to inclose the V-shaped trough, and extended across the door space after the sow is in the pen.

Three days after sow farrows she should be moved to where the pigs can get a little exercise. Exercise is essential, but we of the south are in the habit of giving too much exercise in proportion to the feed they get.

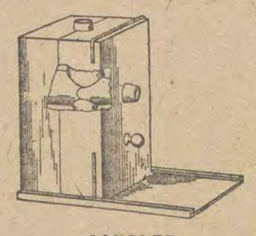
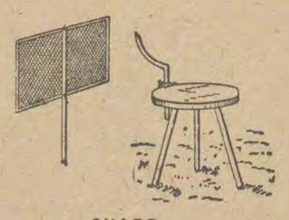
HALTER



PROTECTOR



DRAG

AUTO. POWER

CANDLER

GUARD

Halter

This device serves either as an ordinary halter, or as a strangler. When the leading-rope is attached to the ring through which the throat chains cross, the device serves as a halter. When it is attached to the ring at the end of the sliding chain, the device serves as a gag, or strangler, to restrain vicious animals.

Protector

The protector shown here is simply a broad leather band attached to the bit rings by snap hooks. It swings back and forth, as the animal walks, and thereby protects the mouth from flies and other insects.

Road Drag

The V-shaped scraper of this drag is pivoted at the front ends, and is free to move up and down at the rear end. The partition at this end serves to force earth and clods under the scraper. The scraper and the parallel sides are shod with iron.

Auto Power

When this device is in use, each hind wheel of the car rests on two grooved wheels. The pairs of wheels are belted together, and the power is taken from a pulley on the axle of one pair. The brake lever raises a central bar, and applies a band brake to each grooved wheel. When the brake is on, the auto can leave under its own power.

Candler

This candler consists of an oil lamp placed inside a light-proof box. The new feature is the light-tube, which, it is claimed, sends an increased amount of light through the egg.

The object of this invention is to protect the milker's head from the cou's tail. It is a wire-covered frame, bolted to the side of the stool.

Big Baldwin County, a Little "Empire," Is Doing Remarkable Things

When a man chooses a place for a home he carefully considers certain prime factors which are conditions of health, happiness and prosperity.

First, climate as an essential element of health and happiness and them questions of soil, products, location with reference to markets, transportation education population taxation, government social surrounds and the other perfected agencies of civilization. When he finds all these essentials of life in a certain favored place he is prepared to decide to live there.

Taking any or all these questions into consideration healthful, beautiful, profitable Baldwin county, Alabama, deserves more than passing consideration from every one who wishes to live under agreeable conditions and get the most for a given expenditure. However, before mentioning some of the county's specific achievements and the inviting field it offers the homemaker and capitalist, it may be well to refer in a few paragraphs to its general characteristics.

Largest In Alabama.

It may not be generally known that Balwwin county is not only the largest county in the State of Alabama and one of the largest in the United States but it also is one fourth larger than the State of Rhode Island, containing 1,620 square miles or 1,036,800 acres. It is one of the two counties in Alabama that borders the Gulf of Mexico and has the most extensive coast line of any county of any State in the union, and yet it has a very small amount of swamp along its bays and tidewater rivers.

One can follow its shores in a boat for a distance of 256 miles and pass from fresh water into salt water and back again into salt water and back again into fresh water since it is almost surrounded by navigable waters. Further, the face of the entire county is watered by numerous spring fed streams, their number invariably making a most favorable impression upon everyone who has had the pleasure and profits of making a tour over its broad acres and suggesting the unlimited opportunities the county offers for live stock raising and dairying as well as for fruit growing, trucking and general farming. For the most part the streams are of rapid flow, except just at tidewater, showing at a glance the admirable drainage of the land surface. Another indication of this specially important feature is in the high shore lines of almost the whole of the beautiful Perdide and Mobile Bays as well as many of the rivers and streams forming in many places almost continuous bluffs showing the finest imaginable sites for private summer and winter homes and all-the-year-round resort places.

Turn The Optimist Loose.

Baldwin county has the one place where it is possible to drive from anywhere on the North American continent to a beautiful Gulf Beach for surf bathing. And people who have traveled all over the world say that nowhere is there any finer stretch of ocean beach than from Alabama Point to Fort Morgan. Turn a Los Angeles optimist with a set of our climate chorts and half-baked soil analisis and he would capitalize that one asset of Baldwins opportunity for a huge sum. Provide him with the additional fact that beef may be produced for as low as three cents a pound and pork for from one and three quarters to two and a half cents a pound in Baldwin county and he would sketch you a billion dollar rainbow while you blinked your eyes. And yet Baldwin's achievements and opportunities are based o na steady, substantial growth rather any rainbow promises.

However the most noticeable effect of Baldwin's long coast line and abundant rivers and streams is found in the climate which could hardly be surpassed anywhere. It is well known that water always has an equalizing effect on temperature, absorbing the rays of the summer sun and effectually mitigating the sting of the winter winds which now and again attempt an invasion from the north. The oft-sung lands of the fig and vine where civilzation flourished for ages before the American aboriginal ever dreamed of a white man, in the matter of a genial climate, taking the year through have no preminence over Baldwin county.

We Understand Our Need.

The soil characteristics, in the main are similar to those pertaining throughout the Gulf Coast country and consist of black to chocolate sand-clay loams, known Norfolk and Portsmouth sandy loams, with the lighter sandy soils peculiarly adapted to the growing of citrus fruits and trucking crops .All with a good clay subsoil combine with the ideal climate to permit of the highly successful cultivation of perhaps as great a variety of productions as can be grown in any other like area in the world.

Now that we are coming to understand the need and value of lime, that if we starve our soil it will starve us, that on a live stock foundation, lime plus legumes equals humus, which, multiplied and utilized by brain and energy means Baldwin certainty of prosperity and happiness; now that we have quit trying the short cuts in the effort to get rich quick and are carefully erecting the proper structure on the right foundations, we are building for the future both for ourselves and our children.

Dairying Gains Hold.

Now that the cattle tick is being eliminated and the razor back hog and piney woods long horn are being relegated to the background; with the Shorthorn, Hereford and several of the dairy breeds of cattle, and the Poland China, Duroc-Jersey, Berkshire and other breeds of hogs taking their places while scientific farming and live stock raising are generally adopted; with silos and the finest ensilage and proper feeding Baldwin county has in sight its complete triumph as a livestock and dairy center. It must be remembered that owing to the practically all-the-year round growing season with its salubrious summer and winter climate, the housing of animals and the problems of winter feeding are very greatly minimized.

Some Things We Grow.

All these things are possible because of our mild climate and the wide range of rich feed crops being grown. These cover all the clovers and alfalfa, all the temperate and subtrophical grasses, with cow-peas, soy beans, peanuts, velvet beans and a multitude of other feed and forage crops. We are also growing sugar cane Irish and sweet potatoes with every kind of garden produce known on the continent, tomatoes, figs grapes, cherries, plums, peaches, pears and the famous Satsuma oranges, apples and the paper shell pecan.

All these things thrieve equally well when the cultivator adds brain to his labor. Nor are all the stple crops upon which our ancestors builded their hopes exclusively, less successful when proper, care is given them—corn, oats, barley, rye, the sorghums and kaffirs yield abundantly while even wheat has been successfully grown. But perhaps the best possible illustration of Baldwins range and excellence of production is shown in an altogether remarkable private collection shown at the fairs and containing the following:

Velvet beans, bermuda, soy beans, kudzu, sorghum, crab grass, oat straw Mexican clover cow pea vine peanut vine, rice straw, corn stover, earl millett German millet lespedeza Japan clover) timpthy, Natal grass, Sudan grass, blue grass, alfalfa crimson clover, red clover, Rhodes grass, billion dollar millet and a new unnamed but promising hay grass.

Honey several varieties sugar from sugar cane, rock candy and sugar cane syrup. Cider, sugar cane, watermelon and plum vinegar.

Oysters, shrimp, crabs and many varieties of fish and sea foods.

A large collection of gulf and bay curioes.

A prospective immigrant puts to himself always the question: "What is the character of the people, the number of schools, churches and reads of the county in which I propose to live." "What are the social conditions."

Big Increase In People.

In answer to those and similar questions, it is enough to say that if good society is not found in Baldwin county it is not to be found in the United States and Canada for the population of the county is made up of settlers from every party of North America with some Germans, Scan-Scandinavians and others from the best of foreign immigrants. It is a striking fact that fully ninety per cent of the residents are northern white people and these have moved into the county from the east, north and west—even coming from much advertised and touted California, so rapidly as to have entirely changed its appearance in the past ten years and to have given Baldwin county the distinction of having increased in population in that period at a greater rate than any other county of Alabama or the Gulf Coast and probably equal to any other strictly agricul-agricultural county in the United States. Many of the immigrants brought with them wealth and culture and nearly all of them have brought those sterling traits of character without which no influx of people is of value.

Bay Minette is the county seat and next in population is Fairhope, then Foley, Robertsdale, Loxley, Summerdale, Stockton, Stapleton, Dyas, Orange Beach, Magnolia Springs, Battles, Daphne, Perdide Beach, Lillian, Josephine, Seminole, Garney, Roscoe, Cates wood, Ben Secour, Point Clear, Perdido and Canee, as well as several other post offices and the beginning of villages.

Much Depends on Live Stock

The people of Baldwin county have been accused of thinking they live in Paradise, but they do not. It is still on earth and the failures of man and seasons and the law of averages apply here as elsewhere because of the longer growing season and wider range of crops the average for any given period should and will be higher than elsewhere.

With the successful development fast taking place as stated in live stock, and dairying in the growing of food and forage crops, and in the Citrus and other fruit orchards and vineyards and in the growing of the paper shell pecan and other nut groves, accompanied by the many successful poultry plants, this is indeed a favored country.

In our present knowledge of soils, plant feeds etc., together with all the modern machinery available and the assistance eagerly given by men, corporations banks, States and the Federal government and in cooperation with all of these in the use of lime, legumes and humus plus brains and energy, you are invited to join far health, home and happiness, those "hand picked" people who live in this "Empire" within the greatest state in the union—Baldwin county, in Alabamy.

State to Help in Alabama Soil Surveys

The Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries is to cooperate with the U. S. department of agriculture in soil surveys of Fayette, St. Clair and Coosa counties. The work will be taken up in the near future, it is expected. Under the cooperative arrangement adopted for these soil surveys, each institution pays the salaries and expenses of its own men, while the Federal government bears the expense of inspecting the work and publishing the report for each county.

This report will be accompanied by a large map showing in colors the location of the various kinds of soils with reference to roads, schools, churches, watercourses and other features of the county. The nature of the soils, their adaptability for various crops and suggestions for the most advantageous use of fertilizers will also be discussed in detail, together with full information on existing agricultural conditions. Several months will be required to prepare the report and map after the survey has been completed.

TONIC FOR PIGS

The department at Washington recommends the following ingredients for a tonic for pigs:

Wood charcoal one pound.
Sulphur one pound.
Sodium chloride, two pounds.
Sodium bicarbonate, two pounds.
Sodium hyposulphita two pounds.
Sodium sulphate, one pound.
Antimony sulphide, one pound.

These ingredients should be completely pulversized and thoroughly mixed.

Your druggist will prepare the above at prices ranging from ninety cents to one dollar. It makes ten pounds to be fed as follows: The dose of this mixture is a large tablespoonful for each 200 pounds weight of hogs to be treated and it should be given only once a day.

It is a good health promoter and contains many germ destroying ingredients. At all times give free access to salt and wood ashes, mixed in the proportion of one part of salt to eight or ten of ashes.

To Farmers of Boll Weevil Sections:-

THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG will do effective and rapid work in brushing to the ground boll weevils and punctured squares.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is a strong, practical and economical device for getting rid of the most weevils in the QUICKEST TIME and the CHEAPEST WAY. It is used and highly recommended by some of the most successful farmers in Mississippi and Alabama.
THE ROBINSON CHAIN DRAG is the best device known for the use of tenant farmers in fighting the wevil.

THE DRAG DESCRIBED

The Drag is a steel rod that holds a light durable chain, the rod and chain being attached to the beam of the plow stock with a casting arranged so as to be adjustable to the size of plants at the time for plowing. The rod is placed at an angle to the beam and as the plow proceeds down the row the rod bends down the plant over towards the middle between the rows and the chain agitates the plant sufficiently to cause the Weevil and infested squares to fall off into the middle of the row. The attachment is reversible as well as adjustable, up and down, and can be used on either right or left side of the plow below or above the beam.

We do not desire to create the impression among farmers that any device will prevent all the damage the weevil usually causes, unless the approved measures for control be carefully followed.

Write us so we can take care of your order before the growing season starts.

About 12,000 Boys In Our Pig Club Work

The pib-club work has been carried on by the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry during the past year in cooperation with the State Agricultural Colleges of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Nebraska, North Carolina Oklahoma, Oregon, and Texas. Pig Clubs were organized among the farm children and proved a means of arousing further interest in live stock, and at the same time furnished profitable and instructive work to the members.

The objects of the pig clubs are: To teach the members how to raise better swine cheaply; to give the members a practical insight into the business side of farming. Indirectly, the improvement of the swine of the country and the general introduction of better and cheaper swine raising methods are purposed.

Each pig-club member is required to keep a record of his pig-feeding work and report this at the end of the State contest. Many unusually successful records have been made. These are not typical of the work, but rather represent its possibilities. A summary and the averages of the work of many members give a better indication of the value of the pig-club work.

In the 13 States named, 11,632 members were enrolled last year in the pig clubs. Not all were active members, but most of these raised pigs. While a great many reported more or less completely on their work, 1,608 members from 11 States, with a membership of 11,032, reported completely on weights, values, gains in weight, costs of gains, and profits. No figures are available from California and Oregon, except as to the number of members.

Seventeen hundred and eighty-three pigs were reported, or an average of 1.1 pigs per member. The majority of members took weanling pigs to feed in the spring and reported their results in the fall. The averageweight per pig at the beginning of the feeding period was 39.2 pounds. At the end of the feeding period, which averaged 166 1-2 days, the pigs welghed 194 1-2 pounds. This was an average daily gain in weight of 0.93 pound at a cost of $0.044 per pound. This low cost of gain can be attributed, it it believed, to the better feeding methods practiced and the wide use of orage crops by the members.

The original value of the pigs averaged $5.24. The average final value was $21.13, a gain in value of $16.19. This gain in value cost $6.91, giving an average net profit per pig of $9.37 and an average net profit per member of $10.29.

These figures are a strong indication that improved swine, raised in the right way, are profitable even when pork values are as low as they were in 1915. The vast majority of members had carefully selected high-grade and pure-bred hogs, and to this improved blood, as well as the better feeding methods, can be attributed the large difference in favor of the average final value of pig-club hogs in the fall--$21.43, as compared with the estimated average value of all hogs on farms in the United States on January 1, 1916, $8.40. The pig-club members have shown their ability as a body to raise pigs successfully. They have raised good pigs, cheap pigs, and profitable pigs.

SCOURS IN PIGS

1. Do not overfeed. Begin in twelve to twenty-four hours after birth of pigs with a warm bran slop and gradually increase the feed until in something like three weeks the sow is on full feed.
2. Avoid sudden changes in feed of the sow.
3. Provide a dry bed for sow and pigs. It need not be tight but protected from rain and cold winds.
4. Have sow and pigs in a grassy lot or small field and not in a muddy pen, and have the trough where the sun strikes it fairly.

Automobiles cost the people of the United States over $600,000,000 every year.

Raising Hogs For Profit In The Cotton States

By H. M. Cottrell.

The average county in the cotton growing states sends out each year one million dollars to pay for food and feed raised in Northern and Western States. Half the money that goes out is sent to pay for pork and pork products the heaviest single drain on the people in the cotton states and an expense that takes half the total amount that they receive from their cotton.

Hogs, under good management, are raised and fattened in the South for two to three cents a pound, live weight; a lower cost than in any other part of the United States. Raising and fattening hogs is one of the best money-making lines that Southern planters and farmers can follow:

Starting in the Business.

The beginner should grow into the hog business not go into it. Few men without experience find it profitable to start with more than two brood sows. The beginner should get a successful breeder to select the sows The breed should be the one the buyer likes best. The sows should be good individuals, from prolific strains on both sides. The new hog raiser should study his pigs daily and get intimately acquainted with their likes, dislikes, needs and the particular method of management that on his farm will return the largest profits

The first point for the beginner is cheapness in production, combined with early maturity that will secure early marketing.

Twelve to twenty pigs may be raised each year from each well selected, properly handled sow. The second year three or four of the best sow pigs should be saved for breeding. The third year the grower should have learned enough about hogs to make money from ten sows and their pigs.

The Best Breed.

There are four breeds well suited to the South--Berkshire, Duroc-Jersey, Hampshire and Poland China. Some breeders have made good profits from the Tamworth. White hogs have generally been unsatisfactory, as their skins are likely to blister badly unless they have good shade.

The money making value of the different breeds is so nearly alike that the choice of which breed to raise is a matter of fancy. A good individual of any one of these breeds will make as much money as an equally good animal of any of the other breeds, when handled in the same way. Do not cross breeds.

Selecting Individual Hog.

The foundation for profits is prolific sows, Except for the few weeks that the pigs are suckling, it costs as much to keep a sow that raises one to five pigs to a litter as it does to keep one that raises eight to ten at a litter. Stockmen estimates that under good management it costs $10 a year to keep a brood sow. Many farmers raise an average of not over four pigs from each sow yearly, making the cost of each pig at birth $2.50. Others raise eight pigs per sow a year the pigs costing $1.25 each at birth. A few of the most careful growers average sixteen pigs to weaning per sow annually, producing pigs that at birth cost 62 1-2 cents each.

Use in your breeding herd only boar and sows that each is from a large litter and whose sire dam and grand dam on both sides were from large litters. Make such a selection your first step in going into the hog business A farmer paid $75 for a choice Poland China sow and twice each year she had one pig. Another farmer had three sows of the same breed that raised thirty-one pigs to weaning at the first farrowing.

Must Have Constition.

A hog for breeding should be long bodied, thick, deep and smooth giving an impression of vigor and massiveness. The back should be well arched and wide. The shoulder should be thick and deep yet rounding smoothly into both neck and sides. The chest should be deep and wide, to afford ample room for the vital organs. There should be no depression behind the shoulders. The hind quarters should be deep and plump and thick right down to the hock. The legs should be short strong and placed wide apart. The animal should stand firm on the toes and not partially on the pasterns. Length of body is especially desirable in the sow to give room for the growth of a large litter, and she should have at least 12 good teats.

Shelter.

Hogs need shelter that will give them always a dry place without drafts, no matter what may be the weather. Wet sleeping places bring pneumonia and rheumatism, and a draft may cause colds, pneumonia and kindred diseases. Hogs are annoyed more by wind and drafts than any other farm animal. A hog that is sleeping or resting should no more be allowed in a draft than should a sleeping child.

Shelter should provide good ventilation should be cleaned easily and should also be so constructed that in case of diease it can be readily and thoroughly disinfected, shelter should be so arranged that at farrowing time the pigs may be handled with little disturbance to the sow.

The A-shaped portable hog horse is cheap, convenient and comfortable. Make it 8 feet wide at the bottom 8 feet long and 7 feet high at the center This will require 8-foot boards for the sides. The door at the front through which the hogs enter should be 30 inches wide and three feet high A door at the back near the top should be 12 by 18 inches. There is no floor. When a floor is needed make it separate from the house and set the house on it.

When it is desired to move an "A" house, tip it over on a low wagon or a sled. It is cheap and can be removed often to new ground that is free from the lice, worms or disease. It affords shelter or the sow and her pigs and for a littler of pigs after they are weaned.

Fence Farm Hog Tight.

It pays to fence, hog-tight all the outside lines of the farm. Then after the crops are harvested, the hogs may be allowed to run over all the land. They will find in every field meat making material that will be wasted unless they pick it up.

A man with a 160-acre farm fenced hog-tight on the outside, turned his hogs loose to run over all the farm after the crops were gathered. He weighed the hogs at the time they were given the run of the farm and again when they had finished gleaning the fields. Their gain in weight was worth $800 and every pound of the feed would have been lost if the pigs had not gathered it. At the Delta, Mississippi Experiment station cow peas were planted in the corn. Hogs were turned into the fields after the corn was gathered. They made $10 worth of gain from each acre.

Feeding Floor.

When hogs swallow filth, mud or dust with their feed it injuries their digestion and cuts down the returns they make from the feed. A hog needs to eat his feed from clean places every meal just as much as a man.

A feeding floor 30 by 40 feet made of concrete, is large enough to feed a car load of hogs. Give it 6 inches fall one way for each ten feet in width of the floor. Put trough, feed hoppers and water at the highest point. All refuse and manure will work to the lowest side and can be pushed off every day with a shovel or wooden pusher.

Water Supply.

Hogs need a supply of fresh clean water where they can drink it as often as they become the least bit thirsty. They thrive much better when drinking small quantities to go a considerable time without water and then consume large amounts. Dirty water hurts digestion and is one of the chief carriers of disease. On most farms the returns from the feed are greatly lessened because the hogs do not have an abundant supply of clean water so close to them that they will drink often. Gains are cut down quicker by an under supply of water than by too little feed.

A conbenient way to furnish clean water is to use an automatic hog waterer that can be attached to a barrel or tank. These devices have small drinking pockets just outside the barrel and when a hog drinks out of one of these pockets, fresh water flows into it from the barrel. The barrel may be mounted on a sled be filled every day and taken to any field where there are hogs. As long as there is any water in the barrel the hogs will have a clean drink, and each field will be as well supplied with water as though there was a good well in it. These automatic waterers cost $2 or less each and every farmer in the cotton belt should have a sufficient number to supply the needs of his hogs.

It is not safe to water hogs from a running stream, as the strecam is likely to carry disease.

The hog bath is the cheaest device for keeping hogs free from lice and their skin and hair in good condition. Make it of concrete, 16 inches deep, 8 feet wide and from 10 feet up in length, long enough to hold at one time one-fourth of the hogs that run together. Slope to ends so that the hogs can easily walk into it. Fill it to a depth of 12 inches with water. Add a small quantity of crude oil. The oil will spread over all the surface of the water.

Hogs will bathe 6 to 12 times a day in this bath in hot weather. The oil will kill the lice and make the skin and hair glossy and healthy. Put a 4-inch drain in one corner of the bath stopping the opening with a soft wood plug, wrapped in an old sack. Once a week drain and clean the bath and refill it.

This the first of several splendid practical articles by Mr. Cottrell on hog raising for profit in this part of the South. The next article will take up the big question of "Feeding" Watch for these articles read them carefully and use them for profit.

How To Prepare And Ship Squabs

By Dr. C. S. Burden

This is a most valuable article for those who are raising squabs for market. Be sure to read it and remember the simple directions that Dr. Burden, an expert pigeon breeder and squab raiser, gives you. Dr. Burden has charge of our Pigeon department and will be glad at all times to answer any questions you wish about successful pigeon breeding and squab production. Direct your questions to Dr. C. S. Burden, Pigeon Editor,

When squabs are only twenty-eight days old they are ready for market and if you are making shipment you can select squabs that do not vary over two days each way of this age and you will have them all right for the market.

It is easy to find a good market for squabs as the commission houses of the North are advertising for squabs in every pigeon journal and the best cafes are now placing them on their menus and most every hotel of any size is serving them. Many times you will find hotels offering quail and are giving you squabs instead for the law will not allow the sale of quail.

When you are ready to ship your squabs be sure that they are free from food in crops or take them from the nests about twelve hours before you are ready to kill them and do not allow them to have any food. This is necessary to insure their arrival at destination in first class condition. When ready to kill hang your squabs up by feet and double lock wings behind them so as to prevent fluttering (this is painless and essential.) then take regular squab killing knife or surgeon's lancett; insert it in mouth servering arteries on both sides of neck, then plunging it into the squab's brain and giving it a twist so as to break up the brain thoroughly.

Begin picking as soon as they are dead. Wash out crop by placing rubber tubeing down throat, one end of which is attached to a funnel hung on the wall or held by your assistant. Wash the squabs good and throw in basin of cold water to which has been added a double handful of salt and a little ice if you wish to cool them quickly. The salt will make them plump and white. Allow them to remain in the water until thoroughly cooled and if necessary change the water if it gets too warm from the heat of the squabs.

Secure any kind of a wood box, bucket or barrel that is tight and clean for packing the squabs, ready for shipment. Bore holes in the bottom of your box to allow the melted ice to escape. Crack your ice about the size of a hen egg and put about three inches in bottom of bucket or barrel or box, then place a layer of squabs, packing close together always with breasts upon and do not wrap them with any kind of paper. Put in another layer of ice and another layer of squabs and so on until your box is full or the supply exhausted. Allow three to four inches for ice on top of the squabs.

Packed in this manner squabs can be shipped across the continent and breeders in the West and South can ship to the eastern markets as easily as those living within a hundred miles of them. The South and West is the ideal country for squab raising. Quite often I am asked if we can ship squabs to Northern markets and I answer by giving the shipping directions and if ice will save meat there is no reason why we cannot ship anywhere.

The express rate on squabs is less than that on general merchandise. The rate is the same as on general merchandise with a 25 per cent. discount from the gross weight for ice. The ice melts in route and the express company allows you 25 per cent discount for this reason.

GRAZING FOR SWINE

Probably the greatest opportunity in livestock in the state today is in hog production, especially where hogs are finished off on grazing crops such as cowpeas, soy beans and peanuts. Grazing has the double advantage of bringing in a revenue and increasing the crop-producing power of the soil at the same time. On the sandier lands unquestionably the peanut is the best crop, but it is possible that the drought resisting power of the soy bean may make it desirable on some of the coarser sands of fair crop-producing power. On heavier lands, cowpeas and soy beans will have to be resorted to. As a little better grade of land is required for soy beans than for cowpeas, it will be best to grow ocwpeas on thinner soils. Where soil is reasonably good soy beans are to be preferred, the yield of grain being larger and the grain itself richer in protein and oils than cowpeas. On good land soy beans should give from 100 to 200 pounds more pork per acre than cowpeas.

All of the patterns shown here are by May Manton, the noted authority of womens' misses and children's garments. The patterns for the designs, besides allowing for all seams, give the true basting lines and show diagrams for cutting and making. When necessary each piece of pattern is lettered for identification. Patterns for any one of the designs shown here will be sent you upon receipt of 10 cents in stams. Send stamsp to Patterson department Farm and Immigration, Montgomery, Ala. Send now while these designs are before you. Note the number of the patterns in small figures of the pictures and corresponding description.

SILK GOWN

9063 (With basting line and added seam allowance) Blouse with over portion, 34 to 42 bust.

9075 (With bastin line and added seam allowance) Skirt with or without drapery, 24 to 32 waist.

Without doubt, the silk gow nis a pronounced favorite of the season and here it is shown in the daintiest possible form. It is made of white taffeta, plain and bordered, and with Georgette crepe for the collar and for the fronts of the bodice. The skirt is a very simple plain one but with drapery arranged over it that has a completely transforming effect. The blouse consists of a bodice that is lapped in surplice style and with a sleeveless over portion.

For the medium size the blouse will require 13-8 yards of material 36 inch wide with 1 yard of flouncing 16; the over blouse 1 1-4 yards of flouncing 16 inches wide with 1-2 yard of plain material 36 inches wide; for the skirt 5 3-4 yards 27 4 yards 36 or 44, with 3 1-2 yards of flouncing 22 inches wide or 1 1-3 yard of material 36 or 44, for the drapery. The skirt is three yards and 4 inches in width at the lower edge.

The blouse pattern No 9063 is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 inches bust measure an dthe skirt No. 9075 in sizes from 24 to 32 inches waist measure. They will be mailed to any address on receipt of ten cents for each

DAINTY UNDER-GARMENT

9067 (With basting line and added seam allowance) combination Undergarment, small 34 or 36, medium 38 or 40 large 42 or 44 bust.

Whether one likes underwear of lingerie cotton or of silk this model will be welcome. It is very simple and at this same time it is shapely and thoroughly comfortable to wear. It can be made a combination garment or a chemise only. The smocking that holds the fullness at the front is a pretty feature and a fashionable one but not necessary for the chemise can be left plain or simple shirrings can be substituted. There is nothing that makes a dainter trimming than scalloped edges and nothing is more fashionable when suitable material is used but some women will like to scallop the neck and armholes only and to finsh the lower edge of the garment with a hem. Women who like crepe de chine and underwear silk finished in simple tailored style will prefer to underface the edges and to have them hemstitched by machine. The seam at the back gives shapliness and fit.

For the medium size will be needed 3 1-2 yards of material 27 inches wide 2 1-3 yards 36 or 2 1-8 yards 44 with 5 yards of insertion and 8 yards of lace edging.

The pattern No0 9067 is cut in size small 34 or 36, medium 38 to 40, large 42 or 44 bust. It will be mailed to any address on receipt of ten cents.

SUMMER COAT

9059 (With basting line and added seam allowance) Girls Coat 8 to 14 years.

Every girl needs such a coat as this one. It competely covers and protects the frock, it is easy to slip on and off and it is available for many different uses. Here, it is made of a light weight wool material and without a lining. The cloth shows black and white checks and the trimming is pale green linen. The combination of materials is a much liked one and it is smart and attractive. If the coat were wanted for the automobile, it would be well to use a little heavier material or perhaps to line with something warmer for motoring is a cool sport whatever the thermometer may register. For travel and for general wear, the coat illustrated is as good as anything that could be offered although it could of course be made from a light weight serge or from gabardine to be equally correct and equally desirable. Dark blue serge would be pretty with collar, cuffs and belt of paid taffeta.

For the 12 year size will be needed 4 yards of material 36 inches wide 3 3-8 yards 44 or 2 5-8 yards 54 with 1-2 yard 36 inches wide for the trimming

The May Manton pattern No. 9059 is cut in sizes for girls from 8 to 14 years of age. It will be mailed to any address on receipt of ten cents.

ROMPER

9088 (With basting line and added seam allowance) child's rompers, 2, 4 and 6 years.

Children's happiness is so often induced by simle things and nothing could contribute to it more perfectly than rompers such as these. They are comfortable, they entail no anxiety as to possible soil wear and tear and they leave the little wearer free to play and to dig and enjoy life generally. In the picture, they are made of a dotted linen with trimming of plain color but all the simple washable materials are appropriate. Gingham, chambray, percale, galatea and the thinner dimity and lawn for really war days. Many mothers use rompers exclusively for the little boys and in such case they are made of daintier materials for afternoon wear. White dimity, or white Habutai silk smocked and rimmed with blue would be very charming for such use.

For the 4 year size will be needed 3 yards of material 27 inches wide 2 5-8 yards 36 or 1 7-8 yards 44 with 3-8 yard 36 inch wide for the trimming.

The pattern No. 9088 is cut in sizes for children from 2 to 6 years of age. It will be mailed to any address on receipt of ten cents.

REMEDIES FOR "CHIGGERS"

If a bath in hot water or in water containing salt or strong soap is taken within a few hours after exposure in shrubbery and weeds infested with "chiggers" or "red bugs" no ill effects will be experienced. After a long exposure, however a bath has practically no effect and direct remedies are necessary.

After irritation has set in and small red spots appear the application of a moderately strong solution of ammonia to the affected parts is recommended by the department's entomologists. A supersaturated solution of bicarbonate of soda or common cooking soda or saleratus will afford relief. Liberal application should be made until the irritation subsides. If the suffering is severe a dilute tincture of iodine or collodion should be lightly applied.

JAR BREAKING

When breakage of jars occurs it is due to such causes as:

(1) Overpacking jars. Corn, pumpkin, peas, lima beans, and sweet potatoes swell or expand in processing Do not fill the jars quite full of these products.

(2) Placing cold jars in hot water or vice versa. As soon as the jars are filled with hot sirup or hot water, place immediately in the canner.

(3) If top cracks during sterilization the wire bail was too tight.

(4) In steam canner, having too much water in the canner. Water should not come above the platform.

(5) Allowing cold draft to strike the jars when they are removed from the canner.

(6 Having wire bail too tight, thus breaking the jars or glass tops when lever is forced down.

CORN STOVER

It is worth while to cut and shock corn. This gives a maximum amount of forage for labor expended, and gets the corn crop out of the way of the succeeding grain crop. Corn stover can be fed in the open on the pasture, an excellent method of increasing the productivity of the pasture.

Where there is livestock production worthy of the name, the practice of stripping the blades from the corn is usually discontinued, because there is not sufficient feed obtained for the labor expended. Besides, the yield of corn is reduced by the practice.

As livestock production increases, utilization of straw and stover with succulent crops like silage will come more and more into practice. A semi-silage is now being made in many parts of the country from corn stover. It is put into the silo after the corn has been removed and a sufficient amount of water added to cause it to pack. This softens up the stalks and cattle seem to thrive on this food stuff.

Peel and scald them in strong salt water then take them up with a skimmer; have boiling enough venegar to cover them; stew whole pepper and seed over the onions and cover with the boiling vinegar; when cold put in jars and cork closely. The best onions for this pickle are the white buttons, but any small onion can be used.

Cucumber Pickle.

Pick the cucumbers as they ripen wash carefully without bruising leaving a bit of stem on, and keep covered in the brine several days drain from brine, put in jars and pour spiced on plain vinegar over and seal

Mangoes.

Take young tender green cantaloupes soak in strong brine for a week; cut out a section and inch square in end and remove seed. Soak another day, wipe dry with a clean cloth, fill the inside with choped cabbage, onion, green tomatoes, cucumbers, peppers, celery, mustard seed, whole iloves and cinnamon. Wet this mixture with vinegar before putting in the mangoes replace the cut pieces tie up, pack in crocks, fill with cold vinegar and they are ready for use in six weeks.

Easy Pickle.

One quart raw cabbage, one quart boiled beets, chop fine two cups sugar one table spoon salt, one teaspoon black pepper one cup grated horseradish; cover with cold vinegar and keep air tight.

Sweet Pickles.

These are also called spiced fruits and can be made from any of the fruits as well as tomatoes, watermelon rind etc. Use four pounds of sugar (brown is best) to 8 pounds of fruit; one quart vinegar, one cup mixed spices. Tie spices in bag and boil with sugar and vinegar, skim; then add fruit and boil until tender. Lift out fruit and carefully pacg in jars; boil syrup five minutes longer and pour over fruit lay a bag of spice in each jar and seal.

Tomato Catsup.

One half bushel tomatoes, one half gallon vinegar, one half ounce red pepper. one fourth ounce alspice; one ounce cloves, one half pint salt.

Boil tomatoes until soft enough to press through a sieve, then add other ingredients. Boil three hours to reduce to one half the quantity. When cool add one pint of brandy. Bottle and cork tightly.

Chili Sauce.

Peal and slice two dozen large well ripe tomatoes, add three good size onions, three medium size red peppers. Chop peppers and onion together before adding tomatoes. Add two teaspoons of cinnamon, one of cloves, one tablespoon of salt, one cup good vinegar and one of sugar. Boil all together until thick or thin as desired.

Grape Catsup.

Five pounds grapes, one pint vinegar. Pulp the grapes cook pulps and and strain, then add skins and vinegar two pounds brown sugar, one tablespoon of ground cinnamon and alspice and one teaspoon peper. Simmer well until thick.

Walnut Catsu.

Bruise to a mass one hundred and twenty green walnuts gathered when young and tender enough for a pin to pierce; add three-fourths of a pound of salt, one quart of good vinegar; stir them every day for a week or ten days. then strain and squeeze the liquor from them through through a cloth and set it aside. Add to the husks one-half pint of vinegar and let stand all night, then add this liquor to the other already strained, add one and one half ounces whole pepper forty cloves one half ounce beaten nutmeg, one ounce ginger; boil a half hour, closely covered then strain, bottle when cold and when corked turn bottles upside down and dip cork in melted parafine to make them air tight.

Indian Chutney.

One half pound sour apples, peeled and cored, one half pound tomatoes, one half pound salt, one half pound brown sugar, one half pound seeded raisins, one fourth pound cayenne, one half pound powered ginger, two ounces each of garlic and shalots 3 quarts vinegar and one quart of lemon juice. Chop apples and tomatoes and add to them the other ingredients; mix all well together and put in a well covered jar. Keep in a warm place, and stir every day for a month taking care to cover tightly after each stirring strain but do not squeeze it. Store away in jars or bottles, the liquor bottled will also serve as an excellent sauce for meats and fish.

Now you have some recipe far more aged than you who will try them and I hope you will make a success of them, for each new victory is a star in the housewife's crown of joy.

Preserving Eggs in Water Glass

My article on preserving eggs has taken so well with the women in general and continued inquiries comnig in that I shall try to answer them all at once by thorough explaining the process.

What Water Glass Is

Water glass is a thick syrupy liquid used to preserve eggs and sells at about ten cents a pound. Water should first be boiled and cooled and then one pint of water glass to 8 quarts of boiled water mixed and put in a stone jar or clean freshly scalded wooden barrel and as the eggs are gathered each day they are put into this mixture, of course only clean eggs being used. The jar must be kept in a cool place. A gallon of the water-glass will make enough solution to cover forty to fifty dozen eggs and they'll keep a year if desired. Why sell your eggs for 12 cents a dozen (present price) when you can save them until winter (preserved at expense of about 1c a dozen, and sell them for forty cents.

Ask for commercial water glass when you go to buy as there is another kind very expensive. Letters are arriving fast and we feel enocuraged in this new department and hope each column will prove useful and beneficial

Essentials In Handling Your Cream

Have you provided a convenient system of heating a sufficient supply of water for use in washing the milk utensils Have you provided a way for cooling the cream and keeping it cool till it is sent to the creamery Both the above are very important factors and should not be carelessly neglected by any creamery patron.

Milk or cream handled or stored in poorly washed and unsanitary vessels will soon sour, develop bad flavors and will reach the creamery in such poor condition that it is impossible for it to be made into first class butter. The dairyman who sells this kind of cream is imposing a heavy tax on himself, as well as the good dairyman who handles his cream properly, by forcing the creamery to pay a lower price for his fat. Every dairyman should provide himself with milk pail and cans which are used for no other purpose than for handling milk. When through separating the cream all utensils used in handling the milk should be washed in warm water, then in hot water, using some good cleansing powder which does not contain any crease, then rinse them in water which is near boiling hot, and place them in the sun under screen from the flies. The separator should be taken apart and all parts which come in contact with the milk washed as above after each separation.

The best way to supply this hot water is by the use of a small upright boiler. When this cannot be had a good cheap water heating device may be built on the farm by taking a few brick or stone and building a small furnace under a shed beside the milk house. Make the grates of a coil of one inch water piping. This can be done by cutting the piping in short pieces and uniting these pieces with elbows. The pipe should run to and fro through the furnace four or six times and the two ends run through the wall of the wash room near the wash sink and into the side of a barrell (an ordinary molasses barrel) filled with clean water. When the fire is started in the furnace the heating of the water in the pipe will cause the water to circulate and soon the whole barrel of water will be hot. A faucet should be placed near the bottom of the barrel just over the sink for drawing out the hot water.

A good sink can be made by building a water tight box two feet wide four feet long and sixteen inches deep of two in board or by building a frame of above dimensions, lining it with tongue and grooved flooring, then with galvanized iron. Put a faucet near the bottom for drawing off the wash water.

The cream should be cooled as low as possible immediately after being separated and stored in a cool place. A dug well or a box through which water is pumped from the well three or four times daily makes a good place for storing the cream. Do not try to keep the cream longer than two days in warm weather.

Preserve Eggs Now For Winter Use-- A Most Desirable Poultry House

Timely Topic of Interest To All Poultry Keepers

The summer flood of fine big meaty eggs is arriving and every one can now afford to eat fresh "hen fruit" in abundance. But almost before we know it the fall and winter will be hand with egg prices soaring, and eggs of dependable quality hard to find in most markets.

Quotations fluctuate in accordance with the egg supply. They go up and down with great regularity, and one can predict with reasonable certainty what price will be demanded for good eggs during any given period.

The Cold Storage System.

During the spring months when feathered creatures both wild and domestic produce eggs in response to the breeding instinct, every hen becomes a producer. The output from the poultry flocks is then tremendous Consequently, prices break to the low level of the year. During the next few weeks eggs will be finer in quality and lower in price than for many months afterward. And a vast number of them will be placed in cold storage to be brought out an dsold when winter shuts off the supply of the sure-enough fresh article.

Now cold storage eggs of high quality are mighty good, both in body and flavor. And the cold storage system is a boon to both producer and consumer. steadying prices and affording a market for the former when the yield is highest, and assuring a supply of good eggs at reasonable prices for the latter when normal production is low. So cold storage eggs when sold as such, are all right. But it is not fair to either producer or consumer to unload such stock as "fresh laid," a practice that seems to be quite common.

Fortunately, one need not be dependent upon the storage operators for a supply of good winter eggs, at low prices. A supply of the fresh cheap eggs may be easily, inexpensively, successfully reserved at home by a very simple process. Thousands of people are regularly doing this: thousands more might profitably adopt the same plan.

The preservative is merely a solution of sodium silicate, comfonly called "water glass" which may be secured from most druggists and dealers in poultry supplies. Fresh eggs placed in the proper solution will remain in excellent condition for many month so good in appearance and flavor as to cause the average consumer to consider them absolutely fresh.

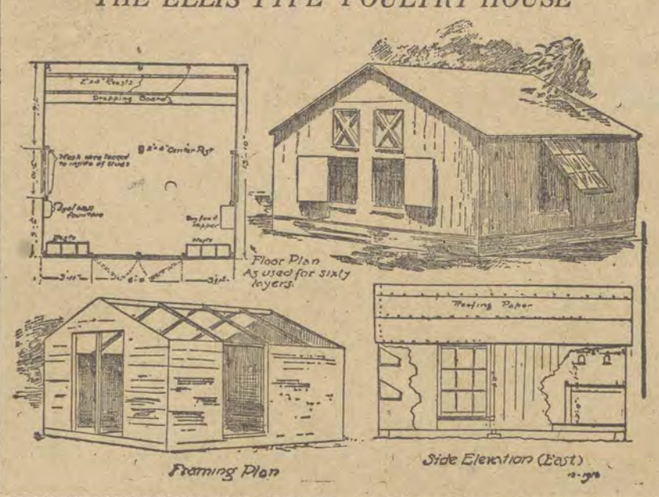
When purchasing water glass in the liquod form one should be certain that it is of the proper grade, as certain grades are too alkaline to give best results. Also, that it is in the right condition as it deteriorates unless carefully stored and under such conditions the resulting solution may not be entirely effective.

The preserving solution is made by adding one part by measure, of the water glass to nine parts of boiled water stirring vigorously to insure uniformity of the mixture. There is nothing troublesome or complex about this work. Any one can do it.

Select the eggs with care. Use none but fresh stock clean and with perfect shells. Eggs of doubtful quality will not be improved by the preserbative.

Putting The Eggs Down.

Place the eggs in clean receptacles of suitable size—earthenware crocks or jars are most commonly used—and pour the solution over them, covering the top layer to a depth of two or three inches. Cover closely and set in a reosonably cool place until needed. Examine occasionally to be sure that the liquid has not evaporated and left some eggs exposed to the air. Add more of the solution if necessary.



Or, if preferred the solution may be placed in the container and the eggs alded at intervals as secured. The latter plann is best for poultrykeepers who gather eggs daily ard for consumers who prefer to buy a few dozen at a time.

Test the scheme this season, if only in a small way. A half gallon of water glass of the quality is sufficient to preserve thirty dozen eggs.

Before boiling eggs which have been thus preserved prio ka few pin holes in the large end of the shells. Otherwise they will burst since the preservative tightly seals up the shell pores.

The general adoption of this money saving plan should work no harm to those who produce eggs on a commercial scale. There are never enough eggs to meet the winter demand, and consequently the price of the winter crop would not be affected. But it would afford an opportunity to build up a trade for fine spring eggs for home preservation at prices slight ly higher than could be secured through ordinary channels of trade.

THE ELLIS TYPE POULTRY HOUSE

The poultry house illustrated herewith was designed by Mr. R. P. Pitts an excepienced poultryman and writer on practical poultry subjects who is well known to most of our readers. This design is the product of evolution, perfected after several years of study and experimental work on the part of Mr. Ellis. It has been adopted by a very large number of successful poultrymen and seems to have given general satisfaction.

Those who require but a single building of relatively small capacity or prefer to divide their birds into comparatively moderate-sized families will find much merit in the Ellis plan.

The standard dimensions are as follows:

Lenth, fourteen feet.
Width, fourteen feet.
Height to ridge, seven feet.
Height side walls, four and one half feet.

The roof is even span, or A-shaped sloping to the sides.

Building materials:

Frame 2x4 inch.

Sides, roof and floor, tongue-and-groove North Carolina pine boards, six inches wide.

Roof, covered with two-ply prepared roofing, brought down under eaves to make a tight joint.

Doors and windows:

Two doors are placed in the front—south end—of the building. Each is three feet wide. These doors are simply substantial frames, covered with wire nettings divided into two panels by cross strips.

Each of the four panels is fitted with a cloth-covered frame hinged at the side and opening outward. This permits the attendant to regulate ventilation without entering the house, and also prevents the heavy accmulation of dust which is always to be noted on curtains which are swung up inside the house in the usual manner.

A window is placed in each side wall. 3 1-2 feet back from the front corner. Each sash is three feet wide and four feet high hinged at the top to swing outward. Under this arrangement it is possible to provide thorough cross-ventilation without permitting rain to beat in one the floor.

The windows openings are protected with wire netting, stapled to the inside of the studs which form the window frames.

The small hen doors may be cut at any place in the wall to give access to yards, when the latter are used. As a rule, these should be well toward the front of the building to prevent draughts, which are objectionable during many months of the year.

Furnishings:

The nests are attached to the front wall on either side of the front doors By placing these in tiers one above the other a sufficient number of nests may be provided in this convenient place to accommodate as many birds as may be quartered in the house.

The dry-feed hopper is hung on one side wall just adjoining the windows and the shelf for the water receptacle occupies a similar position on the opposite wall.

The droppings board, three feet wide, extends entirely across the house next to the rear wall. This is placed two feet above the floor.

Two roosts made of 2x4 inch pieces are placed above this platform. The rear roost should be at least ten inches from the wall and the other about eighteen inches further toward the front.

A single 24 inch stud extending from floor to ridge supports the roof. This is placed about midway from front to back of the building.

Earth or Board Floors.

The floor may be made of earth, filled in several inches above the ground level or of boards. Mr. Ellis strongly recommended the latter, not only as a protection against enemies but for sanitary reasons as well.

So much for construction. Now let us analyze this plan, point by point.

Appearance—As the drawing shows this house is attractive much more so than most "chicken coops."

Economy of Construction—Square in shape, it requires less building material than long, narrow houses having the same floor space. Being relatively small in size, it may be substantially built of light material. This refers to the frame.

Convenience—The building is planned to reduce labor to the minimum. Nests feed and water receptacles, which must be inspected often, are placed near the entrance. Doors and windows may be adjusted without entering the building.

Of course, the side walls are so low that a person of average height must stoop when approaching them, but there is ample headroom in the center of the building.

Comfort The Year Round.

Comfort for the Fowls—In every respect, the comfort of the birds is safeguarded.

The comparatively small cubic space insures snugness and conserves the body heat thrown off by the flock. The fowls roost well up toward the roof where the heat naturally goes.

The depth of the house and front ventilation during the winter months insures fresh air without exposure during cold weather. On the other hand the large side windows permit the admission of plenty of air during the heated term to prevent the building from becoming insufferably warm, as is usual in structures where such free ventilation cannot be provided.

Light and sunshine are admitted in abundance. There are few, if any, dark corners. The morning and afternoon sun pours through the side windows, while during midday it enters the great opening in front. Thus the fowls working hours are prolonged, a point of great moment during the season when nights are long and eggs are high in price.

Adaptability—This house can be put to many uses. Equipped with a coal-burning colony brooder to care for a large flock of chicks, or divided by low partition into six pens with small lamp-heated hovers, it makes a fine brooder house.

At weaning time the brooders may be removed and the chicks permitted to remain in their accustomed home until maturity.

As a laying house it will accommodate upward of fifty mature birds. In short, it can be used to advantage twelve months in the year.

Any poultryman who has a group of these Ellis houses can operate quite a plant without having any of his capital tied up in buildings which are of service but a few weeks each season nas is the case on many farms where special buildings are used for growing the young stock and left idle the rest of the time.

Mr. W. P. Talbot, manager of Tameny Hall, a fishing resort, Geneva Ala., writes: "I have tried Calomel, Quinine and other remedies for malaria and biliousness without effect; tried "Vega Cal" (vegetable calomel), which gave relief. Think it a God-send to the people." "Vega Cal" is sold and guaranteed by all drug stores, 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Cactus Has Its Place In Agriculture

A great many people have been asking about Spineless Cactus and so we believe that an article on it at this time would be interesting.

This article is not for the purpose of getting anyone to growing spineless cactus in a section to which it is not suited. It is pretty well demonstrated by this time that there is not much in planting spineless cactus where it is killed off every winter and has to be replanted in the spring.

Spineless cactus can be grown successfully in southern South Carolina, Southern Georgia, Southern Alabama, nearly all of Florida, many parts of southern Texas and in western Texas and on through New Mexico and Arizona to the California border. It will not thrive on damp land but grows best in a sandy soil and in a temperature that is generally satisfactory for citrus fruits.

+ +

The cactus is Nature's method of substituting for other things that Nature failed to give certain sections. In that parched, sandy country of the Southwest there is not much food for man or beast. And so Nature gave it the cactus, an "air plant," thriving almost entirely on what it gets from the atmosphere. How one plant can get so much real substance out of the air is one of those mysteries of Nature that we have not yet been able to unravel. But here in this sandy, parched country wild cactus thrives and the stock eat it, despite the thorns. Many of the ranchmen burn the "spines" off the cactus so that the cattle can eat it without lacerating their faces and their mouths. It had long been known that it is a good food for stock—if only there were no hard, flesh cutting thorns on it.

And so Luther Burbank, that wizard of plant life and development, got to working on it. In time he produced Spineless Cactus—a cactus without thorns and far heavier and jucier and more nutritious than the wild cactus; a cactus fruiting thick, succulent "slabs" and large and equally juicy "pears."

How Luther Burbank produced this remarkable plant, the Spineless Cactus, from its ugly, scrawny cousin, the wild cactus, we do not know—but he did it. It is really wonderful what you can do in plant breeding if you understand and love plants and have patience to work with them.

+ +

After Burbank had produced the Spineless Cactus, whose production on an acre of poor, sandy land was almost incredible, some people went wild on the subject. They thought that Spineless Cactus was going to revolutionize stock feeding and make a lot of money for every farmer who grew it. This "craze" was unfortunate for it so far overshot the mark as to do more harm than good. The first growers sold "slabs" for high prices and the other growers expected to sell "slabs" for the same high prices and

Farmer Complains of Individualism of His Fellow Farmers

In part they are true. The American farmer is an individual. He is his own boss. But this is true to some extent of all Americans. As a people we do not co-operate with each other. Each man has his opinions, and his own methods. Individualism is at once the strength and weakness of this country. It is its strength in that it leads to many brilliant and great achievements of individual men, working on their own initiative and spurred on by their ambitions. It is the weakness of America in that it prevents the close co-operation among business men and farmers that has made Gedmany such a wonderful and powerful country.

Individualism in our farmers must be accepted by those men working with them. You cannot break it down and it is doubtful if it would be well to break it down. But this individualism can be used by the good county farm demonstrator to arouse ambition and get one farmer to show other farmers by example, what can be accomplished in the raising of livestock, grains and forage crops.

May Be Agent's Fault.

If a county agent makes a failure in a county it is the fault of the agent and not the farmer. The agent may lack ability, he may lack diplomacy, he may lack that knack of mixing with men and making friends. The strong, hustling, likable count agent will generally find plenty of farmers to work with. One by one he can win over all the farmers in the county if he has patience and the friendly attitude. Farmers are the easiest people in the world to get on with if you meet them on their own ground. That is the first thing. If you meet a man on his own ground and get to know him and get him to know you and like you then you can work with him and accomplish things worth doing.

..But we now hasten to give you Farmer Fletcher's complaint of his fellow farmers not depending enough on the county farm demonstrators.

Mr. Fletcher's Complaint.

"Diversification of crops means the financial salvation of the Southern farmer, but he should go into it carefull and he should follow the advice of the government agricultural experts.

"The trouble with the average farmer is that he is too independent. He is, by the nature of his occupation, more or less isolated. On his own farm he is absolute boss. This has a tendency to make him a little intolerant of the opinions of others. He is inclined to think that the government experts cannot tell him anything that will be of value to him. The farmer must get rid of this idea if he hopes to enjoy the fullest measure of success."

Mr. Fletcher's remarks were caused by the case of a Pulaski county farmer who has lost a large number of hogs by cholera. Yet he declined the services of two expert veterinarians. He declined to have his hogs vaccinated with anti-cholera serum even though this would be furnished him at actual cost. He had not even buried the carcasses of the hogs that had died of cholera, even though hundreds of vultures and six dogs were feeding on the carcasses with the probability that they would scatter the disease over adjoining farms. He finally was induced to have his remaining hogs vaccinated and to buy the diseased carcasses but it was only after an argument, and the matter was one of no financial interest whatever to the men who were arguing with him.

"The trouble with that farmer is that he thinks he knoys all there is to know about farming," said Mr. Fletcher. He doesn't think these veterinarians can tell him anything, even though they have spent years in the study of diseases of hogs.

Advice of Experts Necessary.

"The same condition has interfered to a certain extent with the success of diversiged farming. Of course anyone can see the advantages of raising enough foodstuffs on the farm, but when you go to raising diversified crops to sell, then you need expert advice. You want to know whether your land is suitable for these diversified crops, and where you are going to find a market for them after you raise them. With these government experts ready to give their advice free at any time, isn't it good, common sense to consult them?

"There are many things to be considered. In raising hogs, for instance, the farmer should consider whether it pays him to slaughter enough hogs to furnish the side meat for himself and his employes, when he might have difficulty in selling the remaining portions of the hogs and the byproducts which he cannot use. He might find that he could make a greater profit by selling the hog because the packing house can use every portion of the hog.

Co-operation Necessary.

"Then there is the necessity of co-operation among farmers. Everyone knows that the most profitable way of selling hogs or cattle is in carload lots. Also, much better prices will be obtained if the carload is uniform in all respects. It might be impossible for any one farmer of a community to produce a carload of hogs or cattle that would be uniform, while if several combined they would have no trouble in doing this.

"But then, again, you run into the independence of the farmer. He is liable to feel that if he is going to sell his live stock he wants to do the dickering himself.

Farmer Should Keep Books.

"Then, again, the average farmer has no idea of what it costs him to produce a hog or a bale of cotton, or anything else. What would you think of one of your merchants if he sold goods without any idea of what they were costing him? You would be surprised if he didn't go bankrupt. Why isn't it just as important to the farmer that he should keep books as it is to the merchant But very few of them do. The only way the average farmer can tell whether he is making money is by the size of his bank account if he has one.

"Keeping books is dull and odious I have found that out for myself. But I have also found that it pays."

It has been figured out that losses to agriculture as a result of depredations of insects and rodents as $12 a year for each man, woman and child in the United States.

Congressman Exposes Cattle Marketing Methods

The following is the speech of Hon. Charles F. Reavis, of Nebraska, in the House of Representatives at Washington on the bill making appropriations for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in the general debate on this bill, but had desired to offer certain observations regarding sections when they were reached. The splendid and luminous address regarding the live-stock industry just delivered by the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. Stephens) has created a desire on my part to supplement his argument, and I therefore ask permission to speak a few minutes at this time.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the Underwood tariff law has opened our markets to the cattle of the world and that the American farmer is today competing with Canada, South America, Australia, and Mexico. That such competition has not been more ruinous than it has may be attributed to the European war and the consequent fact that most of Europe is consuming and not producing meat animals.

When the great nations of Europe shall cease writhing in blood and return to normal conditions we may except under existing tariff laws South America, Canada, Australia, and eventually Mexico to again ship their products to the American market in free and open competition with American products. The disaster that will follow such a condition is too apparent to require comment.

I have no desire, however to discuss the political aspect of the cattle industry at this time. I prefer to offer some purely domestic causes which contribute to the somewhat anomalous condition of the cattle feeder, suffering great losses in his business while receiving high prices for his product. I have listened with great impatience to statements which pretend to disclose the great riches being accumulated by the farmer. I wish it were true. The great difficulty suffered by those who bewail the high cost of farm and food products and because thereof assert that the farmers of the West are reaping more than their share of the financial harvest, is that they know nothing of which they speak.

We are prosperous, I am glad to tell you, but for every dollar we have received we have paid out 100 cents of labor. Every dollar you have paid us somewhat grudgingly and resentfully it would seem if we believe what we hear, has been paid for those things which sustain and make life happiner. There are no human tears on our money; nor is the stain of blood upon the wealth of the West.

We are prosperous, I am glad to say, but we could be more prosperous and sell our products for less money to the ultimate consumer if some modern method of marketing our product were devised and if legislation could be enacted that would prevent the four great packing concerns from further exploiting both the producer and the ultimate consumer.

I have had some experience in the cattle business and therefore know something regarding it. I know that the present method of marketing cattle is in the interest of the four great packing firms and the numerous middle men who handle the product between the farmer and the consumer. Let me give you an incident illustrating this fact.

Two years ago, I purchased two loads of yearlings on the Kansas City market. They had been raised on a farm in southern Kansas. Their owner had shipped them from Kansas to Kansas City and paid the freight on them. He put them in the stockyards at Kansas City and paid the yardage charges; he employed a commission firm to sell them for him, and paid the commission charges; a commission firm purchased them for me and I paid its charges; I shipped them to my feed lots in Nebraska, and paid the freight; I shipped them back to Kansas City as fat cattle several months later and paid the freight; I put them in the stockyards and paid the yardage charges; I placed them in the hands of a commission company for sale, and paid the commission charges; the buyer for Armour, who was, of course, paid a salary for such service, purchased them for his employer; Armour butchered and dressed the cattle and sold them at a profit; they were shipped as dressed beef back to my home city and the freight back to Nebraska was paid; the market at my home sold some of the steak to me at a profit, Thirteen middlemen made a profit out of my beefsteak between the producer and the ultimate consumer.

One cannot imagine a more antiquated method of marketing a product than is disclosed by the foregoing illustration.

Permit me to offer another incident that came under my immediate observation. A farmer in Richardson county, Nebraska, had a carload of good-quality shorthorn calves. He drove them eleven miles to a railroad town and shipped them to South Omaha to sell. He paid the freight to South Omaha; he put them in the stockyards and paid the yardage charges; he employed a commission firm to sell them, and paid the commission charges; another commission firm purchased them for a customer and earned and received its charges the purchaser shipped the claves to his home and paid the freight; and when the transaction was entirely complete it was found that the two farmers lived within a quarter of a mile of one another, and that the exchange could have been effected by driving the calves across a country road and the profits of five middlemen could have been saved.

The live-stock market of North and South America is controlled by four firms. Never a bid upon cattle can be obtained in South Omaha, St. Joseph, Kansas City, St. Louis, Sioux City, or Fort Worth until the representatives of these four packers in Chicago wire instructions. There is practically no local market any more. The farmers of the West are compelled to sell to these packers, because there is no other purchaser for their product.

Shameful manipulation of prices has been the inevitable result. I have known fat cattle to drop a dollar a hundred weight overnight.

The result has been severe loss to the cattle feeder, discouragement, fear, and sometimes utter ruin. I have known farmers who have toiled from the first flush of dawn until dark all through the blistering heat of the summer raising their crop. I have known them to wade in the snow and mud of their feed lots all through the winter feeding their crop to cattle and hogs and then sell them at the price arbitrarily fixed by the Packer's Trust, only to find the result of their year's labor absorbed by packers and middlemen and themselves still in debt to their local banker who had been carrying them through the year.

It is easy to anticipate the result of all this. Empty cattle sheds, grass land plowed up and planted to grain soil fertility reduced the production of cattle falling off 12 per cent. from 1900 to 1916, while the population was increasing 25 per cent, the ultimate consumer paying vastly more for his food, the farmer making either a loss or a greatly reduced profit, the four packers declaring dividends and resisting investigation.

This bill provides for a bureau of markets. Let the first duty of that bureau be to investigate the packers and report the facts to Congress, and then let Congress be courageous enough and patriotic enough to act at once on such facts. I think I know the facts now and am ready to act, but I want the information that vitally and intimately concerns every farmer in the West and every poor man of the East who has hungry mouths to feed made general to the members of this body that we may act intelligently and justly.

Among other remedies, which I must state briefly, would be cooperation and closer relations among the farmers. Let those who have stock and feeder cattle to sell dispose of them at home through public or private sale. By so doing the many middlemen are elliminated and the producer can sell for less money and receive a larger net profit, and the cattle feeder may put his feeders in the lot at less cost. Another means that would aid is the construction and operation of independent packing concerns. There is one in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and I have two in my district, one at Nebraska City and another at Lincoln. They are splendidly managed and, I am informed, profitable. I wish that every county in my district had such a plant, and I believe that capital would seek such investment if ample legal protection were insured against the assault and manipulation of the Packer's Trust.

In conclusion permit me to express my firm conviction that if we would change our present method of marketing, if we could bring about closer cooperation among the farmers, if we could have numerous independent packing companies and if we could have rigid laws, conscientiously enforced against the packers, the producer would make a fair profit out of his toil and investment, and the ultimate consumer would purchase his food products for less than he pays today.

Home Water Works Idea Spreads to Other States

With governors of four Southern states commending the Mississippi Home Water Works Campaign with inquiries fro magricultural college presidents, editors bankers, and commissioners of agriculture from many other states, this movement of the Mississippi A. and M. College and cooperating forces to get a supply of pure water piped into every farm home in the state is attracting national attention. This is the first organized campaign to get farmers to install waterworks ever attempted in any state and lower priced water systems have been worked out than were heretofore thought possible.

The state executives who have communicated their interest to Daniels Scoapes, agricultural engineer of the college, who is in charge of the campaign are Governor Park Trammell of Florida, Gov. Charles Henderson, of Alabama, Gov. George W. Hays, of Arkansas and the Governor of North Carolina.

"If I were asked to name what in my opinion is the most desired utility of modern life," said the governor of North Carolina, recently, "I would not name the railroad or the telephone, or the electric light or the automobile, essential as they are but I would name running water in the house. This conduces more to clealiness and health and comfort than any other improvement that modern civilization has brought us. It can be had, too, at little cost. There is not a farmer of moderate means who cannot have running water and sewerage in his home, and this would contribute more to the health and comfort of his family than any other improvement."

Governor Hays of Arkansas said: "This is indeed a very sanitary and commendable undertaking. There is nothing in my judgment that will add to the health of the people more than the use of pure water to say nothing of the convenience. I would be glad to see a system of this kind in every rural district in Arkansas. The time will come when such improvements will be indispensable.

GIRL HOMESTEADER

Miss Nettie Rogers, 18 years old of Mountain Home, Ark., has just filed a homestead claim on 160 acres of land on Flint Ridge and will engage in fruit raising and truck farming. The young woman is a recent graduate of the Monticello Agricultural school. She is one of the few women in the country who have shown the grit to cultivate a rought mountain tract.

However her homestead is easily adaptable to fruit and truck growing and Miss Rogers believes that what she learned at the Monticell school, sustained by the personal effort that she has determined to apply to the soil, will bring ample reward for her hard work.

SILAGE CROPS

Silage crops will probably be the basis of any cattle industry that amounts to anything in the South. There are a number of reasons for this, a principal one being that southern conditions are adapted to the production of large quantities of coarse forage.

No other means of winter feeding will enable the farmer to carry so many animals as silage. It is also a most excellent food stuff and all classes of catte thrive on it. It is by all odds the best food stuff to combine with the South's most available concentrate, cottonseed meal.

The two crops that stand out preeminently for silage production are corn and sorghum. As a general proposition sorghum will give considerably more tonnage than corn, but the quality of silage is not quite as good. Corn alone, however, often fires badly just about the time it is ready to go into the silo, and for this reason it does not make the best quality of silage. A combination of corn and sorghum gives an excellent quality and a fair tonnage. In planting the two crops it is well to alternate the rows, or possibly put in two rows of one and two rows of the other. The corn and sorghum can then be mixed in loading and in feeding to the cutter.

Kaffir corn may be substituted for corn in many sections where corn fires too badly on account of the thick planting necessary to get tonnage for silage. Kaffir corn is a drought resistant plant, does not fire badly, is not as juicy as the sorghum and combined with the sorghum, helps to improve the quality.

Legumes should not be put in the silo by themselves. The quality of the silage produced by legumes is not as good as corn or sorghum and it is especially undesirable for dairy cattle on account of the odor. Mixed in small quantities with corn and sorghum they do very well. It is usually better to grow legumes as hay and have them supplement corn and sorghum silage than it is to attempt to grow them with these crops and put them in the silo.

Doesn't This Inspire You to Want to Get Into This Work?

Such events as the one pictured here, and the work that follows them, are helping mightly to make Alabama a more productive State and a better one to live in.

This picture was taken at Montevallo, Alabama, where recently gathered sixty-six Canning Club girls from various parts of the State, fourteen County Home Demonstration Agents and a number of visitors.

Here the girls and women took expert courses in gardening and in canning and preserving vegetables, fruits and berries for home use and for sale.

More Girls Needed

Following the Montevallo meeting short courses in canning have been held in a number of the counties by the Canning Club Agents of the respective counties. Thus the home canning this season goes forward with more women and girls in it than ever before. But while the number is growing it needs to grow still more. Some counties are without Canning Club Agents and without canning clubs.

Many homes are without gardens and many homes have girls in them who do not know how to can and who are not interested in learning. What kind of wives these girls will make we cannot say but one thing is sure—they are not properly prepared for the duties of life.

Cold-Pack System

There are many mothers who have always canned for the winter and yet whose daughters have never learned anything about this most important work. Our mothers canned by the old-fashioned system. It was hot and hard work staying in a steaming hot kitcen cooking the products before they were put into mason jars to be put on the shelves for winter use. Now the work is far easier and simpler. The principle of the cold-pack system is to put the products in jars and cans and cook them after they are inside. This can be done in the open under the shade of the trees as you see in the above picture.

If you get in touch with your Canning Club Agent she will tell you and show you about the new cold-pack method. If you haven't any agent then if you will write to Miss Madge Reese at Auburn, Alabama, she will give you the information. Miss Reese is the director of the Canning Club work in Alabama.

Folks That We Need

This is a work that comes home to every family. Has your home got a garden and are you canning the surplus? This canning business is one that nearly every family can have a part in. One thing is certain, if we can get more girls into it we will build up a young womanhood that will be worth a whole lot to the State before many years.

The writer is one of these folks whose highest regard is for the women who is capable of taking care of a home—who knows something about gardening, who can sew and cook and can. Say what you please, these are the women who make the kind of a home worth living in.

This is an appeal to the mothers of Alabama and the girls of Alabama to get into this Cannifg Club and Home Economics work. It means so much to the individual family and it means so much to the continued growth and prosperity of our farms and towns.

Appeal To Merchants

And furthermore, it is an appeal to interest the grocers in our home canned products. We need to go to the merchants and talk to them about the importance of buying and selling fresh products that are canned and preserved here by our own girls and women. The merchants should consider these home-canned and home-preserved products first and should push the sale of them.

These products for the most part are put up right and they do not contain poison in the shape of benzoate of soda. A tremendous fight for pure food has been made in this country and much good has been brought about. But unfortunately the law still permits one-tenth of one per cent of benzoate of soda to be put in food products to "preserve" them. This benzoate of soda itself is a deadly poison, although it is claimed that one-tenth of one per cent will not poison the eater. However that may be, the use of benzoate of soda permits the food products man to put up decaying products and "preserve" them with benzoate of soda.

Don't Buy Them

Whenever you see any product that confesses to having benzoate of soda in it, refuse to buy it or serve it on your table. The only way to stop this practice of using benzoate of soda is to refuse to have any product that has got this poison in it.

Go to see your merchants and get them to handle the canned and preserved products that have been "put up" by our own girls and women. Let's create in this way a home market for home produced and home canned stuff. What's the use of sending off five hundred miles or more for these products when many of them are right here at home? Let's encourage these Canning Club women and girls by buying and using what they have to sell. It is a big work and it needs the cooperation of every buyer and seller.

Talk "Home canned products for home folks" wherever and whenever you can. This is the way to stimulate more production and better production at home and to keep some of our money at home for use back and forth among the home folks.

You can do your part. Will you?

Galloway Cattle--Shaggy Coated Polls, and Their Marbled Meat

Second and Last Article on Those Wild Days in Old England When Great, Fierce Cattle Roamed the Forests And Amazed Even The Roman Invaders Under Julius Caesar

BY LIEUTENANT COLONEL DAVID M'CRAE

The excellent value of the beef of the Galloway arises from two causes.

First, its marbled quality, the fat being laid amongst the lean giving it a well mixed, fine grain, highly flavored. There is no better or finer marbled beef in the world than that of a first-class Galloway.

Second, the tendency to lay their flesh and fat equally on the best parts. This is a most valuable point for the butcher. The animal that will give the largest amount of the best cuts is the one that makes the most money for the seller of the beef.

Like Buffalo Robes

The hides of the Galloway when taken at the right time in the fall, and properly tanned, make excellent robes, quite equal to the buffalo robes of the old days. This is becoming an important trade and a profitable one. Accustomed as the Galloway has been for generations to an outdoor life in a humid climate, he has an excellent coat of warm fur with a long wavy outside covering, and a short, thick, mossy hair beneath, making a beautiful robe.

For the north and northwest of our continent, where winter furs are so much needed, the Galloway offers an excellent winter covering. They make good serviceable coats and jackets, worn by both men and women—fur caps, robes for the cutter, and rugs for the dwelling. Seldom a pure black they are often a warm rich dark brown or a brown black, or vary in shade between the two. For this purpose brindled ones would be valuable, though now rather uncommon. The writer lately saw a fine brindled robe sold in Quebec for eighty dollars. The brown stripes across it were as clear as those of a tiger skin. At one time brindled animals were quite common, but since the fashion has set in for black, other colors have become rare. Other colors may be just as pure as the prevailing black.

The Galloway black is not a pure black. The calves when first dropped are usually a dark mahogany brown. The undercoat of fine hair often keeps this tinge which is clearly seen when the coat is being shed. A very deep black is more frequently found among half-breeds. The rich brown tinge is a good sign of purity of blood. Many families have more or less white on the udder, and a few white patches on the underline as well. Others have a few white hairs scattered through the hide, often not noticed, but the trait may run in a family for generations.

Belted cows are still met with, but are not now as common as they were in the early years of this century. Then there were whole herds of this belted race, which had a good reputation as milkers. One herd had marks—white face and white stripes on the back—like Hereford colors. Dun or light drabs are still met with, and reds are not unknown; but these are becoming more and more rare. Off color is no proof of want of purity of blood.

All Hornless

Galloways are all hornless. The universal testimony among old breeders of Galloways is that a pure bred Galloway never had any trace of horns or scurs. That there have been horned cattle bred in Galloway is well known for many years. Some farmers in this section bred horned cattle, both beef and dairy breed, and to outsiders this gave rise to the story that part of the Galloway cattle were horned, and part polled, but oral testimony handed down for many years, and that of men who lived among the cattle, confirm the statement that any trace of scurs was always taken as an indication of impure blood. None of the old breed of the pure Galloway ever had horns.

Very Hardy

Galloways are very hardy. The outside winter treatment in their native home has tended to this—with good warm hides they can withstand the blizzard of the northwest better than any other breed of improved cattle. The great muscular development is very useful on the western ranches, where they have to travel miles to gather their food, to or from water, or on the way to market. In the northwestern parts of this continent, Dakota, Montana, Idaho or the Canadian districts of Alberta and Assiniboia, they are found specially hardy and suitable for ranching purposes.

In the east, where strong vitality, and an active, hardy constitution is always valuable they are found doing well. In cold wintry weather they will be first out, scraping off the snow to get at the grasses below.

Their good coat of hair gives them special advantage in a cold or wet climate, and also serves to protect them in warm weather from the attacks of insects.

They acclimatize readily in the south and west, feed on a larger variety of plants than other breeds, and their courage and hardihood help them greatly among large herds. They can hold their own with almost any breed, and are seldom losers in a pitched battle. Then, as to transport, they can stand long journeys by road or rail better than most breeds, and can be packed like sheep without loss or injury. This gets them to the market with less shortage, and in better condition than other breeds. A few Galloways in a field with sheep make a good protection against dogs. They will attack the dogs and usually drive them quickly from the field. When alarmed in this way by dogs or wild animals they are very courageous, act in concert, form up in a crescent, and jointly attack in that formation, heads to the centre, and flanks gradually circling around. If inclosed in this circle it is usually bad for the dog.

Herd Book

Though the Galloways are the oldest of the pure breeds of British cattle their records are quite modern.

The type of the true Galloway should be the barrel form, rather than the square Short-horn type. Short legged, chunky, round animals are the best type—very large leggy animals are not desirable. A good medium size, quite attainable, is much better for the butcher. These latter may look small in the field beside their longer legged neighbors, but when tried on the scale the difference is often the other way. A good quality of meat, with well covered backs and ribs is what is wanted by the butcher. This the Galloways have, and therein excel all other breeds. As a hardy, handy, healthy breed, they have a first place among the modern breeds of beef cattle.

HOW TO GET RID OF WORMS IN HOGS

Intestinal worms are common in hogs and are particularly injurious to growing pigs. Insufficiently fed, neglected pigs living in dirty pens and yards, fed from filthy troughs, drinking contaminated water, bathing in old hog wallows, and rooting and sleeping in manure piles and stack bottoms soon become infested with worms; consequently they do not thrive, but develop into potbellied, rickety, profitless runts. Pens should be kept clean and dry and the manure frequently removed.

It has been asserted by various experienced feeders of hogs that a mixture of charcoal, ashes, lime, salt, sulphur, and copperas kept where the hogs can eat it will tend to prevent worm infestation. There is not as yet positive expgrimental evidence in support of the idea that such a mixture will prevent worm infestation, but the mixture does appear to satisfy the hog's desire for mineral substances and probably is of value as a tonic and appetizer. It may be made up in the following proportions.

Charcoal Mixture

Charcoal, 1 bushel.
Hardwood ashes, 1 bushel.
Salt, 8 pounds.
Air-slaked lime, 4 pounds.
Sulphur, 4 pounds.
Pulverized copperas, 2 pounds.

Mix the lime, salt, and sulphur thoroughly and then mix with the charcoal and ashes. Dissolve the copperas in two parts of hot water and sprinkle over the whole mass, mixing it thoroughly. Keep some of this mixture in a box before the hogs at all times, or place in a self-feeder.

Santonin, which was formerly widely used as a remedy for worms in hogs, is practically unobtainable at the present time owing to foreign trade conditions.

The following treatment has been found to be very effective against intestinal worms in experiments conducted by the Zoological Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry: Withhold all feed and water for 24 hours, then give each pig from 1 to 4 ounces of castor oil to which has been added oil of American wormseed as follows: Small pigs, 2 to 3 months old, 35 drops; pigs weighing 50 to 100 pounds 50 to 100 drops; larger pigs, 1 teaspoonful.

Each pig should be dosed separately if the best results are to be obtained.

Drenching hogs is dangerous, as they are liable to get the remedy into the lungs. With sufficient assistance pigs may be held, the mouth kept open by means of a couple of loops of wire or rope, and the medicine given directly in a tablespoon. By this method, though it is troublesome, one may be certain that each pig gets his proper dose. After dosing, the pigs may be fed and watered. Repeat the treatment in 10 days.

Why Can't Your Town Do What This Community Did?

Why can't your community do what a town in Kansas has done?

Surely Kansas people are no more cleanly than you are?

Surely Kansas people are not ahead of us in cleaning up and making a community attractive and healthy.

The town of Bolton in Kansas has just made itself a "spotless town."

In a single day it was washed, rinsed and hung on the line to dry. Men, women and all the children who were able to leave their school work joined in the movement. For weeks big placards announcing the fact that Holton was to "clean house" had adorned the downtown windows. Civic organizations talked it, the schools taught it and the newspapers boosted it. No Fourth of July celebration ever surpassed it in enthusiasm.

The work of cleaning the streets and yards was superintendented by the chief of the fire department, the conty health officer and the Business Men's Association. They conceived the idea of doing in one day what the citizens of many towns plan to accomplish in a week. Three hundred people met in the public square at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. After a short parade aroun dthe town's main streets a picture of the marchers was taken and they started in on the big task.

All of the workers formed a circle As they worked they expanded. The circle grew larger and larger, and each was restricted to his own district. If one worker came upon a home where the owner was at work cleaning his making tidy his flower beds and sidewalks, the worker was to pass that up and go to the next yard in his course. But the party of the city over which each cleaner passed was not passed by without being made trashless.

As the night approached reports began reaching the headquarters of the Business Men's Association that the workers were finishing their districts. At 6:30 o'clock every person engaged had reported his part finished, and the mayor and health officer declared not one bit of rubbish remained in the town.

The 300 people who reported for work in the morning and stuck diligently to their task all day were not the only ones who put their shoulder to the wheel. Many house owners worked all day on their own premises and a number of them had their places thoroughly cleaned before the advance guard of "clean up" workers reached them. The town of Halton announces there is no copyright on their idea and that any other place is at liberty to use the plan.

How to Feed Your Pigeons

By Dr. C. H. Burden, Pigeon B reeder

Note—Dr. C. H. Burden is one of the most successful pigeon breeders that the South has produced. His articles should be of real help and value to our readers who have begun or want to begin raising pigeons for profit. Dr. Burden will be glad to help you in any way and answer any questions. Address Dr. C. H. Burden, Pigeon Editor, Farm and Imigration, Montgomery, Alabama

The feeding of pigeons is a question that has puzzled many of not only the beginners but the best breeders to a great extent.

It is necessary to make a study of the feeding of anything to make a success, and with a careful understanding of the food values of the grains that constitute a feed you are in a better position to get the best results from your birds.

I would not advise the beginner with no knowledge of the food values to try mixing his feed as he can buy a good ready mixed feed at almost the price he can secure the different ingredients and mix for himself.

Care Necessary

The feeding of pigeons is simple and there are only a very few feeds that are necessary for the welfare of pigeons. Many people make the mistake of buying birds and feeding them the low grades of chicken feed on the market and expect to get the best results from them. They will not give you the best results from this feed and pigeons require a better feed than the cracked feed sold for chickens. Never Feed Pigeons Cracked Grains of any Kind. These birds are the most heartly of all feathered creatures. The old breeders will stand most any kind of treatment with but little bad luck, but there are the small squabs to consider when you are feeding your breeders. These little fellows are very tender and will not be able to properly care for an inferior grade of feed and for their sake it is necessary to be sure that your feed is good, clean and sound for if it is not sound the trouble, will be in your squabs.

Good Combinations

Three or four kinds of grain are all that is absolutely necessary to feed pigeons but be careful to see that this is of the best quality. This point cannot be emphasized too much. In order to help those who have not made a study of the feeding of these birds I wish to give a few formulas that contain about the right proportion of the food values, also specify grains that can be substituted for the different kinds mentioned in these formulas. Here are some of the combinations of cheap grains that you can depend upon to give fally good results and which can be secured in most any section of the country at a reasonable price.

Kafir Corn 6 parts, Whole Yellow Corn 8 parts, Wheat 5 parts, Canada Peas 4 parts.

Or

Buckwheat 2 parts, Kafir Corn 6 parts Whole Yellow Corn 8 parts, Canada Peas 4 parts.

Millet, hemp or sunflower seed can be added to either of the above combinations in portions of one part to five parts wheat and 8 parts corn. Milo Maize or Federita is practically the same in food value as Kafir Corn and either of them can be substituted when desired, or as the market prices change. All three of these are splendid pigeon feeds and birds should be given all they will eat of them. If Canada peas are not available or are too expensive then the cow pea can be substituted, while they do not like the cow pea as well as they do the Canada pea.

Peanuts Good Too

Quite often birds have to be taught to eat different grains and if tney are given a few grains each day they soon begin to eat them and will relish them as well after ehey have learned them as most any of the grains offered for feeding pigeons. Peanuts are a splendid feed for pigeons especially where you wish to market squabs for they put the fat on them and with the peanut industry growing so much in the South these nuts will become a portion of all feed and is an excellent ingredient for your mix. Pigeons will have to be taught to eat these also for they will not eat them at first and to feed them too much at first means a waste.

Proportions Of Feeds

Your pigeons in a large degree will act as a barometer so to speak as to the proper proportion of wheat, kafir corn and corn provided you notice which one of these grains are left in the feeders in the largest quanity. Pigeons when hungry will eat all the wheat, corn or kafir corn they can get but will first eat these grains in the proportion they should have them. This is also true of millet, buckwheat and sunflower seed but is not true with hemp, peas or peanuts as pigeons will eat more of these than is good for them until they get stalled by an over supply of rich blood and then they slow up in their work or are practically unproductive.

Change The Feeds

A good practice while feeding a small assortment of these grains is to change the combination slightly each week. Birds get tired of the same feed and a change is good for them as well as for other animals. You would not think of feeding your horse the same feed from day today, neither should you consider the feeding of your birds the same feed from week to week.

Corn is the one grain that contains the largest per cent of the different food values necessary for pigeons. Kafir Corn, Feterita and Milo Maize contain about the same food values as corn. Each of these grains contains almost a blanced food and should be the basis of all pigeon feeds. But they should not be fed exclusively for any length of time but can be fed for a few days without any bad results. They are not quite rich enough in the protein constituent and this should be obtained in your peas, hemp, or peanuts.

Where To Feed Pigeons

As stated in above article it is absolutely necessary that pigeon feed should be sound and pure. After you secure the right feed then it is necessary that you keep it right. In order to do this it is necessary to place feed in automatic feeders so that it will not be fouled with droppings or get wet and musty in damp weather. Do not under any consideration throw feed in the fly or on the floor of your breeding pen or place in open troughs for you will have trouble as sure as you do. Place enough feed in the automatic feeder to last all day and go about your work and you know that your birds are getting what they want.

Measuring And Estimating Helps

A bushel of well settled ear corn contains 3888 cubic inches. To find the number of bushels of corn in a crib it is therefore necessary merely to multiply together the length, width and height in inches and divide the product by 3888. If the sides of the crib are slanting it will be necessary to multiply together one half the sum of the top and bottom widths, the height and length.

Estimating Hay.

Hay is often sold in the mow or stack where the weight has to be estimated For this purpose 400 cubic feet of hay is considered a ton. The actual weight of 400 cubic feet of hay will vary according to the quality of the hay, time of cutting, position in the mow, etc. For making an estimate in a given case multiply together the length breadth and height of the mow or stack in feet and divide the product by 400. The quotient will be the number of tons.

Grain Estimates.

A wagon box ten feet long, three feet wide and 24 inches deep will hold 24 bushels of loose ear corn or 48 bushels of shelled corn or grain. A bushel or loose ear corn occupies about two and a half cubic feet.

A crib 10 feet wide, 10 feet high and 16 feet long will hold 711 bushels of ear corn. Of ear corn well settled in the crib one bushel is contained in two and a quarter cubic feet. In figuring shelled corn and grain, the same space will hold one four-fifths times as much grain as it will of well settled ear corn. A crib that will hold 800 bushels of ear corn will hold of shelled corn or other grain 1,440 bushels.

Weights for Barn Use.

Frequently you may wish to use a given weight of this that or the other feed and have no scales at hand to weigh it. If you have a quart measure handy, you can use it to measure out the required weight. The quart weight of various feeds is as follows.

Cotton seed meal 1.5 pounds.
Linseed meal, old process 1.1 pound
Gluten meal 1.7 pounds.
Glueten feed 1.2 pounds
Wheat bran, co arse .5 pounds.
Wheat, middling coarse 8 pounds.
Wheat middling fine 1.1 pounds.
Mixed wheat feed .6 pounds.
Cornmeal 1.5 pounds.
Ooats 1.2 pounds.
Rye bran .6 pounds.

Flower Boxes a Cure For Tired Nerves

Not the country woman alone feels the petty round of irritating concerns and duties of the day.

It is the same monotonous routine for her town cousin and she has found nothing so resiful to jaded nerves as her flower boxes.

Upstairs over a tiny roof, where the sun burns like a "heart of fire," she painted a garden.

A few feet of flooring was laid and the balustrade, already there, supported the boxes and a few discarded kitchen utensils, excellent jardinieres on account of the iron rust.

A dishpan, holding nasturtiums and jinnias, is converted into a thing of beauty, and a leaky water filter of blue stone is filled with petunias, each vieing with the other in color and multitudinous bloom. The boxes contain purple and scarlet verbena, which thrive wonderfully in all their glowing radiance, and Shasta daisies lift their yellow eyes to greet the Father Sun.

Over the window morning glory vines lend freshness and charm. A bit of sky then seem entangled there in masses of blue blossoms. Watering each day is the only attention needful and certainly one is repaid by the simple task.

In the early hours of morning and at eventide the "Town Cousin" enjoys her "rest hour" there among the humming birds, bees and butterflies that sip from the tiny cups that Nature has provided. Soft breezes cool the air when the God of the Winds sees fit to waft them, and in this sanctuary she may commune with heaven and her own soul, returning to the world afterwards with new poise and new calmness.

A REWARD IS OFFERED FOR DEMOCRATIC PARTY

If you Happen to Learn of Its Whereabouts, Notify the Writer of the Following:

Clanton, Ala., July 11, 1916.

Lost, strayed, kidnapped or stolen—the grand old Democratic party. The last seen of it was on or about the 9th day of May, 1916. And it is suspected that the Republicans, Progressives, Socialist-Independents, or some other crowd in this county has now in their possession the said old party, and a liberal reward will be paid for the recovery of same. Looking to this end there will be a great meeting of all citizens at the courthouse next Saturday, and everybody is invited to come—negroes and all. It makes no difference whether you can vote or not, come, and if you can help the Democrats locate their old party, you will receive a liberal reward for same.

I see a few have signed a petition asking everybody to come to help nominate a full ticket, and the Democrats have called everybody to come and help them nominate a candidate for Probate Judge in Adams' place. I suppose the call was not made with any understanding between the two parties, but just happened to set the same time and place.

I do not exactly know what the reward will be, but it might be a nomination on the Democratic ticket, and an overwhelming defeat in November. The Democrats have got their business in a shape that they do not know where they are at themselves. The party tried to put up the bars so high two years ago that none of their crowd would get away, but somehow they have jumped the fence and have gone. They were satisfied the Democrats would leave their party like rats getting away from a sinking ship, when they saw what they would do when they had a chance in office.

We are in anice fix—all our money gone and every warrant issued that the constitution will permit. We have gone to the limit. The Treasurer has refused to register another warrant. Bridges washed away, and no money and no credit to build them back. Roads all over the county are out of business, and we farmers will have to do our own work on roads and still pay big taxes.

When I think of the condition the Democrats hav gotten this county in, it is no wonder they have to call everybody together and get some one to be the goat.

Repectfully,
M. F. LETT.

PASSING OBSERVATIONS ABOUT CHILTON POLITICS

With Special Attention To Recent Capers of the Democratic Party "High hosses."

Jemison, Ala., July 10, 1916.

Editor Union-Banner:

I just cannot keep still, for there are so many things happening. Rain, rain, politics galore, Republicans and Progressives together, united for Hughes for president. And this means prosperity in the future, and that we will only have to wear our old patched clothes a little over a year longer.

Well haven't the poor Democrats gotten themselves in a mess? They have even embarassed us Republicans over their awful condition.

The Press some time ago referred to us Progressives and Republicans trying to get together, but the Democrats have lost their candidate and their party also.

I see a call signed by one J. J. Pickens and G. C. Walker, Chairman and Secretary of the Democratic party, asking all the citizens of this county to meet at the courthouse next Saturday at 10:00 o'clock. They invite every citizen, regardless of color; it makes no difference whether he can vote or not, but they want everybody to come. They need help. They want someone to help pull them out of the hole. They want advice, and they especially mention Republicans, Progressives, Socialists, and Independents. My, what a fix they are in! You know when one party has to depend on other parties to elect their ticket for them, they are up against it, and they sure need sympathy and votes. But I wonder if the people of Chilton County can see the deception there is in the Democratic party. They have nominated all the state officers, they have no inducement to offer to the voters except to help them nominate a Probate Judge—one that they can control. And they now beg for help or they perish. I wonder if they are the same crowd that two years ago was calling their committee the second time to put up the bars, and did say that no Progressive, no Republican, and no Socialist should come into their primary and help nominate a state ticket, but now they have had their feat and they have nothing to give out but only want help, and they are running over themselves to get someone to help them.

I see there is another call signed by a few asking for everybody to come to Clanton, and at the same time the Democrats have called, but this is to nominate a full ticket, and I expect some sign it in good faith wanting to put out a full ticket, but I rather think the parties that go up his call had an undersanding with the Democrats to call both meetings at the same time, with the hope of selling out to the Democrats the little crowd. The leaders of both crowds have been mighty close together of late, and I expect both calls was made up by the same parties and for the same purpose.

This trick is about twenty1five years late. There has been a time when it would work but not now. The old courthouse tricks have passed away and all things have become new.

We remember what happened six years ago. Democrats went over the county and said elect us and we will reduce taxes, we will stand by the people, we will hear their cries, we will do their bidding. But Oh, how was the promise kept? Taxes being raised on every hand.

A special committee of three is being sent out in automobiles and are paid $6.00 per day to burn the woods and sift the ashes for more taxes. The people who here solicited to vote for Democrats have met time after time in the courthouse and begged and pleaded for their rights to be respected, but no attention was paid to them. They were insulted and told to go home, that "we are the bosses who are running the county affairs" and that it was none of their business.

Well, when I see these calls, I remember that one of the signers has been here only a short time from north Alabama and the other from Coosa County, and when they get acquainted with the conditions, they will know more that they do now.

In conclusion, I want to ask has the Democratic party lost all of its old principles? What could the crowd stand for that is called to meet at the courthouse? Democrats, Republicans Socialists, Progressives, Independents Negroes, Anarchists, and every other kind of a person in the county are invited to take part; no restrictions. Well I suppose the only thing court house click wants is to help them elect a man that they can control, and continue to wrench blood and money from the people, and fill their own pockets.

We will watch the meeting and see if my prediction is not true, and see if the sale is not made.

WHAT ABOUT NAMES SIGNED TO THAT CALL?

Did Somebody Formulate a Listof Signatures and Use them Without Any authority?

The above questions are asked in regard to the mass meeting which is called to meet here Saturday to nominate some kind of a full ticket for county officers, or anything else that might be decided upon to be performed.

For the answers to these questions we commend your attention to the two letters published below. You can read them and form your own ideas as to the matter.

The first is a letter from Mr. J. B. Northcutt of Jemison, to Judge Reynolds, and the second isthe reply of Judge Reynolds to the former.

Mr. Honeycutt's Letter.

Jemison, Ala., July 9, 1916.

"Mr. L. H. Reynolds,

"Dear Sir:

I notice in last week's paper a call for a meeting Saturday, the 15th, and quite a number of names were in the articeue, including my own, without my knowledge or consent. Could you find out who put that in, and what does it mean? I find some names in the article that don't even vote, and several others that did not know about the matter until they read the article.

Respectbully, yours,
J. B. NORTHCUTT."

Judge Reynold's Reply.

"Mr. J. B.: Northcutt,
Jemison, Ala.,

"Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of the 9th, asking me to find out who filed the list in the Union-Banner calling a mass meeting here for the 15th, in which you state that you never signed such a call, and that your name was signed to the call without your knowledge or consent, I will say that Mr. Mack Wyatt, Editor of the Union-Banner, says Mr. L. B. Pounds filed the list, and that Mr. Pounds said Mr. J. B. Downs paid for the call being published.

"I am glad to find out that you and your neighbors had nothing to do with this call, for it was gotten up to fool some people to get them here under false colors, pretending to nominate a ticket, but the real purpose it seems is to get a crowd here, and then if possible deliver them to the Democratic party.

"If you notice, you will see that the Democrats have a call at the same time and place for the purpose of filling the vacancy on their ticket. It does not look reasonable that this would have happened, unless there had been some understanding between the parties getting up the calls.

"Say to your friends up there that I appreciate the support you all have given to our party in the past, and I hope you will continue to do what you can, and that you will this fall put the county affairs back in the hands of the people.

"The opposition is awfully pressed for votes. They are calling from all sources. The cry for help has gone forth, and from what you say, they have forged peoples' names to articles to make any show at all.

With best wishes, I am,

Back in the Spring there were some advocates in Chilton County of the movement to get the people all together in some party. And judging from the vote cast for Reynolds, the effort succeeded pretty well. But what the past efforts lacked uniting all the voters, the meeting here next Saturday will finish. You will see the final result in the election of Judge Reynolds in November.

While the Clanton Press is raising such a fuss about people being Republicans, and wanting them to be Democrats, we would like to drop a ilttle thought. If a fellow really did want to be a Democrat in Chilton County, what could they offer him? All they could do would be to blind fold him so he could not see their snares and tricks, and set him a straddle of the fence to listen to bonehead inharmonious music of the Clanton Press.

POLITICAL DISCRIMINATION

If we had accused the Democratic officials of such administration of the affairs of their offices as the Clanton Press last week openly and voluntarily accredited to them, we have no idea how long and how loud they would have howled and growled and squealed about it.

We would not dare accuse any official of Chilton County of discriminating against his political opponents in dealing with our citizens. We did not suppose there were any Judges, solicitors, clerks, etc., even tho' they were Democrats, who would give a Republican in Chilton County an unfair deal, just because he was a political opponent. We know there is not a Republican official who would discriminate against a Democrat because he was different in politics.

But here is what the Clanton Press said:

"It is lamentably true that the teachings of the Banner would continue having a majority of its citizenship refrain from taking a vital part in their courts, where last week they were, through their duly elected Democratic officials, trying the cases in which the settlement would influence, for weal or woe, every man, woman or child of the county. A Democratic Judge and a Democratic Solicitor are performing this function; they have and will continue to perform it; yet our contemporary's position, boiled down is this: The question of bread, of property, of liberty, of life and death themselves must be subordinated to the giving of county office to a few men. We claim, and shall continue to claim, that these questions are all in the hands of Democratic officials, regardless of which way Chilton's vote is cast."

Now, what can you get from the above assertion, but that the Press says you will not get full, fair and impartial treatment in our courts, unless you are a Democrat?

Doesn't it just tell you in plain words that the Democratic Judge and Solicitor have your destiny in their hands, and unless you come up to the lick log and support the Democratic ticket, they will turn the tables against you—just because you are not a Democrat?

The Press is telling this kind of a tale, thinking it will frighten someone into voting their way, in order to save himself before the Democratic court.

But we want to tell the Press a thing or two about ChiltonCounty's voters right along here, for it evidently does not know anything about them.

Chilton County Republicans are men, not mercenaries. They are going to vote against the methods of Democracy that has been demonstrated to them in this county, and be hanged to your Democratic Judges and Democratic Solicitors, who you say will be impartial to us, if we oppose them at the polls.

Let them be impartial if they wish to be. That is with them and their God.

We, as Republicans, have convictions, and will stand by them and declare them unshamed and unafraid so long as we please.

No wonder you try to frighten us into the Democratic party. There is nothing in the thing to cause a man to want to get into it; so you either have to drive him in and put up the pars so he can't get out, or else catch him and tie him so he can't get away.

REPAIRING THE DAMAGE

Although the damage done to the roads does not seem to be as extensive as was first represented and thought by many, yet it is very clear that a rather big task rests on the county in the execution of repairs.

Everyone has by this time come into a clear knowledge of the extent of the damages, and knows what must be done in order to mend the breaks that exist.

The roads need to be fixed now. Bridges ought to be restored immediately, as under present conditions, our traffic is greatly hampered.

From an interview with Judge Deason, we learn that the Commissioners have the situation well in hand, and are making special efforts to relieve the conditions at the very earliest possible time.

It is commendable in the road overseers of the county to gather their hands and get them to work on the bad places, washouts and bridges. Judge Deason informed us that the citizens of the county are going to co-operate earnestly with the road officials in the repair of the destruction of the floods of water. These citizens are rendering valuable services to themselves and the county in this volunteer aid work. It means the getting of some bad place repaired right now, that might not be fixed for days or weeks otherwise. And then too our citizens are proud to render patriotic aid to the county in time of need.

Our Commissioners and road officials will repair the damage as fast as they possibly can, and with the volunteer assistance of the citizens, it is possible that only a few days will be required to restore the broken links in our roads and highways, so that our traffic may be resumed fully and completely to all parts of the county.

"DISFRANCHISED"

Yes, disfranchised! That is what they said last week was the vital issue of this campaign—the fact that when a man votes a Republican ticket he is disfranchising himself.

Let us show you how utterly void of logic and principle is this theory of disfranchisement.

We grant that the man who votes the Republican ticket here may not have the privilege of voting for every officer in the state. Probably there will be some vague and insignificant Judgeship that the Democrats have uselessly created, which there would be no candidate for.

But if there should be, why should a Republican go back on his belief in the principles of his party just because there is not a full ticket to be voted for? Is that any reason for abandoning your convictions?

Will the Democrats of Chilton abandon what they claim as their party prestige because they have not got a full ticket to vote for?

If they will, we say they are mighty sorry Democrats, and their party principles are not very solid.

And when you come to think of it, that is what they seem to have done. They are now seeking a vantage point wherever they may be allowed to harbor.

A man of any sense and reason at all knows that an honest voter will vote for his party convictions, even if there were only one man in the race.

If you want a man to vote for you as an officer, you have got to give him "value received," in the way of honest and efficient administration of the duties entrusted to you. If you don't deliver the goods, he will be voting for somebody else next time, and you will be like the Chilton county Democrats—ont of a house and home, and trying to force somebody to vote for you; they will not do it voluntarily. And most surely, you will make slow progress gathering in ballots, if you go out and say that if you don't vote for us, that Democratic Judge and Solicitor won't give you justice in court.

If the Democratic officials in our courts are using partiality in dealing with our citizens as the Clanton Press says they are, isn't it a poor argument to get men to vote the Democratic ticket? Doesn't anybody know better than to try to force voters to vote any certain way? Don't you know that men of Chilton are too much men of conviction and principle to be scared into voting the Democratic ticket by the Clanton Press saying that they can't get what is justly coming to them from a Democratic Judge and solicitor unless they are Democrats?

The vital issue they say is disfranchisement. We suppose that in campaigning for office as well as executing the duties thereof, they fail to recognize that good interests and welfare of the people as an issue. Democrats remember the people who voted for them only till they get in the office.

And now, what have you got to say about the letter which Mr. Northcutt writes to Judge Reynolds? Do you reckon somebody did just fix up all that call for a mass meeting, and sign those names to it without the knowledge or consent of the parties like they did Mr. Northcutt's? Well, maybe they will explain all this when they get here Saturday.

The Democrats, who have recently picked up so much courage and seen such bright prospects for their party, must have taken a look back at the vote which Reynolds got in May—170 more than all five of the other candidates, Democrats, Pounds, Jack Jennings to boot. Yes, no wonder they are so lately encouraged.

Come on up, Brother Pounds, and let's see what you are goin to do with them this time. They have stolen another plank, (and the very newest one) out of your platform. See, the Clanton Press has come out on this stipulated salary business for the Probate Judge.

The Democrats are going to try a new punchin in in the future, according to Pickens' circular. He says they are going to oppose ring rule for a while, and see if they can't do better. They ought to change. They have gone "busted" by practicing such methods.

It would be a nice one if that fellow should slip up the stairway again next Saturday and find the "Democratic party," present it to the view of the people and capture Mr. Lett's reward which he is offering this week.

The Democrats say prospects were never brighter for the success of the party. Land sakes alive! That is some 'mount of faith, nerve, gall, brass, or something or other.

Yes, give the ballot to the people of Chilton, if you think they are disfranchised; four out of every five you give it to will vote for the Republican ticket in November.

The Democrats are going to kill the prodigal here on Saturday. The fatted calf is coming home.

Methodist Clergyman's Wife Says Ferraline Cured Her.

Says she suffered until Life was a Torture, to be borne with Fortitude. Prayers Answered

Everyone in Chatom, Ala., the county seat of Washington county, knows Mrs. Martha Pelham, wife of Rev. J. A. Pelham, deceased, who was beloved by all and widely known throughout the state of Alabama.

Mrs. Pelham says that the first bottle of "Ferraline" did her a warld of good, that she began to improve after the first dose.

"No one knows what it was to suffer, and at the same time try to bear up under it patiently, more than I," said Mrs. Martha Pelham to a representative of the Franklin Medicine Company, Inc.

"There was times fhen the distressing condition of my system was all that I could bear, so it seemed to me, and I prayed for relief, if it be the will of the Almighty that I get well.

'My health has been failing me for a long time, gradually getting worse. Physicians told me I had Dyspepsia or indigestion, but the prescroptions I filled gave me only temporary relief.

"I had to be exceedingly careful at all the time of what I ate.

"From the earliest stages of my sickness it seemed that everything I ate fermented with gas, and would not digest. I would have that tight, uncomfortable feeling, followed by depression. I had no appetite and frequnet headaches, pain in my back, heartburn and palpitation of the heart to the extent that I often thought I would die. These conditions became intense, resulting in cholic and acute indigestion.

'For months past I have spent most of my time in bed, as my friends and neighbors know. I prayed earnestly all the time, and I felt that my prayers would be answered, if it be the will of God that I find relief.

"One day a neighbor came to see me and told me that she thought if I mould try "Ferraline" she believed it would help me, and from the way she told about "Ferraline" I felt that I would be benefited.

"Before I had taken the first bottle I was so mush improved that I was able to leave my bed.

"I now eat anything I want, which is something I have not been able to do in years. I have gained strength and weight, and lead an active life again.

"'Ferraline' is a wonderful medicine and I heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with stomach trouble."

CAN NOW SLEEP AND EAT AS NEVER BEFORE

"This is the first medicine I have ever taken that really does just what they say it will do," said J. F. Holley, a well known Lexington, Ky., man.

"I haven't felt like a well man for ten weeks past a nd my whole system seemed to be run-down and debilitated. I could not sleep at night and would feel just as tired in the morning as I did upon going to bed at night. My digestion became affected and I couldn't eat. Attacks of headache were frequent and my nervous system seemed to be all disordered.

"My worse trouble, however, was rheumatism. The doctors said I suffered from what is known as Muscular rheumatism. My muscles seemed as if they were tied up in a knct.

"I couldn't use my right arm and I was just about helpless. Somebody persuaded me to try Tanlac and I got a bottle of that medicine. Tanlac is certainly making a new man out of me. I can now sleep and eat like I haven't been able to do in years. My rheumatism is all gone and I feel strong and built up in every way. I am a well man and I certainly thank the friend who suggested my using this remarkable medicine."

J. B. Woodward, another Lexington man, who lives at 256 Rand Avenue of that city, said:

"I suffered from stomach trouble, rheumatism and neuralgia for years. Before I took this medicine I actually could not raise my left hand to my head. It had been that way for fully two years.

"I have used Tanlac for about two or three weeks now and I am like a new man. My family and my friends see the difference and it is the actual truth. I take great pleasure in recommending this medicine, Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in Clanton exclusively by Upchurch Drug Co.

"Cured"

Mrs. Jay McGee, of Stephenville, Texas, writes: "For nine (9) years, I suffered with womanly trouble. I had terrible headaches, and pains in my back, etc. It seemed as if I would die, I suffered so. At last, I decided to try Cardui, the woman's tonic, and it helped me right away. The full treatment not only helped me, but it cured me."

THE UNION-BANNER

VOLUME V. CLANTON, ALABAMA, JULY 20, 1916. NUMBER 16.

EASTERN STATES GREATLY DAMAGED BY RAINSTORMS

North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and West Virginia all suffered heavy damage from the overflowing streams, swollen by torrential rains which followed last week's hurrican as it swept inland from the coast, but the heaviest loss was in North Carolina, where 11 of the 15 deaths are reported and where two-thirds of the material damage was done.

With unprecedentedly highwaters sweeping down from the mountains regions and with many streams already out of banks, South Carolina Monday night was in the midst of what it is feared here may prove one of the most distructive floods in its history.

Flood warnings sent out by the weather bureau predicted a stage of 40 to 45 feet on the Wateree at Camden, while the Pee Dee system also is threatening to reach almost unprecedented heights. The Congaree here has reached its crest and is expected to go no higher.

Damage to property has been heavy but so far as is known there has been no loss of life. Power plants, bridges, railroad construction and low lying farms have suffered most from the high water.

Reports of damage came tonight from all sections except the Pee Dee, which, after its flood of last week, has had a respite of two days before the second phase of its storm experience set in. Communication was badly crippled tonight and accurate estimates of the loss were impossible.

Seventeen deaths reported Wednesday brought the flood toll to 32, but all rivers were falling, and something like normal conditions obtain in many of the section.

Eight additional deaths were reported from Bat Cove, a village in Henderson county on the Rocky Broad river, North Carolina; two from Volga, a small town in Buncombe county, North Carolina; four from Brevard, N. C., and three from the Hickory Nut Gap section of North Carolina.

In addition unverified reports said three lives were lost below Marshall, N. C., in the overturning of a boat.

The Catawba river was receding almost as fast as it rose two days before, when the great wall of water rushed down from the water sheds carrying bridges, factories and homes before it.

Several weeks will be required to restore normal train service on some of the railroads.

No reports have reached the outside world from Hickory or Lenoir, near the headwaters of the Catawba, since Sunday.

The first estimates of $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 damage probably will be increased.

Railroads apparently have suffered more than was at first realized. Some lines will have to be almost entirely rebuilt, while bridges were carried away at many points in all four States.

Passengers on trains marooned near Asheville were taken in fifty automobiles to the nearest cities to be properly fed and housed.

Many cotton mills will have to be entirely rebuilt and it will be months before these are put into operation.

Asheville is getting to something like normal with gangs of workmen busy rebuilding plants and clearing debris.

In Tennessee the flood waters were about statinary and were expected to begin falling later in the day.

Seventy-three deaths and at least nine persons missing and believed dead, is the flood toll in five southeastern states, according to Thursday's reports. News from isolated communities, cut off until now from communication with the outside world, adds almost hourly to the loss of life and property damage.

Reports Wednesday night from Mitchell county, in the extreme western part of North Carolina, brought the news that 11 lives were lost there and more than 100 homes were washed away in Sunday's disastrous floods. At Linville Falls, on the Yadkin river near Hickory, five persons were drowned, and near Taylorsville three children lost their lives. Seven bodies were taken from cabins floating on the Yadkin at Ronda Wednesday. Other deaths are reported at Bat Cave and Chimney Rock, N. C., at Belmont, N. C., at Greenville, S. C., near Columbia, and above Wilkesboro, on the Yadkin river.

There is a possibility that some of the reported deaths may be duplications, but when complete information is obtained from all parts of North Carolina, which are known to have suffered some from the storms and high waters, it is feared that the number of lives lost will be materially increased.

BODY OF DEAD MAN FOUND IN POND AT LOCK 12

The body of an unidentified white man was found dead floating in the pond at Lock 12, Wednesday morning, by employees of the Alabama Power Company. No marks of identification could be discovered on the body other than that he was about thirty-five years of age.

The body was buried near the Dam Thursday.

Later—The body was, after burial at Lock 12 cemetery, claimed by friends as that of Mr. John Langsford, and taken up and brought to Clanton and buried in the Clanton cemetery.

The deceased resided some 35 miles north of Lock 12 and met his death while out boating above Lock 5. He was seen to be carried over Lock 5 Dam and search was instigated down the Coosa river resulting as stated.

STATE DEPT. OF EDUCATION

Alabama Teachers Increasing Their Efficiency.

Quite a large number of Alabama teachers are spending their vacation period in better preparing themselves for their large field of labor. A large number of students are inattendance at the various educational institutions in the State than ever before. This is evidence of the fact that Alabama teachers are awakening to the opportunity and responsibility facing them.

The attendance to date and the gain over last year at the different normal schools and the departments of education in higher institutions of learning are as follows:

	1915	1916
Class A Normal Schools
Florence	294	320
Jacksonville	170	222
Livingston	201	255
Troy	167	256
Total	832	1053
Other Institutions
University of Alabama	735	774
Ala. Polytechnic Inst.	204	364
Howard College	34	117
Ala. Girls Tech. Inst.	0	286
Total	973	1541

As an encouragement to better prepare themselves the State Department of Educaion rules that a teacher may attend an institution of higher learning or a Clas A normal school in lieu of institute attendance if the institute is conducted in the county after the expiration of the teacher's contract in that county. As a further incentive, the State Board of Examiners rules that a certificate of any grade may be continued for a year if a six weeks' course of proffessional study be pursued at an institution of higher learning or in a Class A normal school, provided this work is done within a year preceding the date of expiration of the certificate.

In addition to the number of teachers in attendance at our educational institutions in Alabama we find an increased number in attendance in schools in other states during the summer. Such schools as Peabody College, University of Chicago, Columbia University, and University of Tennessee share their patronage.

The Constitution and the School Amendment

The Constitution of Alabama declares "All political power is inherent in the people and all free governments are founded on their authority and for their benefit. Therefore, they have at all times an infallible and indefeasible right to change their government as they deem expedient."

Provision was made by the framers of the Constitution for changing it as will appear from a reading of Sections 286 and 287. Those who think that our fundamental law is sacred, in the sense that it should never be changed at all, do not need to be disturbed by the Educational Amendment to be voted on in november 1916, for it in no way interferes or alters any act or section of our present document. It merely adds Article XIX which only operates to permit any county in the state that may desire is to later determine by vote of its qualified electors whether or not the county shall make any greater investments than it is now making for the education of its children.

Madison County Illiteracy Work—Summer 1915

In Madison county during the summer of 1915, 15 schools for adults were taught. The attendance in these schools numbered from 1 to 55, with a total of 203 pupils. There were 40 adults in that number who could neither read nor write, 30 of whom learned sufficiently well to be considered as removed from the colum of illiteracy.

Plans are now being perfected for work this summer. These plans are on a more extensive basis and will be far more reaching in fact. Interested citizens of Huntsville are soon to give a grand berbecue, the proceeds of which are to form a fund to supply books and other material for these adult schools.

A CORRECTION

In last week's issue of the Union-Banner in the article headed, "What About Names Signed to that Call," there was a mistake made purely on the part of the printer. The subheading, which read, "Mr. Honeycutt's Letter," after which followed the letter written by Mr. J. B. Northcutt to Judge Reynolds, of course should have read, "Mr. Northcutt's Letter;" and it was written that way by the writer of the article, but the printer just merely got the two names confused, and put "Honeycutt" when he should have put "Northcutt".

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION OF COOSA COUNTY MONDAY

The Republican Convention of Coosa County, which was postponed from May 9th to July 17, for the purpose of nominating a county Republican ticket, was held at Rockford Monday. A splendid turn-out was made by the Republicans of that county, and a full county ticket was nominated. Hon. Geo. H. Stewart was selected to head the list for Probate Judge.

The people of Coosa are showing considerable interest in the Republican party, and it is evident that they are going to stand the Democrats a hot race in November.

Judge Longshore of Shelby and Hon. L. H. Reynolds of Clanton were present and delivered some very incouraging and uplifting speeches, after which they received hearty acclaimation from all corners of the well filled courthouse.

CHILTON COUNTY COTTON CROP

Cotton report with one-half the acreage under water as conditions exist now in this section is written based on matters problematical to some extent, as to quantity expected.

Cotton growers planted in this section in the late spring sparingly, as to acreage, and fertilizers were used with due consideration as to cost. They did not, taken collectively, anticipate more than six-tenth of a crop as compared with the 1915 yield.

The boll weevil was feared, and as expected, this pest arrived on schedule time. War was and has been waged on the weevil with good result.

But, the unexpected has happened, and the hapening was the coming of the great storm, which lasted for five consecutive days, and then after twenty-four hours cessation the storm refeered to was followed in this section by a second storm, local as to Chilton county, which, in its severity, was disastrous.

To summarize and then write intelligently as to cotton conditions in this section the facts are, briefly stated, that the six-tenths of a crop expected will be reduced, and, where a grower expected six bales as compared to ten of the 1915 crop, should he get four bales as conditions exist now, he will do well. This estimate applies to Chilton county in the aggregate; some growers will do, probably, a little better, while others will not do so well.

DEPOSITORS OF THE CLANTON BANK ARE PAID 80 PER CENT

Depositors of the Clanton Bank, which failed recently were Tuesday paid 80 per cent of the amount of their deposits at the time the bank closed its doors. The affairs of the bank are now being liquidated by the State Banking Department and the checks to the depositors were issued Tuesday by Alex E. Walker.

Shortly after the failure of the Clanton Bank, charges of mismanagement were brought against Dr. E. A. Matthews, former cashier, and when placed on trial he was found guilty in two charges.

The president of the bank, W. I. Mullins, was tried on the same charge, was found not guilty by a jury. It is said that there are other indictments against Mr. Mullins, and that he will be tried on them at the next term of the court.

DEATH OF TWO VETERANS AT SOLDIERS HOME

Cannon conducted the funeral service which was attended by a large number of the inmates of the Home. ??

Veteran O. G. Armstrong, age 83 years died at the Soldiers Home on Monday and his remains were shipped to Dothan, Alabama, for interment. The deceased was a member of Company C. 4th Texas infantry regiment during the civil war.

Rev. J. A. Cannon, pastor of the Baptist church at Mountain Creek, has been conducting a religious meeting at his church which terminates on Wednesday on Wednesday, July 19th. Mr. Cannon's meeting was very successful and much good accomplished.

A LATE CROP OF SWEET POTATOES STILL POSSIBLE

Reports still come from Auburn from county domonstration agent and farmers that indicate the tremendous extent of the damage from the recent overflows. The Extension service has recently prepared and mailed in quantity to county agents and others a leaflet giving suggestions on the planting of quick maturing crops.

These leaflets will be sent free to any aplicants, or in quantity to any who desire to distribute them to their neighbors or tenants on application to the Extension Service. Letters to the same effect have been sent to all county newspapers and to other parties.

The list of crops mentioned in those letters and circulars should be supplemented by the planting as extensively as practicable of vine cuttings of sweet potatoes, according to the recommendation of Professor J. F. Duggar, Director of the Experiment Station and Extension Service.

There is till time for maturing a fair crop of sweet potatoes by planting in the latter half of July vine cuttings of the early varities, such as Triumph, Porto Rico, or Nancy Hall, and even later varities in the southern part of the State.

The chief difficulty in the way consists in securing for the farmers of the overflowed section a sufficient supply of cuttings. Newspapers are urged to invite local farmers, whoes sweet potato fields have not been subjected to overflow, to offer promptly through the press, or otherwise, liberal and definite numbers of vine cuttings to their less fortunate neighbors.

In case these cuttings must be sent some distances, or if for other reasons they must be cut a considerable time before planting, they will dry out less if as many of the leaves as practicable are removed, and if the vines are carefully wrapped in packages to decrease evaporation.
